Committee on Relations between Lenders and their Employees, Chairman, William Young, Philadelphia.

Committee on Retail Credit Mens Nat'l. Association, Chairman, Col. Clarence Hodson; G. W. Kehr, Secretary, Woll, Farrington and Madison, Committee Members.

There is still the Committee on Radio Publicity to be considered, pending the result of the ballot recently sent out by the National Secretary to members of the "A. A." Executive Committee, which contained, in substance, (1) desirability, (2) expense limitations.

CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES SUGGESTED

It is possible propositions will be made at the National Convention, to change the method of collecting national organization dues and to add to the existing standing committees, one on "Relations with State Associations" and another on "Unfair Competition."

MISSOURI

A preliminary meeting has been held to organize a state association of industrial lenders in the State of Missouri for the purposes similar to other existing state associations but particularly to coöperate with other agencies bent upon improving small loan conditions in that state.

It is expected that another meeting will be held the latter part of September when officers will be elected and a constitution and by-laws adopted.

Missouri is a great and big state with a number of important cities and industries. Its needs for small loan service is no less than elsewhere. The wonder is that its legislators have been so slow to adopt the legislation which has proved so effective in some twenty other states. The slogan now is: "Missouri for the Uniform Small Loan Law in 1925."

MAINE AND NEW HAMPSHIRE

Messrs. Mueller, Watts, Hodson, Kehr, Young and Wick have been working for some time to arouse interest in the organization of state associations in Maine and New Hampshire and plans are now made which if successful will result in two more state associations to be added to the roll of regulated states.

Messrs. Young and Wick have volunteered to do some personal missionary work on the ground which is to be followed by organization meetings early in September which Messrs. Mueller and Watts will attend for the purpose of starting these two babies on the right track under proper guidance.

GEORGIA

The Fourth Annual Meeting of the Georgia Lenders Association, was held in the Blue Room of the Ansley Hotel, Atlanta, Ga., at one p. m., June 25, 1924.

A very satisfying luncheon was served to ten members and two guests. Immediately after luncheon, Chairman Madison called the meeting to order and addressed the meeting, reviewing the year's work and progress of the Association.

Chairman Madison's address follows:

Three years ago the Georgia Industrial Lenders Asso. was formed with the ultimate object in view of protecting the borrower against excessive rates, and for the mutual benefit of those engaged in the legitimate field. Our Asso. has weathered several storms and it is indeed a delight to me, as Chairman of this Asso. since the beginning, to see all of the old faithful still in the ranks, with a few new faces added, and I greet you all as brothers banded together not only for our own protection, but for the benefit of the public at large. The making of small loans to-day to about 85% of the American people has truly become an economic factor in the civitan lives of all industrial centers, and year by year in all other lines of endeavor they are beginning to realize that the Industrial Lenders are serving a purpose and filling a want or need the same as other activities.

As time goes by we are awakened to the many opportunities and duties involved upon us. I do not think any of us were far seeing enough at the time of the organization of this Asso. to forsee that in the short space of three years it has become necessary to add another plank to our preamble, namely:—"to protect the members thereof from the insidious machinations of money lenders operating under a different banner than ours." And so we find that our responsibilities are enlarging, and we ought to know that only through friendly and earnest association are we able to combat, with any measure of success, with the obstacles arising.

At our National Convention, held in Louisville, Ky., last year, it was advocated that we reduce the National Asso. dues from $100 to $10 per year, and one of the main arguments advanced for the reduction was that we had some $30,000 odd in the treasury and they did not know what to do with all the money. I am glad to say it was voted down and they collect $100 per member per year. But they found out what to do with the $30,000, and they are looking for more right now, and the National Secretary has sent out a call asking each of us to pay our last half years dues right now, instead of waiting until Aug. 1st, when they are due, (and let me say here that I do not believe there is a man present but what will cheerfully accede to the National Secretary's request.)

What became of this $30,000 that we did not know what to do with last Sept? An attack was made upon the 3½% lenders in several states of the Union, and the money was all used for legitimate purposes, for attorneys fees, and in legislative matters, to protect ourselves from just what I suggested in the extra plank I would incorporate in our platform.

To-day, the very day we selected for our fourth annual meeting, the Georgia Legislature (an annual affair with Georgians) convenes. How do we know but that at this session the foes from without and the enemies from within will introduce bills which will be a menace to our business, and, gentlemen, it behooves every one of us to stick together, and to keep our ears to the ground to hear the approach of the enemy. We may be called upon before the summer is over to donate, and to donate handsomely, to our Asso. chest, and let every man be ready and willing to come across without a grumble. This is your business, not mine, and it is up to you to see that you look after your business. Just what has happened in several states the past year ought to be a warning to each of us to be prepared to fight to the last ditch, and so, gentlemen, if anything should happen that it would take some money to protect ourselves, let us at least try to be cheerful in the giving, and to realize that it is a problem to meet squarely and fairly.

Regarding the better understanding between loan managers and credit managers at large, I believe your Asso. has been successful in bringing about a better understanding between all credit managers, to the point in view that all of us can more readily get information from any credit manager in Atlanta than heretofore. The credit managers have been made to realize that they themselves will reap much more benefit by co-operating with the loan agencies in the exchange of credit experiences, and they now realize that the hundreds of thousands of dollars which are loaned out by the local loan agencies find their way into their cash tills and help them to have more A-1 customers on their books because of the very fact that there are reputable loan agencies in the community.

When we step out of our own little place and commence to look at our business from the other fellow's view, thats when we begin to find out something about ourselves. This we discovered when we met with the associated retail credit men of Atlanta, to promulgate a better understanding among all credit managers. We found out that it was really necessary in order to perfect an efficient credit exchange with the other credit houses of Atlanta, that we were almost duty bound to form among the different classifications of the loan business in Atlanta an exchange bureau, whereby we would know to what extent a man was doubled up. As soon as we were aware of this fact, your secretary and I got busy on the proposition of a credit bureau, whereby there would be a checking up of all applicants for a loan, whether new or a renewal, among all three classifications of lenders, namely 3½%, the so-called Morris Plan and the salary buyers. By doing this clearing among ourselves we would then be in a position to properly co-operate with the credit managers of Atlanta in the exchange of credit experience. We have met, we believe, with a marked degree of success in bringing about this bureau, and our Secretary has with him to-day membership blanks for a tentative organization, and I trust every one present will sign up and put his shoulder to the wheel and help out. Mr. Patterson, of the 8% loan companies, assures us that he can get most of his class to join. The salary buyers have deferred joining until after the Legislature adjourns. Whatever their reason for the delay remains to be seen, and all we can do is to draw upon our imaginations. The merchant does not give a picayune whether the man he is trying to get information on owes us, the Morris Plan or the salary buyer, as he makes no distinction, but he does care as to how heavily he is involved, and unless all the different classes of loan agencies clear, we cannot expect to perfect an exchange of credit experiences with ourselves or anybody else. Fellows, I want you to sign on the dotted line. Lets get this started and the rest will be glad to come in eventually. It will be the biggest thing that has ever happened anywhere for the promotion of good feeling and fellowship, not only among the loan men, but with the other credit managers as well.

In starting out on the fourth year of our Asso. let every man resolve to do his part, and if any member of this Asso. thinks that the officers are running it for their own benefit, just let him offer himself for any one of the offices which will be voted upon to-day, and he will not be disappointed. Lets lay aside skepticism, and distrust and envy. Lets be big enough men to work out our own salvation, to overlook petty grievances, and to do the right thing at the right time.

Minutes of the last previous meeting were read. It was moved by Mr. Snyder, properly seconded, that they be approved as read. Roll call was dispensed with by order of the Chairman.

Report of Standing Committee

The Secretary reported Fifty-Four Dollars Forty-Nine Cents ($54.49) for the treasury, with all bills to date paid.

Nomination and Election of Officers

For the nominating committee Mr. Adair offered the same officers and executive committee as of the past year: Mr. A. B. Madison, Chairman; Mr. Henry Sharp, Vice Chairman; Mr. E. M. Steimle, Secretary & Treasurer.

The Executive Committee: Mr. A. B. Madison, Mr. Henry Sharp, Mr. E. M. Steimle, Mr. F. B. Snyder, Mr. B. L. Lassiter.

Mr. Steimle was also nominated as a delegate to attend the National Convention to be held in Baltimore September 24th to September 27th, 1924, and that the Association allow him $125.00 for expenses. Upon motion of Mr. Davis, seconded by Mr. Sharp, all nominations were closed, one ballot cast, and nominees elected unanimously.

Report of Publicity Committee

Mr. Steimle reported that he was able through Mr. Turner, Manager of the Guarantee Loan Company, of Savannah, to have published in both Savannah papers the National Publicity Articles. The Atlanta papers promised to publish but did not. Mr. Parks Rusk, former star Constitution reporter, but now connected with the Biltmore as publicity man, was our guest. He was called upon for a few remarks regarding newspaper publicity. He stated in part that the main reason why newspapers did not publish most articles submitted to them was because they did not have time to rewrite the article sent them, that they could not allot the space for the article as originally written, and that there was such a demand for space for this publicity matter that they found it necessary to turn down at least two thirds of the articles sent them. He stated further that the papers will publish an article of reasonable length if boiled down and the salient facts set forth. Upon motion of Mr. Adair, duly seconded, Mr. Rusk was engaged as the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association's press agent, and at the discretion of the Secretary to have published such notices of meetings as he deemed advisable, at a nominal cost of Five Dollars ($5.00) for three advance notices and Ten Dollars ($10.00) for three past tense notices, and that Mr. Rusk furnish the Secretary with three clippings of each notice.

The Secretary reported some correspondence from National Secretary Kehr relative to National Association dues. After it was fully explained by the Secretary that the National Association was asking for August 1st dues to be paid a month in advance, as the National treasury was almost depleted due to heavy demands for necessary purposes, it was agreed by all members to immediately send their checks for August 1st to February 1st dues. (I wish to say that all National dues have been paid.)

New Business

Mr. Steimle suggested that the Association publicity ads which have been appearing in the three Atlanta daily papers three and four times each month, be partially or fully discontinued, and in lieu of this a standing ad of five inches, double column, appear daily in the Fulton County Daily Report, a legal and authorized publication of all court cases and legal matters, bankruptcies, etc., published each day for the benefit of the courts, lawyers and business men. Mr. Steimle went on to say that he felt that an ad in this paper would reach a greater number of men of the type who, if educated along the lines of industrial loans and the Act under which we do business, would be more beneficial to the industrial lenders, especially so among the judges and lawyers who no doubt after seeing our publicity ad daily would begin to investigate and make inquiry. It was moved by Mr. Adair, seconded by Mr. Sharp, that the Chair appoint a Special Publicity Committee and decide definitely on the matter. The Chair appointed Mr. Steimle, Mr. Lassiter and Mr. Sharp. The contemplated Lenders Bureau, to be handled by the Credit Service Exchange, was discussed at some length. Chairman Madison emphasized the fact that such an exchange must be brought about, and immediately, if the industrial loan business is to be conducted on a business-like basis, and stated further that it was impossible to continue in business without heavy losses and at the same time protect our customers. It was the consensus of opinion that we should have a clearing house, but we did not fully agree to the rules and regulations of the clearing house as set forth. The matter of charging a commission for the collection of foreign accounts was discussed. After the Secretary read some correspondence relative to the matter from the National Secretary each member present stated that they made no charge for making foreign collections, whether the companies for whom they were collecting were members of the National Association or not.

The matter of City License was next taken up. Some of our members were informed by the eight per cent lenders that the Industrial Banks City License had been cut by the City Council from Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00) per year to One Hundred Twenty Dollars ($120.00) per year, but that it did not apply to the three and a half per cent industrial lenders. There also appeared an article in the Atlanta Journal to the effect that the Industrial Banks had had their City License cut from Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00) to One Hundred Twenty Dollars ($120.00.) It was moved by Mr. Davis, duly seconded, that Mr. Madison and Mr. Steimle look into the matter.

There being no further business, after being properly moved and seconded, the meeting adjourned. The Hines bill purporting to reduce the rate of the Georgia law to 2½ per cent per month on small loans was reported from the Committee to which it was referred with an unfavorable recommendation and died with the adjournment of the legislature about the middle of this month.

E. M. Steimle,
Secretary.

OHIO

In reply to your inquiry about the Ohio Loan Association meeting at Cedar Point last month, beg to say that Mr. Anderson, our Secy., continued his vacation after the convention adjourned, by going on to Canada on an automobile trip. Therefore I suppose it is up to me to give you a short report of the high spots of this convention.

We were fortunate this year in having as our special guest, Congressman Begg of Sandusky, Ohio, as one of our speakers. He certainly gave us one of the best patriotic speeches any of us have had occasion to listen to in many years. Another guest was Mr. Cyrus H. Locher, state director of commerce, who is the chief over the Securities Division and consequently our supreme boss. Mr. Locher gave us a talk for about 30 minutes that was surely a pleasure to hear. He took occasion to remark that during the past year no complaint had been lodged with the department against any member of our association. He further said that most complaints lodged with his department against violators of the Lloyd Act came through our association and that in every instance such complaints were justified by the facts. He further said that the department found better results could be obtained by notifying violators to appear before the department on a certain day, rather than by sending investigators to the offices of such parties. His speech throughout was instructive and made in the spirit of cooperation with our association.

A code of ethics, prescribing a line of business conduct, was adopted after much consideration and discussion. This code will be printed in pamphlet form and copies will be distributed not only to members of our association but also to the secretaries of other associations. The executive committee was also instructed to employ legal assistance in the preparation of forms, for use in Ohio. Steps will be taken at an early date to gather data for this work and we hope to have these forms in shape to submit to the executive committee for approval.

July 24th was devoted to the managers meeting under the leadership of M. Austin Potter, of Lima, Ohio. All the managers participated in the discussions of this meeting. It was the best attended and most interesting meeting of this character our association has ever held.

We have the very great pleasure of having Dr. Mueller, chairman of the Nat. Assn., present at this meeting. A resolution was passed authorizing the executive committee to appoint five delegates to the Nat. convention to be held at Baltimore. W. W. Taylor of Sandusky, Vice President of the Nat. Assn., representing Ohio, was re-elected and directed to accept the invitation of Nat. Secy. Kehr to come early to the convention and assist with the preliminaries and also to act as one of the reception committee representing Ohio. The present executive committee and officers were re-elected for the ensuing year. Five new members were elected.

J. H. Dyer.

To Judge Dyer's account of the meeting we are pleased to add Secretary Anderson's observations.

I am sending you an account of the Tenth Annual Convention of The Ohio Loan Association at my first opportunity after arriving at my office in the hope that it may reach you in time for the August "News."

This convention, marking as it did the tenth convocation, was an especially interesting one, and like many that have gone before, we who had it in charge wondered if we had enough material to fill up three days, but after we got under way we wondered how we were going to make three days suffice for all the material we had.

The convention was opened with a get together luncheon in the main dining room of the Hotel Breakers, which was attended by about seventy members and their families and of guests, after which we repaired to the convention hall, where we were extended a warm welcome by Mr. J. F. Starkey, Traffic Manager of The Lake Shore Electric Railway Company. He interspersed his remarks with some good stories, and while we always feel at home at Cedar Point, yet his words of welcome made us feel doubly so.

The Ohio Association has pioneered in many respects, and this thing was no exception to the rule when Thomas R. Schoonover of Lima, Ohio, presented a Code of Ethics for the government of our body and our relations with each other, with customers and with employees. Copies were distributed this time and final action withheld until Friday afternoon, when with several changes and amendments, it was unanimously adopted.

This Code of Ethics is now in process of printing and will be presented in an attractive booklet form, which will also contain a complete list of the Ohio Loan Association members alphabetically arranged and classified under the different cities of the state.

We followed again this year our usual custom of devoting the better part of one day to the Managers' session, which this year was in charge of M. Austin Potter of The Lima Loan Company at Lima, Ohio. The Managers' session was a most interesting one and at times brought forth most spirited debate on the various questions of policy under discussion.

The success of this portion of the program reflected the painstaking efforts which Mr. Potter had put forth in the selection of his subjects and their assignment to various members, and he is to be congratulated upon his ability.

On Thursday afternoon we were signally honored by being addressed by the Hon. James T. Begg, member of Congress from the Thirteenth Ohio District, on the subject of "Modern Tendencies in Politics."

Seldom, if ever, has it been our pleasure to hear such a striking American speech filled from beginning to end with the quintessence of common sense.

Congressman Begg is one of those rare politicians who believes what he says and has the courage to say it. It is commonly rumored in Ohio that Mr. Begg is on his way to the Governor's chair or a seat in the United States Senate, and in either event we predict that he will serve the good old state of Ohio with honor and distinction.

Hon. Cyrus Locher, Head of the Department of Commerce of the State of Ohio, under which department the Lloyd Act is regulated, appeared before us on Friday and delivered an address touching the relation of our business with the public and with the department.

Among other things he made the flattering statement that no complaints had come to them against any licensee in the State of Ohio who was a member of The Ohio Loan Association.

He stressed the point that after all many of our loans are made purely on a moral risk and brought out by apt illustration the great opportunity that lies before us to assist others in realizing the importance and value of good credit.

The Executive Committee was authorized to appoint five delegates to the National Convention to be held at Baltimore, Maryland.

We want to take this opportunity to thank Bill Taylor and Ray Zimmerman of Sandusky for their splendid assistance and cooperation in perfecting the final arrangements for the convention program, and we must not forget that Mrs. Tom Carroll of Akron was unanimously selected as the most popular lady. The contest for preferment as the most handsome sheik was a spirited one, but when the ballots had all been counted it was found that Col. D. H. Pond had won in a walk. Some of the disappointed contestants had the audacity to allege that the Colonel had been securing votes by means otherwise than on his merits.

As soon as the Code of Ethics is ready for distribution we would be glad to mail copies to any of the readers of the "NEWS" who may wish same.

J. FRED ANDERSON,

The question of dues of the Citizens Loan and Investment Company of Williamsport, was at this time considered and on recommendation of Mr. Hart, the matter was referred to the Chair and himself as a Special Committee to call upon this company.

The Chair reported on the continued effort of the Banking Department to prosecute the illegal lenders in Philadelphia. The cases are now pending before the Grand Jury.

Mr. Kehr reported on the Carroll case at Harrisburg, that is now on the trial list for October. On motion of Mr Hart, seconded by Mr. Roberts the Opinion of Deputy Attorney General, J. W. Brown, of June 4, 1924, was ordered spread on the minutes of this meeting.

June 4, 1924.

"Mr. G. H. Orth,
Chief, Bureau of Private Banks,
Harrisburg, Pa.

"Dear Sir:

"You have asked to be advised if companies licensed under the Act of June 17, 1915, P. L. 1012, known as the Small Loan Act, have the right to charge the rate interest prescribed in said Act on judgments which have been entered of record.

"If the interest to be charged is written in the judgment there is no reason why the Company, the holder of the judgment, should not collect the amount so written, if it does not exceed the amount allowed by the Act. The Legislature has fixed the rate of interest which may be charged by the Company, and this rate applies without any distinction as to the character of notes taken by the Company, whether they be plain promissory notes, judgment notes, or whether such judgments be entered of record.

"The question of the right to charge the interest allowed by the Act has been definitely decided by our Supreme Court in Commonwealth v. Puder, 261 Pa., 129, wherein the Court held:

"'The matter of fixing the maximum amount to be charged for the use of money rests primarily in the discretion of the Legislature and is within the police power of the State: Griffiths v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563. Statutes passed at various times by our State Legislature recognize certain business to be in a separate class and authorize as to them a departure from the regular rate of interest fixed by the general law'

"I therefore advise you that the Small Loan Companies have the right to charge the rate of interest allowed by the Act on judgments which have been entered of record.

"Yours very truly,
(SIGNED) J. W. BROWN,
"Deputy Attorney General."

The Chair has asked the attendance at the Baltimore Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association in September, of every member and every member's business associate, in order that the splendid record of Pennsylvania may be upheld. It is the Chair's hope that we may by our own quality and quantity bring back to Pennsylvania again the largest percentage of members in attendance cup, which we have had the honor of winning on one previous occasion.

On inquiry from National Secretary Kehr, on what has been the custom of the Pennsylvania I. L. Association members, are: charge for collection on out-of-town accounts, it was unanimously proven by testimony of Messrs. Young, Wick, O'Neill, Kehr, Holloway and others, that no charge is being made for this service by our members.

On motion of Mr. Hart, seconded by Mrs. Schmidt, the following members were unanimously elected to membership—the International Loan and Finance Company, 1015 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia; Altoona Loan Association, 1003 Fifth Avenue, Altoona, and the Sun Finance Company, 420 Fayette Title and Trust Building, Uniontown.

CHASING SLOWS
Difficulties That Outside Man Has To Contend With

A. POMFRET, NATIONAL LOAN CO.,
PAWTUCKET

To the average employer or offic manager, the outside man or investigator is given credit with carrying ou his work in routine fashion; having number of applications to look up an a number of cards each day. There ar a number of managers who rarely giv this position or the man who holds it due consideration. They apparentl think that any school boy with averag mentality who can read and write Englis can take a dozen cards and work them and he often seems to forget those moments when, as an outside man, his ow mental ability was taxed to capacity using every effort in being an efficien gear in the office machinery where h was employed.

A type very often met is the slow wh responds to your knock and greets yo with the index finger to her lips almos commanding you to refrain from speaking, saying she has company and statin that she will positively appear at th office the following day; which o course the alert agent knows her purpose is to evade the object of his call but in his determination to make his cal effective, he induces the party to ste into the hall convincing her that hi mission is one of much importance an a great expense to the office, making summary of the valuable time and th high rate of carfare used when makin this call due to her negligence. Expres the full weight of your duty as an outside man and condemn her carelessnes in strong clear words so that in futur calls, if necessary, they will not be treate in lightweight fashion as your first cal should carry enough weight to impres her with the importance of the matter

This I have found to be a successfu method often making a good accoun out of a constant slow.

Another type of slow is the one wh is very convincing in promises but exceptionally poor in fulfilling them. I this case I have found it necessary t make a threat of some sort and ofte this will be ignored but I find it very effective to call at their place of employment and following up in this manne convinces them there is a foundatio to your threat and usually they wil respond with greater promptness.

We are now and then confronted with the so-called "hard boiled" type, usually the male sex with perhaps a drink o two and feeling in a nasty mood. He defies the agent in a boisterous manne and in terms not altogether gentlemanly. However, the agent's physical strength is often taxed to excess after covering many miles afoot and he realizes that hospital bills are rather high and refrains from entering in physical combat. This type may be subdued by speaking in a placating manner of something which may appeal to him and then follow up by forcing upon him the real object of your call, for if one starts out determined to make the first call effective it is more efficient to both office and agent if a few extra minutes are spent at a house leaving your party with the impression that you don't want to find it necessary to make a second call.

RE: ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S LOAN ASSN.

Dear Mr. Kehr,

Here is a clipping from he New York Times of July 29, which ought to be published, and the thing should be answered besides in the Lenders News. We know there is a great demand for loans that is unsupplied, and the experiment of St. Bartholomew P. E. Church has shown that the loan business cannot be conducted along parish or denominational lines, or as a semi charity service. The lending of money is a business to be conducted upon strictly business principles.

After the article is published, copy should be sent to the rector and manager of the loan association.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HAS NO NEEDY NOW

Park Avenue Church Discontinues Its Benevolent Society and Its Loan Association

BOTH OF LONG STANDING

Improved Condition of Congregation's Former Charges Credited in Part to Prohibition

Because there are so few needy persons among the 3,716 communicants of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church, Park Avenue and Fiftieth Street, and its chapels, both its Benevolent Society, which has been in existence thirty years, and its Loan Association, which has been in operation twenty-eight years, will be discontinued.

This announcement was made in the Year Book for 1924, copies of which were distributed at the door of the church last Sunday as worshipers left.

Under "The Loan Association" Dr. Parks wrote in part:

"What is true of the Benevolent Society is also true of the Loan Association. This was started at a time when numbers of people found it impossible to meet some unexpected economic crisis and were without the collateral which would enable them to borrow from the banks. Through a chattel mortgage which enabled the borrower to retain his furniture and yet receive a temporary loan, numbers of people such as nurses, school teachers, clerks, and even professional men found temporary relief.

"But the conditions which once made the Loan Association a necessity have changed. The 'loan sharks' have been driven out of business; new laws have been passed to curb the rapacity of money lenders; other agencies have arisen to relieve temporary poverty. And above all the closing of the saloons and the increase in wages have so swollen the deposits in the savings banks that those who formerly were relieved by the Loan Association are now independent.

"On account of loans outstanding this work will continue until the end of the fiscal year, but then the vestry has decided that it shall be closed and the capital used for other purposes connected with the parish house."

Both of the organizations now discontinued were founded by the late Bishop D. H. Greer when he was rector of St. Bartholomew's.

NATIONAL PUBLICITY

New York, July—Fifty-four men of an average 100 at the age of 65 are dependent upon friends or relief agencies, according to a bulletin issued to-day by the American Industrial Lenders Association, which quotes Herbert K. Twitchell, President of Seamen's Bank for Savings, New York. Mr. Twitchell said his figures were based on a government report of a record of 100 average men taken forty years later.

Of these 100 the record would show 36 dead, 1 rich, 3 comfortably well off, 6 earning a living, and the rest dependent.

That more than four-fifths of those living at 65 out of every 100 able-bodied men starting at 25 are dependent upon others, says the bulletin, is an evidence of the need for a fair and adequate system of industrial financing, since the dependence of these men in later life is in many cases the cumulative result of their failure in earlier years to finance themselves in emergencies when such financing would have had a beneficial effect on their futures.

The average of dependents, the bulletin asserts, would be materially reduced if the encouragement of legitimate industrial lending, that is the lending of sums not in excess of $300 on non-fluid security or no security, were nation-wide. For it is the observation of sociologists that the great majority of necessitous borrowers are self-respecting and will not accept charity except as a last resort when they have been unable to negotiate loans on fair terms.

In the score of states where industrial lending has been legalized and put on a basis of fairness to both lenders and borrower, the bulletin points out, the situation of the borrower has been greatly improved, since he is protected from the exaction of unreasonable interest charges, and it will be found that in those states the number of those dependant on friends or other agencies for their financing is smaller than in communities where no legislation exists to curb the extortionate lender.

Salient Facts About Industrial Lending

Number of licensed lenders, 420.

Estimated annual total of loans, $150,000,000.

Average amount of small loan, $100.

Estimated number of potential borrowers, in regulated territory, 10,000,000.

Estimated number of actual borrowers, 2,000,000.

Philadelphia, Aug. 2.—In a plea for the relief of the "industrial credit famine" which he said is prevalent over a large area of the country, Charles G. Mueller, National Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders' Association, recently made public figures bearing on the small loan business. This "credit famine," Mr. Mueller said, is of vital concern not only to the great mass of the population who are the direct sufferers, but also to the producing and merchandizing interests whose consuming public are impaired in their buying power by lack of an adequate financing system.

Citing statistics to show that no more than 8 per cent of our population have checking accounts at banks, and that approximately less than 5 per cent of those with checking accounts have collateral enabling them to borrow at banks, Mr. Mueller said that the only recourse open to this large percentage in their credit needs is to industrial lenders, of whom there are two classes, the outlaw lender whose interest rates are exorbitant, and the licensed broker who lends on non-fluid security or no security at all at interest rates fixed by law.

Because the number of licensed lenders is necessarily limited to those States where lending is regulated, he stated, the only possible relief for the "credit famine" lies in an extension of adequate legislation for the regulation of industrial lending, as the capital of reputable men will not be attracted to those communities where the business is not regulated.

The importance of an adequate fiscal system for supplying this credit, said the statement, could be better appreciated by an understanding of the small loan business, its special province, and the clientele it serves. A small loan, in the meaning of the law, is one not in excess of $300 to any one borrower, the legal interest rate for which is higher than the interest rate on a bank loan. The function of the small loan broker is to finance those who do not possess the collateral which will enable them to borrow from banks, and this financing is done from the capital of the lender, not from the funds of depositors as in the case of banks. The small loan clientele is made up of wage earners, small salaried workers and persons of limited incomes.

Money lending is regulated by law in eighteen States, in which lenders are licensed and the maximum interest rates which they may charge for loans are fixed. These States are: Arizona, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah and Virginia. The combined populations of these States in 1923 was estimated at about 52,000,000, being a little less than half the estimated population of 112,000,000 of the entire country.

In these eighteen States the credit needs of the small loan clientele are served by some 420 licensed lenders, whose combined capital approximates $100,000,000, and whose annual loans approximated $150,000,000, the average loan being about $100. The number of potential borrowers may be estimated at 10,000,000, of whom there are probably about 2,000,000 actual borrowers.

This estimate is based on an adult population in these States of about 31,000,000, of whom about 37 per cent are receiving annual incomes, about 86 per cent of whom are receiving incomes not to exceed $2,000 annually. Of course the capital invested in the small loan business even in States where lending is regulated is inadequate to serve the needs of the whole number of potential borrowers, and as the total annual loans in regulated territory approximates $150,000 000 in average amounts of $100, it will be seen that the average number of borrowers served totals 1,500,000. Allowing for loans under the average, the total number of borrowers may be estimated at 2,000,000.

Mr. Mueller used the report of a typical month's business of a large lending concern to indicate the class of persons constituting the body of necessitous borrowers and the principal causes of their necessities. From this it was shown that of 2,444 borrowers the classification was: civil servants (Federal, State and city) 867; commercial (clerks, secretaries and stenographers, bookkeepers and accountants, salesmen, agents, managers, proprietors and partners) 912; wage earners (printing trades, factory workers, tailors, machinists, inspectors, foremen, artisans, telegraph operators, and conductors) 380; professions (teachers, doctors and dentists, and writers) 48; miscellaneous, 237.

While the impelling causes for seeking small loans are legion, Mr. Mueller's statement points out that the principal causes may be grouped under these five heads: sickness, deaths, to buy a home or to meet interest or principal on mortgages, to advance the situation of borrower's family, and for use in business.—The Roanoke, World News, Aug. 2, 1924.

EASY CREDIT HAS RAISED WORKERS' LIVING STANDARDS

Many Have Expensive Homes and Automobiles and Live Beyond Their Means on Borrowed Money

"I don't see how they do it," says Mrs. Simpson to Mrs. Johnson, as their neighbors, the Smiths, ride off for the day in their new car. Mrs. Simpson is certain the Smiths have no money, yet they have a house, a piano, a good radio receiver and a shiny, smooth-running automobile. Mrs. Smith, moreover, has a fur coat, writes "The Industrial Digest."

There are millions of people like the Smiths who have almost everything money can buy without having the money. The head of a large selling organization recently expressed astonishment at the manner in which his salesmen live.

"They have good homes in attractive neighborhoods," he said, "they drive big cars and their families wear expensive clothes. You'd think they were men of prosperity, but I'm sure they haven't inherited fortunes and they can't have saved enough out of their earnings to pay for what they own. They must all be pretty deeply in debt."

That's the answer—they are in debt. They have bought the things they own by mortgaging their future incomes. The Smith house was bought with a small cash payment, a first mortgage, and a heavy second mortgage to be amortized out of income. They owe on the furniture, the car, the piano, the radio and Mrs. Smith's fur coat. If they have been forced recently to make an unexpected heavy expenditure they may also be in debt to some small-loan association or Morris Plan bank.

Mr. Smith and the extravagant salesmen carry these debts and gradually pay them off out of what they earn. They make good money—enough to take care of their debts and pay ordinary living expenses, if they are careful and stand well with the grocer. As long as this continues they will be able to incur new debts as they pay off the old.

It is impossible to say how many people live like this to-day, but their number must be greater than ever. Standards of living have been greatly raised among wage earners and salaried people. The output of articles such as used to be called luxuries—automobiles as a conspicuous example—is increased. Credit is cheap and is being extended to classes of people who formerly had none.

The effect of the expansion of retail credit is to enable people to purchase and enjoy property without owning it outright. In many cases, by the time the last payment is made on an article bought on time the article has been completely used up. A family accustomed to buying on the instalment plan can consider the payment of the instalments and interest as part of its regular living expenses and as long as its income continues it can remain in debt.—The N. Y. Herald Tribune, July 13, 1924.

CITE NEED FOR CREDIT SYSTEM FOR SMALL SALARIED EMPLOYES

An annual shopping bill of thirty-five billion dollars for American households was cited in a bulletin issued yesterday by the American Industrial Lenders Association indicating the necessity for a credit system for wage earners and small salaried workers comparable to the banking system which serves the more prosperous element of the nation. The greater part of this trade volume, the bulletin points out, is expended for necessities by the average man and woman composing the bulk of the consuming class.

The greater part of this $35,000,000,000 annual retail trade is done by that class of citizens who have an annual income not to exceed $2,000, the bulletin states, and whatever financing they receive over and above their incomes is done by industrial lenders. By industrial lenders the bulletin explains, is meant those who lend in amounts not to exceed $300 to any one person, on non-fluid security, or no security. These small borrowers, for the most part, are wage earners engaged in industrial pursuits or persons on small salaries.

"That an adequate nation-wide system of small loans is important," the bulletin states, "not alone to the consumer, but to the retail merchant also, is shown by comparative estimates of the total number of all business concerns in the United States. More than one and three-fourths of all business concerns are retail, and the bulk of their business is done with consumers whose annual incomes are not in excess of $2,000, and whose credit needs are most urgent."

The bulletin calls this a powerful argument for the extension of legislation for the regulation of industrial lending which would provide a system of industrial credit free of the exploitation of borrowers that now characterizes industrial lending in states where the business is unregulated.

The importance of providing a system of financing on equitable terms the masses making up this great buying power has been recognized by eighteen states.—Portsmouth, Va., Star, July 19, 1924.

ALL ABOARD FOR THE CONVENTION

Everything is ready for the big annual gathering which takes place at Baltimore September 24th to 27th, with headquarters at the Southern Hotel. This is our Tenth Annual National Convention and, according to prospects, it will eclipse all its predecessors in every way. The attendance promises to be big and the program extraordinary. This is the one occasion in the year when industrial bankers from all over the country renew old friendships and make new friends—the time when they discuss the problems, past and future, in the industrial loan field, and seek ways and means of bettering their service to the public. The live wires with their wives and sweethearts will be there because it means so much to them. Be sure to come early and register on your arrival.

WELCOME MAINE

After much time and effort we are pleased to announce the Maine Industrial Lenders Association was organized in Portland at the Columbia Hotel, Sept. 8th. Dr. Mueller's telegram following tells the story in a few words:

Portland, Me.,
Sept. 9, 1924.

Maine State Association formed last night with thirteen members out of seventeen licensees. All pledged to National Association memberships. Wick and Young did splendid preliminary work and are entitled to great credit for success. Newspaper account being sent by mail. Article appears in heretofore hostile press. Accept congratulations.

Charles G. Mueller.

Here is what the Portland Press Herald had to say about the event in its September 9th issue:

LENDERS ASSOCIATION FORMED IN MAINE

Portland, Lewistown and Bangor Men Comprise Charter Membership

The Maine Industrial Lenders Association was formed at the Columbia Hotel last night.

The charter membership of the association is made up of the following men: Wesley M. Snow, George A. Currier, M. A. Sulkowitch, E. E. Waterman, M. M. Bernstein and Joseph S. Bernstern, all of Portland, Edward M. Sinall, Harry S. Crosby and F. H. Waterhouse of Lewiston, Charles J. Bernstein of Bangor, and three other individuals represented by proxy.

THE LIBRARY OF THE SEP 25 1924 UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Charles G. Mueller of Philadelphia, chairman of the American Industrial Lenders Association, was the speaker of the evening and talked to the gathering on the advantages of an association in the work of elevating the industrial loan business.

William Young and Arthur L. Wick, of Philadelphia, who have been promoting the Maine association for the past week, also were present, and outlined the purposes of the association as to "elevate the loan business in general and to drive out the so-called loan shark."

The association is organized to render a similar loan service to the working man as the banks render to the merchant and the business man.

Officers elected: Chairman, W. M. Snow, Portland; secretary, H. S. Crosby, Lewiston. Mr. Snow was elected a delegate to the National Convention and will probably attend with Mrs. Snow. Chas. J. Bernstein, Bangor, was elected alternate. Geo. A. Currier, of Portland, is also expected to be among those answering the roll call from Maine and possibly others. We are pleased to report that the meeting was enthusiastic, and augurs well for the future of the small loan business in the State "way down East."

We extend to all who had a part in this success the hearty congratulations of the entire A. I. L. A. membership, and hope to record in these columns in the future more of the activities of the new baby state association. Welcome to you members from Maine. Let's get acquainted in Baltimore, Sept. 24th to 27th.

Other officers of the Association are Chas. J. Bernstein, vice-chairman, Bangor and M. A. Sulkowitch, treasurer, Portland. In addition to the officers Geo. A. Currier, E. L. Waterman, Portland, and Edw. M. Sirrell. Lewiston, form the executive committee of seven members.

POSSIBLE CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES

Suggestions have been made which, if adopted at the National Convention, would change the present method of collecting dues for the National Association and enlarge the present executive committee by including some of the chairmen of the new special committees appointed by National Chairman Mueller.

These committees and the chairmen thereof were announced in our August issue.

THE NEED OF ADEQUATE SMALL LOAN LEGISLATION

By Walter S. Hilborn, Acting Director of the Division of Remedial Loan, Russell Sage Foundation, before the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks, Buffalo, N. Y., July 23, 1924.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for me this is a memorable occasion. It is the first time that I know of that the advocates of small loan legislation have had the opportunity to meet face to face the public officials who have it in their care, under their guidance, and are responsible for the success of small loan legislation; for small loan legislation, say what you will, has come to stay, and the supervision of small loan business is almost everywhere entrusted to the banking department, which is the one department competent to determine that the law is being observed by the lenders.

I do not know whether you comprehend the number of people who in your states are served by the small lenders. In Pennsylvania, in the city of Philadelphia, there are two offices, each of which in the course of a year serves from 2,500 to 3,000 borrowers. In the city of Chicago there is one office that serves 3,500 borrowers. Illinois has over 100 licensed lenders. So that probably in the course of the year the small loan offices in the State of Illinois serve upwards of 200,000 people. There is one city in Illinois in which I am told three out of every four families are served by a small loan office. In your hands is the care of these borrowers. It seems proper therefore that I should undertake in the few minutes that have been given to me to unfold to you the origin, purposes and principles of small loan legislation, so that those of you who now supervise the small loan offices may fully comprehend and sympathize with the purposes of that legislation, and that those of you who are unfortunate enough to live in states which have not small loan legislation may coöperate with us in making the uniform small loan law part of the legislation in your states.

Originally conditions surrounding the small loan business were chaotic beyond imagination. Sporadic efforts were made to remedy the situation. Then one institution with which I am now associated, placed itself behind one man to bring about a systematic development in the small loan field. At the outset it fought almost single handed. Then it brought together scattered remedial loan societies, organizations which had been formed in an effort to remedy the situation by men with a semi-philanthropic state of mind. They were so successful in their efforts against the loan shark that the most far-seeing of the commercial lenders recognized the immediate need of proper regulation of the small loan business; the result was the drafting of the first uniform small loan law, which is now the basis of legislation in twenty states, under which many of you are now supervising the small loan business, and which in course of time will, we hope, form the basis for regulation in every state where the business of making small loans is of any magnitude.

Where there is modern small loan legislation it is of supreme importance that its regulation be based upon understanding of the purposes and principles which underlie the legislation. Where there is no legislation it is imperative that public officials and leaders of public opinion should be informed regarding actual small loan conditions and the wisest method of improving them.

You may wonder and you may have wondered that the Russell Sage Foundation is interested in small loan legislation. It is unnecessary for me to say to you—or it should be unnecessary—that it has no financial interest in the small loan business. It became deeply interested in small loan conditions as a result of two studies, one made of the chattel loan business and one of the salary loan, about 14 years ago.

These studies convinced the Foundation of the need of improvement throughout the small loan field, and as a result thereof the Division of Remedial Loans was established.

No one who has not made a special study of the small loan conditions can have any appreciation of the urgent need of remedial legislation. I am going to cite just one example of it. For approximately eight years we have made an effort to enact a Uniform Small Loan Law in a prominent southern state. I am not going to name it. Its statute law provides that a charge in excess of six per cent per annum is illegal. The penalty for a charge in excess of six per cent is inability to collect principal or interest. The fact in that state is that in its cities the small lender operates in utter disregard of the statute law. We found upon investigation that the interest rate being charged was as high as six hundred per cent per annum, and that the average rate charged was from one hundred to two hundred per cent per annum. In the largest city of the state there were probably thirty unlicensed lenders. One legislator, who was a banker, stated that one of his depositors had informed him that on a capital of four thousand dollars invested in the small loan business he was able to make a living for himself and his family, on an authorized interest charge of six per cent per annum.

In New York, at the time of the last campaign against the illegal lender, we found that the interest charged for small loans varied from twelve to twenty-five per cent a month. In Massachusetts and in Maine, before the present statutes were enacted, the same conditions were found.

I cite the southern state and New York on the one hand and Massachusetts and Maine on the other, because these four communities have treated the charge for the loan of money upon an entirely different theory. In Massachusetts and in Maine, for example, there is no maximum legal contract rate. Parties may contract for any interest rate they please. In the absence of contract six per cent is the legal rate. In the southern state that I referred to, and in most American communities, there is a maximum legal contract rate beyond which parties may not contract. In both groups of states, in the states with no maximum legal contract rate and in the states with a maximum legal contract rate, the money lender waxed rich from his extortions on the borrower. In one class of states his extortion was legal. In the other class his extortion was illegal.

Massachusetts and states following it regarded money as a commodity and the interest rate a result of bargain and not legislation. New York and most American states have adopted the principle that the maximum rate of interest to be charged for the loan of money should be restricted by law.

In both groups of states small loan conditions were shocking. In the states with a limited contract rate, the money lender was as rapacious in his demands and as extortionate in his exactions as he was in Massachusetts or in Maine. Legislative restriction was no more effective than freedom of contract. Legislation of some sort became necessary. It is true that in the states with a limited contract rate, the borrower had a defense in a court of law. In some states he could resist the payment of interest in excess of the legal amount. In others, he could resist the payment of either principal or interest, but the experience of the lender demonstrated that either the honesty of the borrower compelled him to carry out his contract or his lack of knowledge of his legal remedy made it impossible for him to avail himself of it, and thus, whether from lack of inclination or knowledge, the exaction of the illegal lender went unchallenged. In the free contract states the borrower was, of course, without remedy.

This then was our problem. The most needy persons in the community were subject to the extortionate demands of the loan shark and were either without remedy or powerless to use their remedy. I am sure that this gathering will concede without argument that the situation required some remedy; that some legislation was required to limit the demands of the lender and to protect the borrower.

In one group of states the interest rate which might be charged upon small loans had to be increased. In the other group it had to be reduced. In both classes of states there is recognition that the making of small loans must be treated upon an entirely different basis and upon an entirely different principle than the making of larger loans.

The borrower of small sums of money required the protection of the state against the rapacity of the unbridled lender in the free contract rate states, where no maximum rate was provided by law, and both the lender and the borrower required the protection and the authorization of the state where by legislation a maximum contract rate was in force.

There is implied in what I have said an assumption that the small loan business should be authorized and not prohibited, and small loan legislation is based upon this hypothesis.

Studying small loan conditions, there are three possible bases upon which the small loan business might be regulated:

1. We might prohibit by legislation any charge in excess of the commercial contract rate on small loans and then put such penalties in the law as would prevent any person from breaking it; or

2. We might advocate the lending of small sums of money as a semi-philanthropic non-commercial enterprise, at the minimum rate for which the business can be conducted without profit to the lender; or

3. We might advocate and make possible the commercial lending of small sums of money.

The first solution is unthinkable. At some time in the life of most everyone there comes a time when he needs to borrow money. It may be to purchase coal, to pay a doctor's bill, to paint a house, to purchase a luxury, to tide over a period of unemployment or one of any number of contingencies which you can imagine as well as I. Would you say that a man who has no bank credit and no friend who can spare the money should go without, because it is not commercially possible to make a loan of fifty or one hundred or one hundred fifty dollars at the conventional contract rate?

I am sure that you will all agree that the borrower who has a legitimate need of money should be enabled to make the loan. Prohibition of a loan at more than the normal contract rate has prevented many legitimate borrowers from having their need met. It has not prevented the money lender from plying his trade at exorbitant rates which have been paid by many who have required the money for needs legitimate and illegitimate and paid without question the exaction of the lender.

Any person who gives any thought to the small loan question will speedily conclude that prohibition of interest in excess of the normal contract rate is no solution to the small loan problem. It has always resulted, in spite of sporadic campaigns against the loan shark, in clandestine extortion by the illegal lender and helplessness on the part of the borrower.

A second possible solution and one believed at one time to be feasible was the making of small loans upon a semi-phinanthropic, non-commercial basis. In other words, a charge of more than the conventional rate upon small loans by local law with a limitation of the return to the investor.

Upon this basis there have been established in this country approximately thirty companies wtih a capital of fourteen million dollars, but these semi-philanthropic agencies while they have rendered an important service to the borrower have not been adequate to cover his needs. There is not and never has been sufficient capital willing to embark upon the small loan business with its hazards and its risks for the self-limited return of the remedial companies. Prohibition is impossible. Semi-philanthropic lending is inadequate. Commercial lending is the only adequate solution.

Accordingly, believing that small loans should not be prohibited, that there was no reason to confine the small loan business to semi-philanthropic associations, those interested in the small loan field concluded that to meet the needs of the small borrower adequately it was necessary to put the business upon a definite legal basis, upon a basis which would make the small loan business commercially possible, hence the uniform small loan law.

The uniform small loan law is simple in form and simple in theory. It is based upon the fundamental principle that in the limited contract rate states the lender should be permitted to charge more than the customary contract rate and that in the free contract rate states he should be prohibited from charging more than the rate stipulated by the law. It provides, therefore, that no person may charge more than six to eight per cent per annum on a loan of less than three hundred dollars without obtaining a license from the constituted authorities. It permits a licensee to charge, not to exceed three and a half per cent per month, on loans of not over three hundred dollars. It requires the licensees to give bond to the state, provides minutely for the method of conducting business and makes criminal the unlicensed person who charges more than six per cent on the small loan and the licensed person who charges in excess of the authorized rate. It provides that the borrower shall be informed of the provisions of law with respect to the rate of interest to be charged and requires the business of every licensee to be subject to examination by the public officials, usually by the banking department.

In brief, the law makes the small loan business commercially possible to the lender and provides adequate supervision and imposes adequate criminal penalties for both licensed and unlicensed lenders who violate its provisions. The law has worked well wherever it has been tried. Small loan conditions in the states which have the small loan law give no trouble. But one question is asked about the law. Why should small loans bear a rate of interest in excess of those authorized by the general interest law? In this gathering the answer to this question should not be difficult.

The business to be regulated is the lending of money in kind. It cannot be compared with the purchase of a bond which may bear interest from 3½% per annum up, and the borrower has only to clip his coupons, nor with a loan on real estate mortgage where the borrower pays the cost of insurance, the legal services incident to making the loan and the lender receives from four to six per cent net upon his investment. It cannot be compared to banking, for the bank lends not money but credit, and although the bank may charge in New York not to exceed say, six per cent on any one loan, it may by reason of the fact that it lends not money but credit make loans many times the amount of its capital and surplus, so that although no one borrower can be charged more than, say, six or seven per cent on one loan, the gross earnings of a bank—and if I understate it you will know it—may be from 40 to 50% gross upon its invested capital and surplus. The money once loaned by the small lender cannot be loaned again until it is repaid. The rate authorized by law measures the gross return to the lender upon his capital.

The business most akin to small loans is the lending on pawn. On such loans, where the lender has the security for the loan in his own possession, he is usually authorized to charge much in excess of the legal rate of 6%, and no one questions the need of the higher rate for the pawnbroker.

A consideration of these few facts makes it quite clear that a higher rate than six per cent per annum is required. In addition, the risk on the loan is relatively greater, the duration is longer than in the case of the bank loans and the security of a character not usually acceptable to a commercial bank. The operating expense is high because the amount of each loan is small, each loan requires careful investigation and must be collected in small monthly installments. These considerations show why a small loan agency in order to remain in business must charge rates in excess of the normal contract rate, that will yield enough to meet inevitable losses, relatively high operating expenses, as well as a fair return on invested capital.

It follows that it is essential to the life of the business that a much higher rate be permitted for small loans than is prescribed for bank and commercial loans. We are dealing with a distinct kind of enterprise which requires special treatment.

There remains but one factor to be considered. Why 3½% a month instead of any other charge? The answer is not so simple but it is satisfactory. We sought a rate which will interest legitimate capital to satisfy the small loan requirements, and it has not yet been demonstrated that commercial capital will in general enter the small loan field if a lower rate is authorized. We know that wherever the uniform law has been enacted the small loan needs of the state have been more adequately met and the business placed upon a dignified plane. We know that in some states where less than 3½% is authorized, the small loan need is not adequately met. Colorado has the uniform small loan law with but one change. Instead of 3½% a month the authorized rate is 1% per month and fees.

It is perfectly clear that the small loan business is not satisfactorily conducted in a state like New York where only two per cent a month and fees are authorized, although several corporations of a semi-philanthropic nature are there engaged in the pledge and chattel loan business and a few commercial lenders have been authorized by the state banking department. It is likewise true that in Massachusetts the small loan field throughout the state is not covered and the commercial lenders do not seem to be making an adequate return. And year after year the Superintendent of Banks in Massachusetts has favored an increase in the rate to 3½%.

Concerns which have large capital and efficient organization may make more than would strike the average man as proper. A licensed lender with small capital in a medium sized town may have to struggle to make a living under the Uniform Law. The example of the lender struggling with small capital to make ends meet is no more an argument for increasing the rate than the success of the large and well organized lender is an argument for reducing it. The fact is that under the uniform law the borrower is being charged not to exceed 3½% a month and without legislation he was charged from 10% a month up, so that he is being saved at least 75% per annum interest. The fact is that the uniform law is meeting a difficult problem in a practical and effective way.

The student of the small loan field has met the practical man of affairs in the small loan business and together they have devised a law which admirably fits the situation. Commercial lenders operating under the small loan law have made their business a recognized, honorable commercial venture.

And now in the few minutes which are left to me I want to make a special appeal to you in whose hands has been committed the supervision of this business. I make a double appeal, one for your sympathetic coöperation in the enactment of the law, and, second, for careful examination and regulation, wherever it is in force.

The law without the lender would be a travesty. Unless under the law men engage in the small loan business, the enactment of the small loan law is so much wasted effort.

The first assistance that you can render is to be liberal in the granting of licenses. Making small loans is not banking. The lender is not receiving the public's money. I am certain that you do not make the mistake of insisting that the small loan business shall be conducted by the same type of men as are the directors of your state banks and trust companies. Many lenders that I know would be able bank directors, cashiers and presidents and their services would be eagerly sought by existing financial institutions. Some lenders might not seem eligible by you to any such position, but if they are willing to risk their money in this business and to obey the law it would be regrettable if the imposition of standards too high should prevent honorable men from engaging in honorable business. You should be, and I am sure you are, liberal then in the granting of licenses. Give the small loan law a fair test by your liberality in granting licenses, and then when you have granted licenses hold the licensee up to the full measure of the law. Remember that the purpose of regulation and examination is not to see that the licensee does not lose his own money, but rather to see that the loans to the borrower are made within the law. The purpose of examination is not primarily to see that the lender is solvent, but that the borrower has not been overcharged.

I hope that your examinations may be frequent and rigorous and that you will not permit the law to fall into disrepute because licensees may disregard it. This is merely a caution, as the licensee in general feels that he has a solemn duty to see that the law is not brought into disrepute, but it is your duty to see that the licensee does not evade it and you have a further obligation. The law provides penalties for its violation not only by licensed but by unlicensed lenders.

One of our great difficulties is that no law is self-executing. Someone must have the duty to see that violations of the law are punished. The unlicensed lender is as much subject to the law as the licensed lender. Can you not by the machinery at your disposal prevent violation of the law by unlicensed lenders?

And finally, here and there evasions of the law are springing up. In one state, men are not lending money but charging for their services in indorsing paper or purchasing endorsed notes. In others, they are buying wages, and other devices may suggest themselves. Can you not by the use of the staff at your disposal bring to the attention of the public the author's illegal devices and enforce the law against the lawbreaker? Can you not make suggestions to us as to changes which you think should be made in the small loan law, improvements, so that we may keep the law up to date? You are working in the field. We are only working in an office. You see its practical operation. We have only the theory to guide us. And finally, you who happen to be in states which have not yet seen the wisdom of enacting the small loan law, can you not coöperate with the public spirited citizens of your states who are seeking to remedy small loan conditions and assist in securing the enactment of the small loan law?

I thank you most cordially for this opportunity of presenting to you the principles and purposes of the small loan law. I bespeak your assistance in securing its enactment in states now living without its benefits and your coöperation in its enforcement in the states where it has been enacted so that the small borrower everywhere may receive its full and complete benefits. (Applause.)

GEORGIA

The regular meeting of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association was held in the office of Chairman Madison, 212 Healy Building, at 2 p. m., on the afternoon of Thursday, August 28th.

Chairman Madison called meeting to order promptly at 2 p. m. Due to the excessive hot weather and vacation period, there were only seven members present.

The treasurer reported $191.51 with all bills to date paid.

Report of the Standing Committee

Legislation: Mr. Steimle reported House Bill No. 661, presented to the 1924 Legislature, to amend present uniform loan act from three and one half to two and one half per cent, was defeated.

Report of Membership Committee

Chairman Madison submitted application of the Southland Loan & Investment Company, 527-8 Candler Building, Mr. R. R. Lanham, Manager, for membership, and took this occasion to reprimand Membership Committee for not properly functioning. Upon motion of Mr. Steimle, seconded by Mr. Lassiter, and unanimously carried, the Southland Loan & Investment Company was elected to membership in the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association.

Unfinished Business

The long standing clearing house matter brought about a lively discussion for about half an hour, and it was the consensus of opinion that the clearing house be confined entirely to members of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, and that the matter rest until return of Mr. Madison and Mr. Steimle from the National Convention, at which time the matter will be taken up with Mr. Wick, of Philadelphia, who will make a report at the National Convention of the progress of clearing houses in the various states, and to induce Mr. Wick, if possible, to come to Atlanta in the interest of the clearing house.

Publicity

The City Builder, a magazine of sixty odd pages, gotten out by the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, was suggested by Mr. Steimle as a very good medium for our publicity advertising. It was moved by Mr. Lassiter, seconded by Mr. McCollum, unanimously carried, that the back page of the City Builder be contracted for for six months at a cost of seventy-five dollars ($75.00) per month, to be divided pro rata among the members of the Georgia Association, first issue to appear in the October number.

It was moved by Mr. Snyder, seconded by Mr. Steimle, and unanimously carried, that the next meeting of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association be held on Friday afternoon, October 10th, at the Biltmore Hotel, and that a luncheon costing not more than $1.25 per plate be served to each member and paid for by the individual member, at which time report will be given of the National Convention.

Edw. M. Steimle,
Secretary.

COURT DECIDES HOW INTEREST MUST BE COMPUTED IN GEORGIA LAW

We are indebted to and have the permission of the Southeastern Reporter to publish the following decision, which appeared in its June 7, 1924, issue on a question in which all lenders operating in regulated states will be interested:

JOBSON et al. v. MASTERS

(No. 15294)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Division No. 1, April 16, 1924)

(Syllabus by the Court)

1. Pawnbrokers and money lenders Key No. 6*—Statute as to rate of interest per "month" construed; one charging or receiving excess interest forfeits right to recover either principal or lawful interest and charges.

The Act of 1920 (Ga. Laws 1920, p. 215), authorizing persons licensed thereunder to charge and collect interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per month on loans in sums of $300 or less, relates only to calendar months, whether the particular month for which the interest is to be computed happens to consist of 28, 29, 30 or 31 days, and if the lender charges or receives any sum whatever in excess of that authorized by the statute, the contract of loan is null and void, and the lender forfeits his right to recover either the principal or the lawful interest and charges (citing Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Month).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Month.]

2. Pawnbrokers and money lenders, Key No. 6—What lender must show, to entitle him to collection of statutory rate of 3½ per cent interest per month, stated.

A litigant, seeking to bring himself within the provisions of that act, so as to enable him to recover upon a contract stipulating to pay interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per month, must, as conditions precedent to such alleged right, show that he was licensed in accordance with the provisions of the act, that the contract was made under such license and at the place of business therein designated, that the contract does not upon its face show any violation of the act or failure to comply with its mandatory provisions, and that at the time of the loan he delivered to the borrower the statement prescribed by section 14 of the act. In the absence of either of these essentials, a contract of loan in which the borrower agrees to pay interest at any rate higher than 8 per cent per annum is usurious.

Bail trover by S. J. Masters against J. B. Jobson and another. Judgment for plaintiff, certiorari was overruled, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

S. Jay Masters instituted in the municipal court of Atlanta a bail trover proceeding against J. B. Jobson and Mrs. Sallie Lou Jobson to recover certain household goods described in his petition. He alleged that the defendants were in possession of the property that he claimed title thereto, and that they refused to deliver it to him, or to pay him the profits thereof. The petition contained the usual prayer for process. In addition to answering the paragraphs of the petition, the defendants pleaded:

"That the alleged right and title of plaintiff in the property sued for grew out of a contract or bill of sale and mortgage given by defendants to plaintiff for the purpose of securing a loan of money made by plaintiff to defendants on the 19th day of December, 1921. Under said contract of loan, defendants agreed to pay plaintiff as interest on the amount borrowed 3½ per cent per month as interest. The sum originally borrowed was the sum of $204, and was to be repaid in 12 equal installments of $17 each and interest as aforesaid at 3½ per cent per month, the amount paid at each payment on the principal to be deducted therefrom and a new principal to then run till the next payment, and interest paid on the new principal; that plaintiff charged, contracted for, and received interest and charges on said loan and the new principals in aforesaid in excess of those permitted by the Act of General Assembly of Georgia approved August 16, 1920, allowing charges of interest to be made on loans not in excess of $300 to be 3½ per cent per month; and that therefore, under the terms and provisions of said act, the contract of loan and the bill of sale and mortgage to secure said loan to defendants, and in which the alleged right and title to the property sued for herein was conveyed to plaintiff, is void and of no effect, and conveys no title or rights to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff has no title to the property sued for herein and cannot recover said property."

The remainder of the plea was devoted to setting out in detail the dates and amounts of the payments, which do not differ from those proved by the plaintiff upon the trial.

To prove his alleged title, the plaintiff introduced in evidence a writing, dated December 19, 1921, and signed by the defendants, the only part of which here material was as follows:

"For value received, we or either of us promise to pay S. Jay Masters, or order, or bearer, the sum of two hundred four and $^{00}/_{100}$ dollars, the same to be paid as follows: Twelve equal monthly installments of $17 on the 19th day of each month after date here (with interest thereon) at the rate of three and one-half per cent per month on the unpaid balance as provided for in an act of the Legislature approved August 16, 1920. And to secure the payment of the same we hereby deed, sell and convey the following property: (Here followed a description of property as in plaintiff's petition)—to the said S. Jay Masters, or order, or bearer, the said property being now at my home," etc.

Annexed thereto was another writing, purporting to be a bond to reconvey the property to the defendants upon the payment of the debt as above shown. While this bond commenced, "I, the undersigned, S. Jay Masters, am held and firmly bound," etc., yet the undertaking was signed only by one A. B. Madison. Neither of these writings contained any recital that the plaintiff was licensed under the act therein referred to, nor was any evidence offered to show that he was so licensed. Except as above shown, neither of them tended to show that the debt in question was created by a loan, or if so, the actual amount of the loan. Neither of these writings contains any recital or other indicia tending to show at what particular place of business the debt was created or the papers executed, nor was any other evidence offered tending to show these things. Plaintiff also introduced in evidence a book (which was not shown to have ever been delivered to the defendants or to have come from their possession) purporting to contain a record of the transaction in controversy, describing the above-mentioned bill of sale under the words, "Amount of loan, $204," on the back of which was a copy of section 13 of the above-cited act. It showed the following record of payments:

1-19	$7.38	$17.00	187.00
2-22	6.98	17.00	170.00
3-22	5.16	17.00	153.00
4-20	5.18	17.00	136.00
5-23	5.24	17.00	119.00
7-17	7.64	17.00	102.00
8-21	4.17	17.00	85.00
9-21	3.07	34.00	51.00
11-16	3.33	17.00	34.00

This book nowhere contained the name or address of the plaintiff, S. Jay Masters, nor the name or address of the person purporting to have signed the bond to reconvey the property to the defendants. It did contain the name and address of J. B. Jobson, followed by the words, "In account with Surety Loan Company," without the address of that company. A Mr. Madison, whose initials do not appear, testified as a witness for the plaintiff: That he (the witness) was manager of the Southern Security Company, and that his company represented S. Jay Masters in making the loan to the defendants, to secure which they executed the bill of sale in evidence; that he had collected thereon payments as shown by the table set out above; and that the calculation of the interest on the loan was made by a certain machine which they had in their office, which was a standard machine, used generally by loan companies, and which calculated interest on the actual number of days. In his opinion the loan was made under the above-cited Act of 1920, but he stated no fact on which to base that opinion. In collecting the interest, he undertook to calculate it at the rate of 3½ per cent per month for the actual number of days between payments, instead of on the basis of the calendar month, and in so far as the table of payments set out above may indicate a contrary purpose, the figures are due to his errors in calculating the interest due at the times of the payments. The minute details of his testimony touching the separate payments are unimportant here. He further testified to a demand on the defendants for the property before suit was brought. Jobson testified only with respect to the dates and amounts of the payments as made by him, which did not differ from the table of payments above set out.

The plaintiff elected to take a money judgment, and judgment in favor of the plaintiff was rendered accordingly. The exception here is to the judgment of the Superior Court overruling the certiorari sued out by the defendants, in which the judgment of the municipal court is assigned as error, because contrary to law and the evidence, with many amplified statements of that ground of error.

H. C. Holbrook, of Atlanta, for plaintiffs in error.

Geo. F. Fielding, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

Luke, J. (after stating the facts as above): In this court counsel for both parties, by their briefs, treat the case as one coming within the provisions of the Act of 1920 (Ga. Laws 1920, p. 215) "to license and regulate the business of makings loans in sums of $300, or less," etc.; the only question discussed by them being whether the lender charged and collected such sums of interest as to void the note and security given for the loan. In our view of the case there are other fundamental questions on which the case might turn, under the pleadings and the general assignment that the judgment of the municipal court was contrary to law and the evidence. But we will first consider the case as discussed by counsel for the parties.

[1] 1. The suit being an action of trover, it was essential that the plaintiff show title in himself to the property in controversy. It was to this end that he introduced the bill of sale in evidence. If valid and enforceable, it was sufficient for this purpose. Watts v. Wight Investment Co., 25 Ga. App. 291, 103 S. E. 184. The defendants attack this bill of sale, contending that it is null and void, under the provision of the Small Loan Act of 1920, to which the writing itself refers. They attack it, not for anything that appears on its face, but because the plaintiff collected interest in excess of the maximum rate of 3½ per cent per month allowed by that act. Section 13 of the Act provides:

"Every person, copartnership and corporation licensed hereunder may loan any sum of money not exceeding in amount the sum of three hundred dollars ($300) and may charge, contract for and receive thereon interest at a rate not to exceed three and one-half (3½) per centum per month. Interest shall not be payable in advance or compounded and shall be computed on unpaid balances. In addition to the interest herein provided for, no further or other charge, or amount whatsoever, for any examination, service, brokerage, commission or other thing, or otherwise, shall be directly or indirectly charged, contracted for or received, except the lawful fees, if any, actually and necessarily paid out by the licensee to any public officer for filing or recording in any public office any instrument securing the loan, which fees may be collected when the loan is made or at any time thereafter. If (any) interest or charges in excess of those permitted by this act shall be charged, contracted for or received, the contract of loan shall be null and void and the licensee shall have no right to collect or receive any principal, interest or charges whatsoever."

By section 17 of the act it is further declared that:

"No loan for which a greater rate of interest or charge than is allowed by this act, has been contracted for or received, wherever made, shall be enforced in this state."

In authorizing an interest charge of 3½ per cent per month, that statute deals, not with days, but with months, and the word "month," as therein used, means a calendar month, whether the particular month for which the interest is to be computed happens to consist of 28, 29, 30 or 31 days. Civil Code 1910, Sec. 5; 1 Words and Phrases, Second Series, p. 552. It appears from the uncontradicted evidence that the plaintiff repeatedly collected monthly installments of interest in excess of 3½ per cent per month; in fact, that, notwithstanding the terms of the contract and of the statute, he intentionally disregarded calendar months in all of his computations of interest, endeavoring only to compute it at the rate of 3½ per cent per month for the actual number of days between payments. He undertakes to excuse as bona fide errors of computation all excessive charges of interest appearing from that method of calculation. In view of the emphatic and unambiguous provision of the statute that "no further or other charge or amount whatsoever for any * * * thing, or otherwise, shall be directly or indirectly charged, contracted for or received," the principle announced in Patton v. Bank of La Fayette, 124 Ga. 965 (4), 53 S. E. 664, 5 L. R. A. 592, is not here applicable, nor do even bona fide errors of calculation seem to afford a sufficient excuse for such overcharges.

Especially is this so under the peculiar facts of this case, where there was no necessity whatever for computing interest for the fractional part of a month, and where the plaintiff still retains the benefits of his admitted errors and does not appear to have ever made any effort to restore or account for the sums thus wrongfully taken. Nor is it any excuse to say that the amount of usury thus taken was small. As for that matter, the principal debt itself was small, and could in no event exceed the sum of $300. But from the date of the loan, December 19, 1921, to the date of the first interest payment, January 19, 1922, was exactly one month of 31 days. Three and a half per cent interest on the principal of $204 for that month was $7.14. The amount of interest collected was $7.38, or an excess of 24 cents. Small as that may seem, a similar excessive charge for each month during the 12-months' period involved would amount to more than 1 per cent per annum on the entire principal debt for the year. For the second month the plaintiff appears to have collected 43 cents in excess of the maximum rate of interest allowed by the act in question, this excess alone amounting to almost as much as one month's interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum on the principal debt of $187 then outstanding. Other monthly collections of interest show overcharges, while some of them show undercharges; but, if further details are desired, the table set out above affords a sufficient basis therefor.

The question then is: What effect, if any, do such overcharges have on the bill of sale as evidence of plaintiff's alleged title? The small loan act of 1920 allows of but one answer. While it allows to lenders of small sums who comply with its provisions the unusual privilege of charging and collecting interest thereon at the rate of 3½ per cent per month, or 42 per cent per annum, where other persons are allowed only 8 per cent per annum, it also provides the unusual penalty of forfeiture of both principal and interest for one who undertakes to do business under its provisions, and who, in any manner whatsoever, contracts for or receives, either directly or indirectly, anything whatsoever in excess of its provisions for money thus loaned. In the language of the act:

"If (any) interest or charges in excess of those permitted by this act shall be charged, contracted for or received, the contract of loan shall be null and void and the licensee shall have no right to collect or receive any principal, interest or charges whatsoever."

It necessarily follows that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

[2] 2. Aside from such excessive charges of interest, does the plaintiff show any right to charge or collect interest even at the rate of 3½ per cent per month in accordance with the provisions of the small loan act of 1920? From section 1 of that act it emphatically appears that the privilege of charging such a high rate of interest is allowed only to those who are bonded and licensed in accordance with the subsequent sections of the act. In this case the plaintiff failed to show that he was such a licensee. Proof of that fact, if it is a fact, was necessary to bring him within the prospective provisions of that act and establish his right to the rate of interest claimed by him. In short, it was essential to his case, since the payments as made amount to more than enough to cover the principal debt and interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent per annum. Again, by section 8 of that act it is provided:

"No person, copartnership or corporation so licensed shall make any loan provided for by this act under any other name or at any other place of business than that named in the license. Not more than one place shall be maintained under the same license, but the licensing official shall issue more than one license to the same licensee upon the payment of an additional license fee and the filing of an additional bond for each license."

While the debt in question was payable to "S. Jay Masters, or order, or bearer," yet it appears from the evidence that the contract was negotiated for him by the Southern Security Company, through its manager. Not only is it a matter of doubt as to which of them, if either, is a licensee under the Act of 1920, but the evidence utterly fails to disclose at whose place of business the loan was made. In order to come within the terms of the act, the loan must have been made at the place of business named in the license issued to the licensee; and since this loan was made in the name of S. Jay Masters, and a licensee cannot lawfully make such a loan in any name other than his own, it was essential to plaintiff's case to show that he was a licensee, and that the loan was made at his authorized place of doing such business. Without such proof, the payments made are ample to cover the principal debt and interest thereon at 8 per cent per annum. Section 14 of the Act of 1920 provides, in part, that:

"Every licensee shall deliver to the borrower at the time the loan is made a statement * * * showing * * * the name and address * * * of the borrower and of the licensee."

The document introduced in evidence by the plaintiff to establish his compliance with this provision does not contain his own name, or the name of the Southern Security Company, or the address of any other person or concern as such lender. It does state the name and address of one of the defendants, "In account with Surety Loan Company." For this reason, also, the plaintiff failed to bring himself within the terms of the small loan act of 1920, or establish his authority to collect interest at a rate in excess of 8 per cent per annum. Whether the plaintiff sufficiently showed a compliance by him with the other provisions of that act need not be here considered. The act as a whole is unusually free from ambiguities; and as said by Judge Nisbet in the course of the opinion in Neal v. Moultrie, 12 Ga. 110:

"The exclusion of interpretation, where none is needed, may be stated to be, notwithstanding the absurdity which it involves, the first rule of construction."

In Badger v. State, 154 Ga. 443, 114 S. E. 635, this act was held to be constitutional as against the several attacks there made upon it. The question now presented for decision is whether it makes or destroys the plaintiff's case as proved by him upon the trial in the municipal court. And we hold that every person who seeks to bring himself within the provisions of the small loan act of 1920, so as to be authorized to enforce a contract for interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per month, must, as conditions precedent to such alleged right, show (1) that he was a licensee under this act; (2) that the contract sought to be enforced was made under such license and at the place of business therein designated; (3) that the contract does not upon its face show any violation of this act or failure to comply with its mandatory provisions; and (4) that he delivered to the borrower at the time of the loan the statement prescribed by section 14 of the act. In other words, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to establish the apparent validity of the contract upon which he relies for a recovery. Even then the defendant may render the contract null and void by alleging and proving that, subsequent to the execution of such a valid contract, the plaintiff received thereon some one or more of the things prohibited by section 13 of the statute. Applying these principles to the facts of the instant case, the court erred in overruling the certiorari.

Report of Officers

Secretary Moore reported a membership of 19, 14 of which are members in the A. I. L. A. with dues paid up to February 1, 1925. Three members are in arrears in state dues as of July 1, 1924.

The exchange has a membership of 9, all dues paid for three months in advance, all office fixtures and stationery paid for. All exchange members have a list of their open accounts in the exchange and the exchange will be ready to function no later than October 1, 1924.

Report of Committees

Owing to the enormous amount of work the members have been called on to take care of in connection with the A. I. L. A. Convention no committees have been appointed. Chairman Mattingly expects to appoint a full slate at our October monthly meeting.

Communications

Mr. H. C. Moore, Secretary,
Maryland I. L. Assn.,
2 E. Lexington St.,
Baltimore, Md.

Dear Mr. Moore:

During the year it has come to my attention that the collections of foreign accounts by our members are not receiving the attention they deserve according to action adopted at two of our National Conventions.

The members of the A. I. L. A. have gone on record at least twice to the effect that they would collect foreign accounts for members without additional charge. A number of cases have come to my attention where this service has not been done gratis and a charge has been made.

To clarify this situation, it has been suggested that each State Association Secretary make some investigation in his state among the members of the state and national organizations to ascertain what the general practice is in that state. If the secretaries are too busy to undertake this work it will be appreciated if they will appoint someone who expects to attend the Convention to give an account of the practice in each of their respective states. Your coöperation in this matter will be greatly appreciated.

Very truly yours,
George W. Kehr,
National Secretary.

The above letter from National Secretary Kehr was read and members present were not aware of any association member in Maryland making a charge in collection of foreign accounts.

August 29, 1924.

Mr. H. C. Moore, Secretary,
Maryland Industrial Lenders Assoc.,
Baltimore, Md.

My dear Mr. Moore:

Many people, lenders and others have asked me concerning the size of the Small Loan Business in the United States. Up to this time, I have been unable to make even a reasonable guess on account of the paucity of data published by State Banking Commissioners. I have determined finally to write to the Secretaries of State Associations affiliated with the American Industrial Lenders Association; hence this letter to you.

I would appreciate it greatly therefore, to have you tell me the approximate amount of capital invested in the Small Loan Business in your state. Please omit the amount invested by Remedial Loan Societies and Morris Plan Companies, but include that of loan companies, if any, that are not now members of your association.

Sincerely yours,
Louis N. Robinson,
Director Russell Sage Foundation.

Upon receipt of the above letter from Dr. Robinson, the Secretary got in touch with State Banking Commissioner Page, who kindly sent out a questioneer to every licensee in the State asking for the amount of their investment at the close of business on August 30, 1924. Just as soon as this data is collected, it will be forwarded to Dr. Robinson.

Harrisburg, Pa.,
Sept. 6, 1924.

Mr. H. T. Mattingly,
322 Equitable Building,
Baltimore, Md.

Dear Mr. Mattingly:

Will you please look into the possibilities of broadcasting from a Baltimore radio station the speeches to be made at the Convention banquet by Governor Ritchie, Judge Russell and Mr. A. S. Goldsborough, and let me know what the possibilities are? It has been suggested that possibly some of the addresses would be good to broadcast. I do not know what the radio facilities are in Baltimore but you probably do and can advise us if there is any chance of putting this over.

Very truly yours,
George W. Kehr,
National Secretary.

After the above letter was read a general discussion took place by most all of the members present upon the value of publicity obtained by radio, and Mr. C. A. Gardner was requested to take this matter up with one of our local broadcasting stations and advise our Chairman at his early convenience as to the approximate cost of this service.

Upon motion of Mr. Oliver, seconded by Mr. Moore, the Newark Cash Credit Company, A. E. Montgomery, Vice-President, 309 American Building, Baltimore, Md., was duly elected to membership.

Mr. Goldrick of the Finance Committee reports of having $471.00 toward the expenses of the A. I. L. A. Convention.

Mr. Eckart of the Ways and Means Committee was instructed to coöperate with Mr. Goldrick in the collection of money from those members who have not previously paid toward this fund.

Chairman Mattingly called a special session of the Maryland Association to be held at 7.30 p. m. on Tuesday, September 16th, at the Southern Hotel, at which meeting you will receive a detailed report of the Committee Chairmen covering their progress to date, re National Convention. Every member is requested to be present.

H. C. Moore,
Secretary.

NEW BRITISH BILL TO HIT LOAN SHARK

Women Money Lenders Charging 433 1-3 Per Cent Interest to Poor Victims

LONDON, Sept. 6 (Associated Press).—Women money lenders who loan shillings to the wives of laborers at a penny weekly for each shilling, which is 433 1-3 per cent interest, are likely to have their excessively profitable financial activities curtailed when Parliament reassembles.

A committee of Liverpool women has exposed the methods of these lenders, who work in the poorest districts, supplying pittances to workmen's wives during momentary distress and then, by threats, intimidation and even blackmail, forcing their debtors to filch from their meager housekeeping funds a penny weekly for each shilling borrowed.

Many homes have been broken up and suicides caused, it is said, by the money lenders' threats to expose their debtors, who will generally do almost anything to keep their husbands from finding out that they have borrowed. Of the 1,380 registered money lenders in Liverpool more than 1,100 are women.

A law will be passed regulating the money lenders' activities, but the social workers do not expect that the evil will be entirely eliminated, for the secrecy with which the petty loans are negotiated is a protection to the lenders.—New York World, Sept. 7, 1924.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S ESTATE

It would seem that quite contrary to the generally accepted idea Abraham Lincoln was by no means a poor man when he died at the hands of John Wilkes Booth in Washington back in the sixties. On the contrary as money was valued in those days, as compared with the present, Lincoln was wealthy. The lack of public information concerning the estate of Mr. Lincoln leaves the presumption that he left no estate, and this impression becomes almost a conviction when occasionally reference is made to his widow, who was ever complaining of her poverty.

According to Judge Davis' report, he of the United States Supreme Court, who administered the estate, Lincoln left $110,294, which would be equivalent to something like a half million in these days, the difference in buying power considered. This estate was divided into three equal parts, going to Mary Todd Lincoln, the widow; to Robert T. Lincoln, who was later Ambassador to Great Britain, and to Thomas, always called "Tad" by his father. Of this sum $57,000 was in registered 7 per cent bonds; about $7,000 in Treasury warrants, issued to him for salary and not paid at the time he was killed. Lincoln's bank balances amounted to several thousand dollars, the remainder of the estate being made up of loans, which it is noted bore interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, and real estate. It is noted that when Lincoln went to Washington from Springfield he was worth about $15,000, and Judge Davis' inventory indicates that the bulk of his savings were from his salary as President, which at that time was $25,000 per annum, a lot of money then, but not much now, according to present standards.—Saturday Night.

RECENT CASES IN SUPREME COURTS

The owner of a diamond ring pledged it to another for a loan. The debtor did not pay the loan at its maturity. This did not give the title to the ring to the pledgee or creditor. He held it subject to the right of the debtor to redeem it by paying the debt until the creditor had extinguished this right by lawful foreclosure and sale of the property. CHEERIO

The rain it poured,
The sea it roared,
The sky was draped in black.

The old ship rolled,
She pitched and bowled,
And lost her charted track.

"Oh dear, oh dear!
Sir, will it clear?"
Loud wailed a dame on deck.

As they heaved the lead,
The skipper said,
"It allus has, by heck!"

THE TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

For several reasons the tenth annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association, held in Baltimore, September 24th, 25th and 26th, will be memorable. Perhaps that which most helped to make this convention distinguished among its predecessors was the adoption of a Code of Ethics, thus giving to the Association its full status as an organization which formally announces to the world a declaration of principles to which it solemnly gives its adherence and by which it chooses to be judged by all men.

There were many other outstanding features in a convention pronounced by those who attended it as one of the most successful ever held in the Association's history, but it was the consensus that the adoption of the Code of Ethics was most significant, marking the high tide in organized lending and fraught with the happiest potentialities for the good of legitimate lending.

The Code, submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Code of Ethics, Judge J. H. Dyer, was adopted by unanimous vote of the convention at the final session on September 26th, but not until copies of it had been in the hand of members two days for study and consideration, and then only after a protracted debate in which it was discussed and explained section by section.

While the Code's adoption by common consent was considered the most important step taken by the convention, as a whole the meeting was distinguished by the generally constructive tone of the addresses delivered and the discussions upon set topics and other questions suggested by speakers as being pertinent to a general meeting of licensed lenders from every part of the country. The interest in the program was attested by the good attendance that marked every session and by the participation of many in the debates that followed the delivery of addresses.

Contributing to the success of the convention was a superb brand of weather furnished by Baltimore for the occasion. the excellent quality of the program of entertainment by the local committees the annual banquet with its enjoyable menu and its array of distinguished and brilliant speakers, the dance following the dinner, the all-day cruise of Chesapeake Bay, and the generally excellent quality of the three days' program.

There were 255 registered at the convention, among whom were many ladies. members of the families of delegates. The latter were the recipients of the hospitable attentions of the local committee who had arranged a series of sight-seeing tours which left no spot of interest in historic Baltimore unexplored. Luncheons, dances, theatre parties and shopping tours served to add to the enjoyment of the ladies attending the convention.

John H. Aufderheide,
National Chairman-Elect.

The meeting was called to order Wednesday morning, September 24th, in the ball room of the Southern Hotel by National Chairman Charles G. Mueller, of Philadelphia, who introduced the Reverend J. N. Stewart, of Baltimore, who pronounced the invocation. Mayor Howard W. Jackson, of Baltimore, was then introduced for a welcoming address to the delegates.

Mayor Jackson disavowed any attention to speak at length but in a brief talk marked by cordial and sympathetic understanding of industrial lending he told his hearers of the great pleasure it gave him to greet the members and welcome them to Baltimore. He congratulated them for having succeeded in putting the business on a high plane and said that men in public life were in a position to appreciate what they did in affording a means of financing to those classes who did not possess bankable collateral. He commended the efforts made in the past to rehabilitate a necessary business and the efforts now being made by the Association to maintain the business in the high position that had been won for it. In closing his brief address, Mayor Jackson said he had no keys of the city to offer the visitors, as all Baltimore was theirs and nothing would be locked to them.

When the hearty applause that greeted the Mayor's address had subsided a handsome floral basket was brought into the room and placed on the chairman's table. Mr. Mueller announced that the flowers were the gift to the convention of the Chamber of Commerce of Providence, R. I., with its best wishes for a successful convention. He also announced that Providence was a serious contender for the honor of having the eleventh annual convention.

Howard Bryant, of Baltimore, supplemented Mayor Jackson's welcome by a hearty greeting of welcome on behalf of the local members of the Association. Like the Mayor's address, Mr. Bryant's was brief, but his references to the quality of Baltimore's welcome, its absence of keys and its cellars, won the appreciation of his hearers.

Responding to the addresses of the Mayor and Mr. Bryant, National Chairman Mueller expressed the thanks of the Association for the cordiality and earnestness of their welcome, telling them that the lenders present were quite as happy to be in Baltimore as its representatives seemed to be to have them, and briefly alluding to the significance and importance of the occasion of their presence in the city.

The reports of the officers and chairmen of standing committees which then followed were interesting and will be published in full in the Year Book which is now in the making.

The mezzanine dining room of the Southern Hotel was crowded to capacity at the luncheon at 12:30 Wednesday, immediately following the adjournment of the forenoon session. An excellent luncheon was topped off by an address by William F. Broening, former Mayor of Baltimore. Mr. Broening spoke of the present status of industrial lending, of the important place in the economic and social scale of the country it holds, of the ideals of service that marks its operations under equitable laws and paid a tribute to the usefulness and good of licensed lending. He contrasted its present enviable status with that existing before wise and beneficial legislation had lifted it from a plane of outlawry to that of a legitimate, necessary and helpful business, and he quoted figures that showed that the profits from the business under the interest rates permitted by law were not inordinate but fair and comparable in their averages to those obtained in other branches of business.

Mr. Broening's address of a serious and thoughtful motive was succeeded by one by Lafayette Temple, of Baltimore, so decidedly opposite in tone that his hearers were kept in constant laughter for half an hour. Mr. Temple ranged the universe for topics for mock-serious discussion that was thoroughly enjoyed, and his jokes, anecdotes and witticisms made a great hit with his audience.

At the afternoon session Wednesday Chairman Mueller called upon Arthur L. Wick, of Philadelphia, for an informal report of the efforts by himself and Mr. Young, also of Philadelphia, in Portland, Me., which resulted recently in the organization of the licensed lenders in Maine.

The first set address of this session was to have been made by Walter S. Hilborn, Acting Director, Division of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation, New York City. Mr. Hilborn, however, was unable to be present and his address was read by Secretary Kehr. Mr. Hilborn referred briefly to the legislative activity during the past year and then launched into an attack upon the latest attempt to evade the Uniform Small Loan Law by the salary buying concerns and suggested means of defeating this attempt at the evasion of the law.

"Industrial Loan Personnel of To-day" was the subject of the address of A. G. Zimmerman, Eastern Supervisor, Beneficial Loan Society. Space does not permit us to more than refer to Mr. Zimmerman's admirable address but it, along with others of high character, will be published in full in the Year Book.

Upon the completion of the afternoon's regular program Chairman Mueller called upon William Snow, of Portland, Me., chairman of the newly organized Industrial Lenders Association of Maine. Mr. Snow expressed his pleasure at being present at the convention and said that the Maine Association, while small, was ambitious and hoped to be heard from.

Mr. Harbison, of Chicago, at this point took the floor to read a letter from the Secretary of the Bureau of Conventions in Chicago, inviting the Association to hold its next convention in that city. The invitation was acknowledged and filed with that from the Providence Chamber of Commerce.

At Thursday morning's session Mr. F. B. Hubachek read the report of the Law Committee for his father, F. R. Hubachek, the chairman, who was unable to be present. Colonel Clarence Hodson, of New York, at the close of the report congratulated the younger Mr. Hubachek, expressing his pleasure at seeing him follow in the footsteps of his father, to whose high character, attainments and unselfish devotion to the interests of legitimate lending he paid a graceful and feeling tribute.

A general discussion on phases of the laws governing lending followed, participated in by Colonel Hodson, Mr. Hubachek, Judge Dyer, Mr. Henderson and others.

At its close Chairman Mueller observed Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia, in the room, and asked him to rise that the convention might greet him. Those present did so by rising also. In turn Mr. Mueller introduced in the same way the State Banking Commissioners of Maryland and New Jersey. Chief Justice Russell acknowledged the greeting in a brief speech of felicitation to the convention on the good attendance and the excellent character of the addresses he had heard.

Arthur L. Wick, Supervisor, People's Finance Service Company, and Household Finance Service Company, Philadelphia, then delivered an address on "The Value and Progress of Credit Exchange Bureaus." No man in the industrial loan field to-day is better qualified to speak on this subject than Mr. Wick and none has given so much of his time to further the Credit Exchange Bureau throughout the East. The gratifying results evidenced by Mr. Wicks's investigation show conclusively that nothing of a more constructive nature has ever been attempted to put the business on a firmer basis than the elimination of "doubling up," and that is one of the Credit Exchange Bureau's greatest accomplishments.

An address was then read by A. B. Madison, Manager, The Master Loan Service, Inc., Atlanta, Georgia, on "Value of and How to Bring About Coöperation Between Industrial Loan Managers and Retail Credit Men." Mr. Madison's address was one of the best appreciated messages brought to the convention and told how a hostile attitude was changed into one of coöperation between the industrial loan managers and retail credit men in Atlanta.

"How Industrial Lenders Can Assist the Retail Credit Man," was the subject of the next address, read by David J. Woodlock, St. Louis, secretary-treasurer, the Retail Credit Men's National Association. Mr. Woodlock held us spellbound as he told us the ways in which our services can be utilized by the retail credit man to the betterment of the communities in which we do business.

Excellent addresses were then delivered by L. E. Pope, Z. B. Applegate, J. W. Markheim and Lee H. Pumphrey on practical and inspirational subjects announced on the program.

At the close of the regular program Chairman Mueller introduced A. B. Mears, President of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, who spoke briefly. Mr. Marsh, Chairman of the Special Committee on the Standardization of Papers, was called upon by Chairman Mueller and he explained what had been done in this direction.

Colonel Hodson took the floor to advocate support by lenders of the Industrial Lenders Mutual Insurance Company, which he urged was invaluable to members as affording them complete coverage. He suggested that its business should be conducted in the office of the National Secretary. Colonel Hodson also emphasized the need of continuing a campaign of information about industrial lending. He said there was a need of missionary work and urged members to buy quantities of the booklet "Making Credit Available to All," recently issued by the Association. He announced that his company would give an initial order for 10,000 copies of this booklet, and said that a total of 50,000 of these booklets would be absolutely inadequate when it was considered that its information should be spread to more than a hundred million of our population.

Mr. Hartz, Chairman of the Committee on Publicity, announced that the notices of the booklet had not been sent out to members until late in September, but that about 40,000 had already been ordered and he expected to find orders for many more awaiting him on his return to his office.

Judge Dyer introduced a resolution, which was adopted, providing for the appointment of a committee to study and investigate the insurance question introduced by Colonel Hodson.

The annual banquet was held Thursday night in the ball room of the Southern Hotel and the large room was filled to capacity. There were many ladies among the diners and their brilliant evening gowns added the final touch of color to the scene. An orchestra at one end of the room alternated with a quartet of singers while an excellent dinner was served.

Chairman Mueller was toastmaster and presided over the speechmaking with his customary wit and happy turns of thought. The speakers were Governor Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland, Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia; and A. S. Goldsborough, Secretary, Baltimore Association of Commerce.

We hope to publish what these distinguished men said in the Year Book. Suffice it to say here that their thoughts were the result of mature deliberation and in the main put their stamp of approval upon the business as conducted by the members of the A. I. L. A.

After the speechmaking the ball room floor was cleared and many of the diners danced until after midnight.

Friday's sessions were held aboard the Steamer Alabama of the Old Bay Line on an all-day cruise of Chesapeake Bay. The vessel cast off from the Light Street wharf at half-past ten with a passenger list practically 100 per cent of those attending the convention.

The day was ideal for the trip down the busy harbor of Baltimore and the historic bay, the weather being mild and the sea calm. While the members held sessions in the main dining room on the salon deck the ladies played bridge or danced on the main deck. Luncheon and dinner were served aboard and the salt air sharpened the appetites of the voyagers to the point of keenest appreciation of the meals.

The Alabama steamed down the bay sixty miles before turning back, and docked in Baltimore at 10:30 Friday night. The day was a plesant and unique experience, for it was the first time the Association had ever held a convention session on the seas.

The morning session was devoted to reports and general discussions. Mr. Harbison, speaking for Mr. Woll, Chairman of the Finance Committee, who was unable to attend the convention, spoke of the Association's need for more revenue because of the general practice of paying on a pro rata basis instead of the maximum dues. Treasurer Zumpfe suggested that the needed revenue could be raised if 50 or 100 per cent additional were paid after the pro rata payment. Judge Dyer asked how much more money would be needed in the coming year than was realized in the year just passed, and Secretary Kehr estimated that the Association would require a revenue of $25,000 in the coming year. He suggested that this could be raised by making a membership charge of $1.00 per $1,000 of capital, with a minimum of $10.00. After a general debate participated in by Mr. Baker of Illinois, Judge Dyer, George Hodson, Mr. Baum and Mr. Hartz, a resolution was adopted calling on members for a pledge to pay a voluntary increase of 50 cents a thousand additional or the maximum, effective February 1, 1925.

Chairman Mueller here announced the appointment of Judge Dyer as chairman of a committee to investigate mutual insurance.

The discussion on collection of out of town accounts was among the most spirited of the convention. Mr. Harbison gave instances of the abuse of this privilege and while advocating the retention of the system as one of the advantages of membership in the Association, he suggested that an equitable distribution of the work could be assured by having all such accounts sent direct to the offices of the respective state secretaries, who would allocate the collections in rotation to the various firms in cities where the foreign accounts were to be collected. The discussion was participated in by Messrs. Henderson, Hart, Wick, Baker, Moss and Hartz, and on motion of Mr. Hartz it was decided that hereafter out-of-town accounts be referred for collection to the respective state secretaries. A resolution, introduced by Mr. Harbison, that the Association favors the imposition of a fee of 25 per cent on the collection of out-of-town accounts for nonmembers, also was adopted.

Chas. G. Mueller,
Retiring National Chairman.

At the afternoon session the report of the Nominating Committee was submitted and on motion of Mr. Young of Philadelphia, was adopted unanimously. Mr. Young then moved that the secretary be instructed to cast the ballot of the convention for the entire slate, and the election of the following officers was then announced:

National Chairman, J. H. Aufderheide, Indianapolis.

National Treasurer, Tate J. Harrison, Waterloo, Iowa.

Chairman, Auditing Committee, W. M. Snow, Portland, Maine.

Chairman, Membership Committee, George Hodson, New York, succeeding Mr. Harrison.

Chairman, Finance Committee, W. P. Woll, Chicago, reëlected.

Chairman, Publicity Committee, Roy F. Hartz, Indianapolis, reëlected.

Mr. Aufderheide was escorted to the speaker's table and the retiring chairman surrendered the gavel to him. The new chairman briefly expressed his appreciation of the honor conferred on him and promised his best endeavors for the good of the Association in his administration of its affairs. He said it was an honor to succeed in office one so just, fair, honorable and lovable as Dr. Mueller.

Dr. Robinson then submitted his report on the Progress of the Survey of the Small Loan Business. It seems that the important work in which Dr. Robinson and his associates have been engaged the past two years is to soon see the light of day, and when published will go a long way toward having all the facts surrounding the small loan business better and more favorably understood.

On motion of Mr. Harbison a rising vote of thanks was given to Dr. Robinson.

Judge Dyer then submitted the report of the Committee on the Code of Ethics. The Code had been read by him at an earlier session of the convention and copies of it had been distributed among members for study. Mr. Hubachek suggested the elimination of Section 5 and the last clause of Section 7 of Article VI, to which Judge Dyer assented. Other minor changes in phraseology were suggested by Mr. Napier and adopted and after extended discussion of the several sections of the Code it was unanimously adopted and ordered printed. The convention then gave Judge Dyer a rising vote of thanks.

A lively debate on the merits of the open office for lending companies followed, Mr. Watts vigorously contending for the system, while Mr. Baker believed that it was not practicable to observe in the transactions between the industrial lender and his client the absence of private offices advocated by some of his conferees.

E. M. Steimle, Secretary, Georgia Association, then read his report of the Georgia Publicity Campaign. This campaign, prompted by the inability of the public to discriminate between the legitimate licensed lenders and the outlaws, is gradually having its effect and the people of Georgia are beginning to realize there is a difference by the constant educational remindings appearing in the most important Georgia periodicals.

Mr. Harrison was called upon by the Chairman and described the operation in Des Moines and Waterloo, Iowa, of an insurance company advertising the lending of money at 6 per cent on chattels. An investigation revealed that applicants for loans from this company were required to take out life insurance payable to the company during the life of the contract. An appeal to the banking department of the state being without result, the newspapers were appealed to, and the company was forced to advertise under the classification of insurance. Eventually the company took out a license to do a lending business at the 3½ per cent rate.

Judge Dyer described the operations along similar lines of two insurance companies in Cleveland, both of which eventually were forced out of business by the state securities department.

On motion of Mr. Hodson a vote of thanks was extended to the retiring officers and the chairman was instructed to purchase a suitable testimonial for presentation to the retiring National Chairman.

The invitation by Providence to hold the 1925 convention in that city was supported by telegrams from the governor of Rhode Island and the Mayor of Providence, and the convention decided that the precedent which alternated the convention meeting place between the East and the West should be set aside and the invitation of Providence accepted. Mr. Wickstrom, of Providence, who had presented the claims of his city, expressed his appreciation of the honor and assured the members that Providence was prepared to make the event notable in the Association's history.

There was some sentiment among the members for an earlier date for the convention than has been heretofore observed, but after Secretary Kehr had explained the practical difficulties in the way of holding it on a date prior to September it was decided to leave the matter to the Executive Committee to fix the date as might be found practicable.

After a vote of thanks to the Baltimore committees and members for their hospitality and the admirable arrangements made and followed out for the meeting, the convention adjourned subject to the call of the National Chairman.

The chairmen of Baltimore committees were as follows: Finance, J. D. Goldrick; Entertainment, E. E. Hougham; Registration, L. H. Pumphrey; Publicity, H. L. Mattingly; Hotel, W. F. Oliver, Jr.; Ways and Means, L. W. Eckhardt.

The attendance trophy awarded to the state which had the largest percentage of its membership in good standing at the convention was won by Maryland, with 78 per cent. The other states listed according to percentages were as follows: Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Maine, Nebraska, Georgia, Ohio, Michigan, Virginia, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana, Connecticut, West Virginia, Iowa, and Massachusetts.

NATIONAL CONVENTION BANQUET PHOTOGRAPHS

Any who may desire photographs of the national convention banquet can obtain them from the photographers, James F. Hughes Co., 205 W. Fayette St., Baltimore, Md., upon request at the cost of one dollar each.

THE REGULATION OF PAWNBROKING

Dr. Robinson announced at the National Convention that one of the first fruits of his labor was now available in a 63-page pamphlet by R. Cornelius Raby, of the legal department of the Provident Loan Society of New York, entitled "The Regulation of Pawnbroking." This pamphlet is published by the Russell Sage Foundation, 130 East Twenty-second St., New York, under its Small Loan Series, and will be supplied by it upon application, for fifty cents.

YEAR BOOK

On account of the fact that important news is crowding for our limited space, it has not been possible to elaborate upon many of the interesting incidents of the Baltimore Convention. We have especially been denied extracts from the many interesting addresses that were made upon this occasion, but don't worry, all of these masterpieces will be published in full in the Year Book, which we hope to have out at a season when night reading is a pleasure. This job involves considerable detail work and one of the features, at least, calls for the united coöperation of the whole A. I. L. A. membership. As before, we shall publish a complete directory of the members with their local addresses according to states, but we can include only in this directory such members as are in good standing; that is, members who have paid their dues for the current year. All members will receive this book without additional cost and it will be sold to others at $1.00 per copy. The directory itself is of great value in the matter of handling skip collections. It will also enable members to know when to charge 25% for the collection of foriegn accounts and when not to do so.

CODE OF ETHICS

As directed by the National Convention, the 10,000 copies of the "Code of Ethics" adopted unanimously by the convention, have been ordered and will be distributed on the basis directed, namely, one copy for each dollar of dues contributed to the National Association during the past year. That means members who paid the minimum dues of $10.00 per annum will receive 10 copies, and those who pay the maximum dues will receive 100 copies. If any member desires an additional number of copies for educational work in his community, they can be had upon application to the National Secretary for the cost of printing and postage.

MAINE

The second meeting of the Maine Industrial Lenders Association was held on the evening of October 9th, at the office of the chairman, Wesley M. Snow, at his office in Portland.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

Committee on By-Laws reported and it was voted to adopt by-laws as used by the Rhode Island Association.

It was moved and voted that the secretary attend to the matter of stationery.

Voted not to have the by-laws printed until the next semi-annual dues are paid.

It was voted that the chairman and secretary decide when and where the next meeting be held and that said meetings be held quarterly.

Treasurer reported that there was $46.85 now in treasury.

Very interesting remarks were made by Chairman Mr. Snow, telling us about his wonderful trip to National Convention. Henri S. Crosby, Secretary.

Dear Mr. Wick:

I am very pleased to be able to write you and say that at the second meeting of the Maine Association held on the 9th of October, in Portland, at the office of the chairman, Mr. Snow, that there were ten members present; in fact, every one but Mr. Waterhouse, who spends the winter in Boston, and Mr. Nevens, who does not feel like getting around until he gets his new artificial leg. I think this was remarkable, and Mr. Bernstein came all the way from Bangor, which shows that he is very much interested and is going to be one of the live members.

I trust that my next letter will be written on the new stationery, as it was voted for the secretary to attend to this matter, and although we appreciate your kindness in offering to attend to this for us, I must inform you that our treasurer is a very conservative man and said printing must be done nearer home.

We adopted by-laws same as used by Rhode Island and same that was submitted by yourself. Next meeting is to be held at Lewiston, and us boys located here are going to put on a time that will have the reporters offering bribes to get in—same to be held some time in January.

I am returning sketches you loaned and will say that we voted not to use same. I think expense is one reason.

Mr. Snow gave us a very interesting talk on his trip to Baltimore, and I would not be surprised if the whole Maine Association was represented at Providence in 1925.

The boys, I think, would like to receive set of papers as used by your company and would appreciate same at your convenience.

I am sending copy of report of meeting to Mr. Kehr.

I think the Maine Association is getting started right, and personally I want to thank you for waking us fellows up.

With best regards, I am,

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) Henri S. Crosby,
Secretary.

USURY AND USURY LAWS

By Franklin W. Ryan.

Whether legislatures should attempt to fix maximum rates of interest on loans is a problem that has puzzled economists and legislators for centuries. The aim of the present inquiry is to work out a method of approach to this problem. Several dynamic questions are involved. The business man wants to get rid of the old anarchronistic usury laws now on the statute books of 43 of the states. The social worker and legislator want to get rid of loan sharks. The legitimate small lender wants to make a fair profit on his operations. The abstract economist wants to know why 43 states insist on keeping the usury laws in force in spite of the generally accepted theory of interest which is that money rates are determined by economic laws independently of statutes. After a brief historical approach, and an analysis of the problem of usury into its constituent elements, the author works out answers to all these questions.

There exists, within the limits of the science of jurisprudence, an inarticulate evolving body of economic thought, apart from but parallel to the systems as developed by the economists. This field of thought is sometimes called juristic economics. The problem of usury goes into it. Whether society ought to establish statutory maximums for loan charges is much more than a question in the abstract economic theory of interest. It is a problem touching not only the domain of economic theory but also the fields of legal theory and governmental science.

The study proceeds to its conclusions working with and studying the functioning living organization of American economic society and analyzing some of the mechanisms, forces and interrelations which compose this economic structure. It finds in the American business structure a chronic disorder in which unsound financial legislation obstructs and interferes with the smooth interplay of economic forces and it attempts to discover a remedy. Its answer to the problem of the business world is that there is a way to get rid of these troublesome old usury laws. Its answer to legislators is that loan sharks and moral usury can be and are being eliminated in those states which have enacted the new Uniform Small Loan Law with its administrative features. Its answer to the farmers' problem is that far more effective devices than usury laws for reducing interest rates on farm loans have already been discovered and perfected and are now in use.

The book will be of immediate value to the small lenders and pawnbrokers who, though they never are found among the ranks of millionaries, are branded as "usurers" and "loan sharks." Every progressive commercial banker will want the book in his libary since it covers every phase of the interest problem. It will find a place in every economic library. The business man who finds time for reflection on social matters will find it stimulating. But its chief value will be to lawyers and legislators as it makes some real contributions to legal theory and governmental science. Mr. Ryan is instructor in Banking in the Harvard Business School, and for the last five years has been doing research work in the fields of finance, law and government.

This book is crown 8vo, and will be sold for $2.50 by the publishers, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., New York, or any retail book dealer.

Reginald Heber Smith's comment upon Mr. Ryan's book is expressed in the following telegram to Col. Hodson:

"I have just examined the page proof of Ryan's book. Every member of the American Industrial Lenders Association will enjoy reading it because it is a statement of the truth by an impartial scholar."

Reginald Heber Smith.

SUPREME COURT DECISION JUST RENDERED

Easy Term Loan Company vs. Joseph Silberman, Nathan Kapnek and David Biebelberg.

On appeal from the First District Court of Newark.

Before Justices Kalisch, Katzenbach and Lloyd.

The plaintiff, a corporation, brought two separate actions upon two promissory notes of $300.00 each against the defendant in the court below. The notes were of even date and of the tenor following:

"Loan No. 110
"$300.00 License No. 94
"Newark, N. J., March 13, 1922.

"On demand after date I promise to pay to the order of Easy Term Loan Company, three hundred dollars in weekly payments of twelve dollars per week, with interest at the rate of 3% per month, at the office of the Easy Term Loan Company, 22 Belmont Ave., Newark, N. J.

"In default of any payment of the principal or interest, or both, the total sum then due with the interest thereon shall immediately become due and payable, at the option of the Easy Term Loan Company.

"Dave Biebelberg.
"Endorsed: Joseph F. Silberman.
"Nathan Kapnek."

The other note, No. 111, signed by Joseph Silberman, and endorsed by Nathan Kapnek and David Biebelberg.

The cause to recover on loan note 110 was tried before the court, without a jury, and the stated case consisted of the certified transcript of the testimony taken and of the rulings of the court, at the trial, and it discloses that a motion on behalf of the plaintiff to overrule the defense and to give judgment for the plaintiff against the defendants was denied by the court, and that an exception was taken and that judgment was rendered by the court for the defendants.

The case on loan note No. 111 was not tried, and by stipulation of counsel was to abide the result of the present case now before us on plaintiff's appeal from the judgment given against it on loan note No. 110.

The plaintiff company was licensed to do business under an act entitled "An act to define, regulate and control the business of the making of loans or advancements of money in sums of three hundred ($300) dollars or less in amount, and to regulate the assignment of wages when given as security for any such loan or advancement."

By Section 5 of the act, page 79, it is provided that no loan or advancement greater than $300 shall be made to any person, nor shall any one person owe such licensee more than $300, at any time.

Section 6 provides, inter alia, that the violation of any of the provisions of the act shall be a misdemeanor, and that every loan in connection with which such violation shall have occurred shall be absolutely null and void, and the borrower shall be entited to recover from the lender any or all sums of money paid or returned on account of, or in connection with, such loan.

There was testimony in the case which tended to show that Kapnek borrowed $600 of the plaintiff, and in order to circumvent the statute and thus commit a fraud upon it, it was agreed between the parties that the loan of $600 made by the plaintiff to defendant Kapnek, should be represented by two distinct loan notes of $300 each, one to be signed by Biebelberg and the other by Silberman, Kapnek to be an endorser upon each. The plaintiff denied that Kepnek was the borrower, and that there was any such agreement as testified to on behalf of the plaintiff. A disputed question of fact was presented, which was decided by the trial judge adversely to plaintiff, and his finding on the facts is not reviewable.

The principal point made and relied on in the brief of counsel of appellant for a reversal of the judgment is that the court erroneously permitted the defendants to introduce parol testimony to "vary and alter a written document upon which the suit was based."

The defense set up against the plaintiff's right of recovery was fraud and illegality in the transaction. That fraud and illegality in a contract may be established by parol testimony is too firmly estabished to need the citation of any authorities in support of the proposition. The cases cited on appellant's brief do not assert the contrary. Fraud or illegality in the contract is an exception to the general rule that parol testimony is inadmissible to vary or alter the terms of a written contract.

In the light of the cases cited, the testimony, impugned by appellant's counsel as incompetent, was clearly component and properly received, for it tended to establish that the transaction between the plaintiff and defendants was an attempt to circumvent the express mandate of the statute, that no loan for more than $300 shall be made to any person, nor shall any one person owe the lender more than that amount at any one time, and, hence, was a violation of and a fraud upon the statute, and that the loan notes of $300 each were the direct product of such fraudulent design.

The judgment is affirmed, with costs.

NEW JERSEY

The regular monthly meeting of the Newark Lenders Exchange was held at Stetters on Thursday, October 9, 1924, at which the following companies were represented: Peoples Finance Service, Inc., Provident Loan Society, Beneficial Loan Society, Community Finance Service, Inc., Industrial Loan Society, Gibraltar Loan Society, Metropolitan Finance Service, Emergency Loan Company, Bureau of Finance.

A general discussion took place among the members as to each member using regulation size paper in sending through their lists and it was decided that all members were to use at least one-half sheet of paper in reporting their lists, whether there were any applications on same or not. It was also decided that each member, when checking over the lists each morning, was to stamp the name of the company at the bottom of the sheet and the initials of the person checking up the list.

The application of the Franklin Loan Society to become a member of the Exchange, presented by Mr. Steur, the chairman, upon motion was accepted by the Exchange, contingent on the report of a special committee, consisting of Messrs. Whitstone and Cameron, who are to investigate the said company.

Upon motion, which was duly seconded, the Exchange ordered that all offices should be closed on Monday next, October 13, 1924, Columbus Day, the same being a legal holiday, and that all Exchange offices will close on all future bank holidays. It was also regularly moved and seconded that the Exchange hold regular monthly meetings hereafter on the second Thursday of each and every month.

The Exchange had as its guest Mr. Wick, of Philadelphia, who spoke at length on the establishing of a Central Exchange in Newark, the same as is now being operated in Philadelphia and Baltimore. He spoke of the wonderful possibilities of such a bureau, which would entirely eliminate the chances of doubling up. He explained in detail as to how these were operated in conjunction with the local Chambers of Commerce, and after much discussion a committee consisting of Messrs. Davis, Simonson and Bishoff, was appointed to look into the matter, which is to be further considered at the next meeting.

There being no further business the meeting was adjourned until Thursday, November 13, 1924.

Knox Law

Opinion.

Clark, Judge:

The above cases are instituted separately before a justice of the peace. From a judgment in each case in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, defendant appealed to the Circuit Court of Knox County. There the cases were tried together before the Circuit Judge without the intervention of a jury and resulted finally in a judgment in each case in favor of defendant and against the plaintiff for the costs of the cause. Plaintiffs' motions for a new trial having been overruled, they appealed to this court and have filed sixteen assignments of error. We will dispose of the cases together.

In the case of G. C. Line vs. B. H. Acuff, the defendant was summoned to appear before the justice of the peace, "To answer complaint of G. C. Line in a plea of debt due by money had and received in violation of the laws of the state of Tennessee under $500.00."

In the case of Walter Fretwell vs. B. H. Acuff, the defendant was summoned to appear before the justice of the peace, "To answer the complaint of Walter Fretwell in a plea of debt due by money had and received in violation of law under $500.00."

In the case of A. A. Russell, the defendant was summoned to appear before the justice of the peace, "To answer the complaint of A. A. Russell in a plea of debt due by money had and received in violation of the laws of the state of Tennessee under $500.00."

In the J. W. Gardner case, the defendant was summoned to appear before the justice of the peace, "To answer the complaint of J. W. Gardner, in a plea of debt due by money had and received in violation of law under $500.00."

The cases were heard together in the Circuit Court of Knox County, May, 1923. At the conclusion of all the proof the Trial Court said:

Gentlemen: I can settle part of this and part of it I cannot without your very generous assistance: Mr. Burrows and Mr. Hodges, I have reference to. I once said that this contract was an assignment of wages, as I viewed the case that was then tried. That case went up, however, and was reversed on the ground that I did not let that question go to the jury. We cannot do that in this case; cannot have a jury pass on it for a jury trial, and I am sorry that a jury could not have considered that question, and I will let it go to the Appellate Court to say what kind of a contract it was, whether it was an assignment or whether it was a loan.

Now, in order further to light my steps I would have to follow my earlier footsteps. I had nothing to light my steps in the other case; I had to blaze my own way. There has been no construction on this statute as I recall, and I therefore held that it was a loan and not an assignment. But now there has been, since then a construction of this statute which clearly constitutes a loan. The Supreme Court have held that it constituted a loan and not an assignment. I am bound to conform my action to that opinion of the court defending what a loan is, and in the light of that holding I am compelled to find that this was a loan and not an assignment. Now, that part of it I have no difficulty in determining, gentlemen, and that this transaction must be determined under this loan.

Following out the law as laid down on this statute, I must ask you gentlemen to take the case, with my opinion of what the transaction was,—that it was a loan,—and figure out according to that statute—you are both very handy with figures; I know that personally—and see if you can figure out the amount that the respective plaintiffs are entitled to recover in accordance with that statute, allowing the defendant six per cent interest, plus the fees fixed by statute.

I will hold up my judgment and get you gentlemen to help me figure that. I will say very frankly that I could not arrive at that without going over the proof very thoroughly again. I took as many figures as I could get, and if you gentlemen have any difficulty I will join with you and see if we cannot figure it out. I will say that you may take the amount of the loan as testified to by the respective plaintiffs and figure that as the basis of the loan, now I was very careful to put them down. Line borrowed $85.00; Gardner borrowed $20.00; Fretwell borrowed $45.00, $20.00 once and $25.00 at another time; and Russell borrowed $20.00. Now take that as a basis, gentlemen, and you and Mr. Hodges can no doubt figure it out. I don't know of two more clever men of figures at the bar.

Mr. Burrows: Then if your honor pleases, we will have to take the amount they claimed that they paid back.

The Court: That is true, Line claims that he paid $642.00, Gardner paid $240.00, Fretwell paid $120.00, and Russell paid $267.00.

Mr. Hodges: Your honor allows the fees provided by Section 9?

The Court: I allow the fees provided by that statute.

Mr. Hodges: And six per cent interest?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Burrows: As I understand it, they would forfeit all fees. What is your holding on that?

The Court: Well, I think we will pursue the other course. I am not willing to proceed on the theory that these men were deliberately carrying on a loan business in defiance of the law without a license. They are carrying on a brokerage business but they allowed these loan transactions to get into their brokerage business, and I am not willing to say that they should be penalized for that, so I think the settlement should be treated as a loan and allow them the fees provided by the statute and six per cent interest.

Nothing further seems to have been done in the case until August, 1923. At that time, the defendant, Acuff, appeared, produced certain books, and testified that each transaction had with each of the plaintiffs was a separate and distinct transaction and was finally closed before any other contract was entered into with any of the plaintiffs, his effort being to prevent plaintiffs from going back more than two years in the collection of usury.

Each of the plaintiffs was introduced on the hearing in August and denied certain material parts of the testimony of the defendant.

At the closing of that hearing the trial judge said:

I did not consider these cases finally closed at any previous hearing or consideration of the cases. We discussed the matter together, and we came to an understanding as I thought about the question about the statute of limitations, and I instructed counsel that if these were running continues transactions from the date of any particular loan or scale of wages and had never been closed at any time, that the statute of limitations did not effect them. But if they had been a closed transaction at any particular time and that would fall within the operation of the statute of limitations and it apparently became necessary then to determine as a matter of proof whether or not any of these transactions were ever closed or whether they were continues running transactions in the shape of renewals from time to time. And that in the final proof that we have been taking in the case.

One thing that develops here this morning that in my judgment brings to the service a matter that had not been considered previously, that had not been developed previously and that is, the method of these transactions in determining whether or not they are continues transactions or closed transactions. If a man went into the office or elsewhere and settled up everything that he owed that was closing the transaction notwithstanding the fact that he may have turned around and immediately borrowed that amount of money back.

Mr. Burrows: That very question was up in the McKnight case vs. the State, 134 Tennessee, and the Supreme Court passed on that.

The Court: I know; but they considered that a running transaction and the old transaction had not been closed. It is immaterial whether the new transaction is made immediately following the closing of the old transaction or whether it is made ten days or one hundred days or a year afterwards. It looks to me like that is the closing up of the old transaction and opening a new transaction. If the full amount was loaned back at that time, that was the beginning of a new transaction. I will say that new features has developed from the proof this morning, that has not hitherto developed. Be that as it may, I am just referring to that. I do not think it is conclusive of the cases at all, but all the court can do in deciding these cases is to find something tangible if possible upon which a judgment can be based. These men deny certain record evidence of the transactions. I must state that I hope the experience will be beneficiary to these men, that they pursue a very loose method of business according to their admissions here. They admit that they signed certain documents that were not filled out. That is as dangerous as a deal fall and I don't believe they can be heard to say in the face of the transactions that were thus made, that the written instrument does not speak the truth. They kept no record except such as they carry in their minds against a written statement admittedly signed by them. Now all things being equal, gentlemen, there can be no argument but that the most tangible and the most dependable evidence is the written evidence, is the documentary evidence. We know from personal experience that our minds frequently fail us; our memory is not always to be depended upon. We may be absolutely honest, and I do not question for a moment that those men are absolutely honest, in what they have stated and what they believe, but that fact nevertheless remains that our memories are treacherous, that we cannot carry all our business every-day transactions in our minds and keep them accurate and straight and free from error and mistake. So I am bound to accept as the most tangible basis upon which I can decide these lawsuits the documentary evidence.

I have no doubt that covering the whole period of these transactions between these parties, that there has possibly been usury paid on all of them, but we are only dealing with such now as fall within the state of limitations, or rather falls so as not to be effected by the statute of limitations. If they could reach and cover all the usury that they have paid from the beginning of their transactions it would be presented by these cases. We can only reach back and take in limitations such as are not affected by the statute. I am compelled therefore, to accept the proper basis for the determination of these cases, the fact as presented by the defendant, and will accept the figures here offered in proof as the basis of settlement and render judgment accordingly. "That is the only way I can see out of it, gentlemen."

The court being of the opinion that all claims made by the plaintiffs, Walter Fretwell and A. A. Russell, were barred by the statute of limitations of two years, proceeded to dismiss their cases and tax them with the cost.

The court was of the opinion that the plaintiff, G. C. Line, was entitled to recover usury in the amount of $76.40, and that the plaintiff, J. W. Gardner, was entitled to recover usury to the amount of $11.91, and he rendered judgment in favor of said respective plaintiffs and against defendants for said amounts and their proportionate part of the cost. Said defendants moved for new trials. Their motions were overruled.

Thereafter each defendant moved in arrest of judgment, assigning as the basis of this motion that the judgment rendered against him was void because the warrant against him stated no cause of action, in that the words "money had and received in violation of the laws of the state of Tennessee under $500.00," was insufficient to give defendant reasonable notice of what he was called to defend.

Pending the motion in arrest of judgment the respective plaintiffs moved to amend the warrants by adding after the word Tennessee in the Line case and after the word "Law" in the Gardner case, "In violation of Chapter 62 of the Act of 1917." The motions to amend were overruled.

Thereafter the court sustained the motions in arrest of judgment made in each of said cases of Line vs. Acuff and Gardner vs. Acuff, and dismissed plaintiffs said suits and taxed them with the costs.

Did the trial judge err in overruling the plaintiffs' motion to amend said warrants? We think he did. It is well settled in this state that the courts may allow material amendments at any stage of the proceedings, upon such terms as it may be prescribed. Amendments may be allowed at any time to reach the merits and to attain justice, and in modern times courts are much more liberal in allowing amendments than formerly.

The question of whether the warrants under discussion stated a cause of action is not free from doubt. In the case of Nicholas vs. Turnpike Co., 128 Tenn. 541, it was held that a warrant issued by a justice of the peace in the form prescribed by Shann Ann Code, Sec. 5989, calling upon the defendant to answer "in a civil action on account under 'Five Hundred Dollars' was sufficient as against an objection that failed to state a cause of action." In that case, it said:

In the Flodd case, Mr. Justice Shileds in delivering the opinion of the court, cited with approval Watkins vs. Kittrel, 3 Baxt. 38, 42, in which the summons or warrant recited as the ground of the action, a debt due by a constable receipt; and Judge McFarland, in reference to it said: "This clearly gave notice to the defendant what the cause of an action was, what transaction was to be contested." It therefore appears that the court in the Flodd case must have had in mind the distinction which we here take. It at least reaffirmed Watkins vs. Kittrel, which certainly concludes petitions in his claim of error.

But, assuming, without deciding, that the statement of the cause of action in each warrant as insufficient, it is clear that the defendant was not misled. When the case was taken up for trial, immediately proceeding the introduction of the first witnesses, the following occurred.

Attorney for Loan Co., Mr. Hodges: These suits are based upon the money lenders Act of 1917. That act required, now the keeping of certain books, buying certain licenses and so forth. Our plea is not guilty, and we plead the statute of limitations of two years if using for usury, and in order to shorten these cases will say that we were not operating under the Loan Shark Act of 1917, and we are not complying with those conditions and did not attempt to comply with them. Our theory is that the law of assignments governs the business in which these people were engaged, and that they complied with the law respecting assignments and that we were not operating under the provisions of this other act.

Attorney for Borrowers, Mr. Burrows: If your honor pleases, our position is that they do not come directly within the provisions of the act as the act has been construed by the Supreme Court. The general question of the usury law is not involved. We are not suing to recover what these men have paid to these money lenders, not only in principal, but in interest, contrary to the provisions of this act.

Mr. Hodges was and is the attorney for the defendant; Mr. Burrows was and still is the attorney for the plaintiffs.

It is true that an oral statement of the cause of action made in the presence of the court or of the court and the jury is not sufficient to save a fatally defective warrant where no motion to amend is made. But where it is clear that the defendant and his attorney understood what the defendant was called on to answer and that the defendant was not misled because of the insufficient statement in the warrant, a motion to amend so as to cure the defective statement in the warrant should be allowed if made before a motion in arrest of judgment has been sustained.

The assignment of error through which it is insisted that the trial judge erred in overruling plaintiffs' motion to amend the warrant in the Line case and the warrant in the Gardner case is sustained.

Now coming to the merits of the case, Chapter 62 of the Public Acts of 1917 provides in action (Section —) one thereof, "That no person, firm or corporation shall engage in the business of making loans on personal property of wages or salaries without first filing bond as hereinafter required and obtaining a license for the carrying on of such a business." The remainder of that section is with reference to how the applicant shall obtain the license and what he shall do before the license is issued.

Section 2 of said act provides that no license shall be issued to any person to carry on the business as specified in Section 1 of the act until said person shall comply with the requirements of the act which are set out.

Section 3 provides that the bondsman of the applicant may be made parties defendant to the suit against the applicant.

Section 4 provides for the giving of additional bond if required.

Section 5 provides for the keeping of a record of loans act.

Section 6 provides what shall be done when payments are made or loans renewed.

Section 7 required that the record be kept open for inspection, and Section 8 provides that the failure to keep the record as required shall operate ipso facto to revoke the license.

Section 9 provides what fees the applicant may charge and the rate of interest. Section 10 provided what shall be done where excessive charges are made, and Section 11 provides that it shall be unlawful for any licensee to charge any sum for insurance, etc., on property pledged as security. Section 12 provides for the issuing of the license, and Sections 13 and 14 are as follows:

Section 13: Be it further enacted, that if any person, firm or corporation shall engage in the business of making loans as prescribed in Section 1 of this act without first obtaining a license for carrying on such business in the city, town or country in which said business is transacted or shall continue to conduct said business after forfeiture or cancellation of the license under which the same is conducted, such person, each and every member of the such firm, or each and every officer of such a corporation shall forfeit the license and all fees and interest charged on the loan, and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and the grand jury is hereby given inquisitoral power over all violations of the act.

Section 14: Be it further enacted, that if any licensee licensed under the act shall violate any of the provisions of Sections 6, 7, 8 and 9 of this act or shall charge for the making or any loan any rate for interest in excess of 6% per annum, or any fee or bonus in excess of those provided in this act said licensee shall forfeit to the borrower in each and every such case, the principal sum loaned and all fees and interest charged and collected and the license under which said business is conducted shall become ipso facto void.

As above seen, the defendant admitted not having complied with this act. The trial judge correctly found that this advancement made to the plaintiffs were loans and that the transactions did not constitute assignments by the plaintiffs or wages due them to defendant nor did said transaction constitute purchases by defendant of wages owing plaintiffs.

The transaction occurred in this way. One of the plaintiffs would want some money. He would go to the defendant's office which was over Khulman's Drug Store that is located on the corner of Gat and Commerce Streets, made known to the defendant the amount of money that the plaintiff wanted. Defendant would advance that much money, and would require the party seeking the loan to sign a form similar to the one hereto attached.

Notwithstanding these instruments signed recite that each is an absolute and unconditional sale of an account and not a loan or advance of money, the record shows clearly and practically without dispute that the transaction as a loan or an advance of money, and the attorney for defendants concedes in his brief that the trial judge found that the advancement made by the defendant to the plaintiff were loans and we so understand the trial judge holding.

To illustrate, for a loan of $20.00 for thirty days defendant would charge $24.00, and the statement that he would require the plaintiff to sign would show that he owed defendant $24.00. When the Southern Railway Company began to pay its employees twice a month, defendant made loans advanced to plaintiffs due two weeks from each advancement, and he would charge $2.00 for a loan of $20.00 for two weeks (R. 39); in other words defendant charged the plaintiff at the rate of 148%. If, when a loan became due the debtor was not able to pay it or did not want to pay it, if it was for $20.00 for 30 days, he would pay defendant $4.00 and sign another paper similar to that heretofore attached for $24.00. Sometimes several months would pass and the debtor would not pay the principal or the interest. In such case at the end of each month $4.00 would be added to the $24.00 on a new paper made and signed.

The defendant testified that he purchased wages due plaintiff, but records show without contradiction that he seldom ever filled the alleged transfer with the railway company and that the understanding between him and the debtor at the time a paper was signed was that the railroad employee would draw his salary and come to the defendant's office and take up his obligation. Defendant never turned back to any of the plaintiffs any of the obligations to sign them. He kept them on his original examination. Defendant was asked and answered as follows:

Q: "Don't you keep books showing these various transactions?"

A: "No sir."

Q: "Do you keep books at all?"

A: "No books of any kind, no."

Q: "Do you keep anything at all more than these assignments?" (The reference was to papers similar to the one hereto attached.)

A: "That is all." (R. 100.)

Q: "And you don't keep any books where these people or any other people transacting busines with you, could see just the status of their accounts?"

A: Hodges: "It is all admitted that he does not."

Notwithstanding the above, after the court had held defendant liable, and the only question remaining to be decided was the statute of limitations against the collections of usury began to run, when defendant came back to testify in August, he produced books which he testified were the books that he kept when he was dealing with plaintiffs and that they showed all the transactions that he had had with plaintiffs. His attempted explanation of this testimony on the subject given when he was examined in May is equivalent to no explanation.

This case falls square within the rules laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of McKnight vs. State, 143 Tenn. 222. The holding of the Supreme Court in that case is well stated in the syllabus as follows:

"As agreement whereby wage-earner assigned at a discount a portion of his wages to be earned in the future, when not a cloak to cover a loan, is not within the usury laws.

"In a prosecution for violation of the usury laws, the courts will disregard the form and look to the real substance thereof, notwithstanding defendant took assignments of wages to be paid in the future, which on their face were without the usury laws, yet, where used merely as collateral securities, the transactions in reality being loans and the employees being allowed to collect their wages and pay as interest the discounts mentioned in the assignment, the transaction must be deeded loans and within the usury laws, so where defendant for a 2-weeks' use of $25.00 received $1.75 interest, he was liable.

"An indictment charging that defendant on the —— day of July, 1919, before the finding of the indictment did wilfully receive by way of compensation for the use of $25.00 for a period of two weeks the sum of $1.75, etc., is sufficiently specifically as to matter of time, and will support a conviction of usury.

"Where defendant made usurious loans secured by salary assignments he cannot escape liability on the ground that Thompson Shannons Code, Sections 6732, 6733, (Relation to Usury) were repealed by Acts 1917, chapter 62, relating to the lending of money on personal property, wages, or salary, it appearing that the defendant did not obtain a license under the latter act so as to come within the terms of its protection."

We are not called upon to decide in these cases whether the defendant is guilty of a violation of usury laws. It is clear that he was engaged in the business of making loans on the wages and salaries of persons, including plaintiffs, without first filing bond and obtaining a license as required by Chapter 62 of the Acts 1917, and that the papers or contracts which he required his customers to sign were simply cloaks used in an effort to cover the real transactions that he was having.

As seen by Section 13 of said act it is provided that any person engaging in making of loans on the wages or salaries of the persons to whom the loans are made without first obtaining the license and complying with the provisions of said act shall forfeit the license (loan) and all fees and interest charged on the loan, and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.

We are of the opinion that plaintiffs are entitled to the benefits of said act and that each is entitled to recover from defendants the total amount paid by said defendant, including the principal, interest and attorney fees.

It results that all four judgments of the trial court are reversed. The cases are remanded. Each plaintiff will be permitted upon motion being duly made to amend his warrant by interlining in the face thereof at the proper place the words: "In violation of Chapter 62 of the Acts of Legislature of Tennessee for 1917." Any such other amendments as may be necessary and proper will also be permitted.

After said amendments have been made the trial court will, by reference to the clerk or in such other manner as to the trial judge may seem proper, ascertain the exact amount paid by each of the plaintiffs to defendants principal, interest, and attorney fees, and judgment will be rendered in favor of each of the plaintiffs against the defendant for the amount so found to have been paid by such plaintiff to defendant. Defendant will also pay cost that he has accrued in the trial court and also the cost of the appeal.

Reverse and remand.

Clark,
Judge.

NOTICE

It is the desire of the National Executive Committee that any member of our State or National organizations engaged in business in any town or city in which the banks have entered the small loan field to communicate that information to the National Secretary as soon as possible. We would like to know the name of the bank and where located, when it entered the small loan business, what its experience has been to date, the re-payment method, the security required, interest charged, one, two or three signature paper; are they taking care of the class of people who ordinarily patronize small loan companies. All the information that you can supply on this subject will be appreciated. If any banks have entered the small loan field and later abandoned it, the facts concerning the experiment will be very helpful to the national officers in the work contemplated.

GEORGIA

The regular meeting of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association was held in the new and beautiful Atlanta Biltmore, on Friday, October 10, 1924, at 1 p. m. A very satisfying chicken dinner was served to the membership and five guests: Miss Helen Schaid; Judge Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice Supreme Court of Georgia; Tillou Von Nunes, prominent Atlanta attorney; Howard Brown, of Chicago; Paul Crutchfield, of Atlanta.

During the course of the dinner a very interesting conversation took place, led by Judge Russell, regarding the various species of southern trees, of which Judge Russell states he has planted during the past forty years more than 420, and all of which are still alive and have helped beautify the city of Athens. The conversation then led to the old cities and towns in the state of Georgia, the history of which Judge Russell seemed to be familiar with, and his memory for dates and incidents relating to these old cities proved interesting and instructive.

Directly after dinner the meeting was called to order by Chairman Madison, who presented in behalf of the A. I. L. A., a gift of friendship and esteem to Judge Russell, who accepted and thanked his many new friends which he made at the National Convention in Baltimore. This was followed by three tenor solos by Mr. Paul Crutchfield, accompanied on the piano by Miss Helen Schaid. Mr. Crutchfield has a very rich tenor voice. One of his selections was chosen with rare judgment as it had to do altogether with a tree, and was sung directly to Judge Russell. The title of the song was "Woodman, Spare that Tree."

A great big tree grows near our house,
It's been there quite some time.
It's just a plain old slippery elm
But very hard to climb.

And when my wife gets after me
Up in that tree I roost.
I go up like a healthy squirrel,
And never need no boost.

The other day a woodman came
To cut that refuge down,
And carve it into kindling wood,
To peddle around my town.

I said to him, "I pray thee
Cease, desist, refrain and stop.
Lay down that forest razor, man,
Chop not a single chop.

Woodman, Woodman, spare that tree,
Touch not a single bow.
For years it has protected me,
And I'll protect it now.

Go cut an oak or birch or pine,
But not that slippery elm of mine.
It's the only tree my wife can't climb,
Woodman, spare that tree."

Hon. Tillou Von Nunes made a short address, complimenting the association upon their publicity work and the good it has done and is doing, and he advised that the publicity work be continued; that while he and those engaged in the business realized that three and a half per cent is a just rate, fair to the lender and borrower due to heavy losses, overhead, etc., a great many of the prominent men of the city did not, and needed education along these lines, and that our publicity advertising before it is dispensed with should be one of rate justification. While we are putting one phase of our business successfully across, we must not lose sight of the importance of the other. He further advised the membership to keep out of the courts as much as possible and to sue only as a last possible resort.

Mr. Howard Brown, of Chicago, was then called upon for a few words, and he stated that one of the important things that the Georgia Association, Atlanta in particular where there are eleven members, needed, was an adequate exchange bureau. He related the success of these exchange bureaus in the various cities throughout the east and north, and he stated that members in these various associations who were at first reluctant in joining are the ones who now talk most favorably for them and would put up the biggest fight should the exchange bureaus for any reason disorganize, and that it was those who so bitterly opposed establishing the exchange bureaus who are now its strongest supporters.

Mr. Steimle and Mr. Madison, delegates, then reported on the National Convention. Mr. Steimle, official delegate's report is as follows:

Report of the Tenth Annual Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association, Held in the Southern Hotel, Baltimore, Md., September 24-27, 1924.

The Convention was opened by Chairman Mueller promptly at 10 a. m. on the morning of Wednesday, September 24th. There were about two hundred members present. After the invocation by Rev. J. N. Stewart, Howard W. Jackson, Mayor of Baltimore, and Howard Bryant, prominent attorney and Acting Mayor in the absence of Mayor Jackson, delivered addresses of welcome that without doubt were sincere and from the heart, and while they did not turn over the key to the city to the Industrial Lenders as is the usual custom, it was because they did not have a key, but said the city was wide open for us all. Mr. Bryant also stated that he had a very big cellar and that there were many good things there. Anyone who felt the need of a stimulant was welcome and should they run afoul of the police they were to just call upon him and he would see that they had the best cell in the jail. Balance of the morning was taken up with reports of the various committees, which I do not believe would be of any interest at this meeting, other than report of National Treasurer Zumpfe, who reported a balance of about $5,000, and that of Mr. R. F. Hartz, National Publicity Chairman, who related in detail what the various state associations have done in having published national publicity advertisements, and I wish to state that Georgia, in proportion to her size, stood well up at the top. Meeting adjourned at 12 o'clock.

Wednesday at 12:30 we met in the convention dining room where a very elaborate luncheon was served by the Maryland Association, and we had the pleasure of hearing Hon. Wm. F. Brœning, an eloquent orator, then we were entertained by Hon. LaFayette Temple, attorney, whose speech was altogether one of entertainment. He stood there for more than an hour and as fast as he could talk told us stories, in several dialects, that were all new and refreshing. Two of these stories I can remember as they were told in such a way as to bring tears of laughter. There were two colored servants who were very fond of music. They attended a band concert and were listening, standing on the fringe of the crowd. One of these colored girls said to her companion: "That's swell music, I think it's a selection from Lucia." The other one replied: "No, Mandy, it's a selection from the Dead March," but since they could not agree one of them decided she would go over to the band stand and find out, having observed a sign nailed there. She approached the sign and read what was thereon, then coming back, said: "Mary, we are both wrong, that's a 'Refrain from Spitting.'" The other story was staged in a little southern city where the inhabitants took considerable pride in the purity of their drinking water. An Irish cop in making his rounds about the city reservoir noticed a little head bobbing up and down in the water, and after a while he discovered it was a little pickaninny taking a swim. The cop hollered at him and explained it was the reservoir of drinking water he was swimming in. The little fellow hollered back and said: "Mister, it's all right, I'm not using any soap." After this entertainment which kept the audience in an uproar for more than an hour, we again convened at 2:15 p.m., when several more reports and papers were read. While these papers were interesting and carried messages of importance I will not attempt to report on them for it was difficult to hear what was said.

Meeting adjourned at 5 p.m. until Thursday morning, which meeting I believe was the most interesting of all as there were several papers read that were beneficial and educational. Mr. Arthur L. Wick, assistant to Mr. Watts of the Mackey organization, with headquarters in Philadelphia, gave a very lengthy and interesting report on the value and progress of the credit exchange bureaus. According to Mr. Wick's report, a majority of the cities affiliated with the various state associations have formed clearance houses or credit exchange bureaus, and Mr. Wick stated that he wondered how they have ever gotten along without them, for not only have they saved the industrial lenders thousands and thousands of dollars but the situation has now reached the point where the borrowers of these various cities have about given up all attempts to get or have more than one loan at a time. He also stated that they have done more for the welfare of the borrowing public than any one thing except the uniform law itself, and at a very nominal sum of money from the individual office. He stated that those who have not such an exchange are years behind the time for they are losing sight of one of the fundamentals of our business.

Next on the program was one of the best papers, in my opinion, read at the convention, not because he is chairman of your association, but because he really said something—Mr. Madison's address on "The Value of, and How to Bring About Coöperation Between Industrial Loan Managers and Retail Credit Men." This address was delivered with eloquence and I believe if you were to ask any of the members present who heard it they would tell you as I have that it was one of the best. Mr. Madison's address was followed by that of Mr. David J. Woodlock, Secretary and Treasurer of the Retail Credit Men's National Association, with headquarters in St. Louis, Mo. This man is a go-getter, and he stated that the only way in which there could be harmony, understanding and coöperation between the industrial lenders and retail credit men was through personal contact brought about by our associations joining their various city organizations and credit information exchange bureaus, and the exchange of credit information, and in this manner educate the credit man as to the nature, purpose and reason of our business. Mr. Woodlock further stated that he is continuously addressing various city and state Retail Credit Men's Associations, and that he intended from now on to give his organization the benefit of his knowledge regarding the high character of the loan man and the business in which he is engaged.

After a few other interesting papers were read it was announced by the national chairman that the convention would assemble at 7 p.m. at the banquet hall. There were about 400 guests, at least 100 ladies, present. After a delightful and appetizing dinner we made ourselves comfortable to enjoy the oratorical eloquence of three very gifted speakers, his Excellency Albert C. Ritchie, Governor of Maryland, Hon. Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice Supreme Court of Georgia, and Mr. A. S. Goldsborough, Secretary of the Baltimore Association of Commerce. Governor Ritchie was proud of the fact that Baltimore was so fortunate as to have the National Convention of Industrial Lenders in her fair city, approved of our business and congratulated us upon having placed it on such a high plane, and after several more complimentary remarks was followed by the Hon. Richard B. Russell, who was introduced by the toastmaster as "the most beloved Georgia Cracker in the state of Georgia." Several stories were related by the toastmaster about Judge Russell and his family of eighteen children. The Judge responded nobly and stated that while he did have a large family he was home only on Sundays and rainy days. He then rendered a most beautiful tribute to his wife, which won the hearts of all and brought tears to the eyes of many. Judge Russell stated in part that our business was a noble and necessitous one, and that we did more good and were of more help to the working man than any business he could mention, and further that we were in position to do more good and that it was part of our business to spread cheer among the depressed, and that without the legitimate lenders the world would not be such a good place to live in. You will get the speeches of these prominent speakers ver batim in the year book and I will not attempt to even touch on what was said. Judge Russell however won the hearts of all and it was a privilege and an honor to have been in his presence. Mr. A. S. Goldsborough followed Judge Russell. There is no question but that Mr. Goldsborough is one of the most forceful and eloquent speakers in the country today, and his remarks were all highly complimentary and sincere. The messages that all three speakers delivered made a deep and gratifying impression upon all who had the privilege of hearing them.

Following the speeches the floor was cleared and all present who desired danced until 1 a.m. There were also during intermissions several specialty dancing acts by professional entertainers, and at 1 a.m. all left to retire, tired but happy. I might also mention that each of the ladies present received a beautiful souvenir in the form of a vanity case which was very much appreciated. During the days the ladies were entertained by being shown about the city in sightseeing busses at their convenience and at the expense of the Maryland Association.

We were instructed to meet at 9 a.m. Friday, on board one of the Old Bay Line steamships for a cruise down Chesapeake Bay, and that all business would be conducted aboard ship. We got away promptly at 10 a.m. Meeting convened on one of the lower decks at about 10:30. The day was cloudy and there was considerable wind which made it rather uncomfortable to stay out on deck. However, a great many did stay on deck and received the benefit of plenty of unadulterated sea air. This meeting too was very interesting because of the fact that it set a precedent, it being the first industrial lenders meeting to be held on board ship, and because there were elected the first high seas national chairman and officers, and also the adoption of a code of ethics, which, if each member will strictly adhere to, will make better men of us all and place the business on a very high plane. This was followed by a lively discussion of the national dues, led by Mr. Herron of Philadelphia, Mr. A. H. Williams of Chicago, Mr. Dyer of Ohio, Col. Pond of Ohio, Mr. Harbeson of Chicago, Mr. Zumpfe of Indianapolis, Mr. Moss of Philadelphia, and Mr. Watts of Philadelphia. A report on amount of dues paid in by the various chain organizations and individuals was read by Mr. Harbison, and it was a surprise and a revelation to those present to learn how little the majority of the big organizations were paying into the national treasury, while a few of the chain organizations and individuals had been paying the maximum, regardless of size of office. Several suggestions were made by the above-mentioned men for obtaining sufficient money in the treasury to permit the national organization to properly function. All suggestions were meritorious. It was finally decided, through proper motion, that the individual dues be increased fifty per cent. However, this was not obligatory.

The nominating committee proposed the following slate: National Chairman: Mr. Aufderheide, Indianapolis, Ind.; National Treasurer: Mr. Tate Harrison, Waterloo, Iowa; National Secretary: Mr. George W. Kehr, Harrisburg, Pa.; Finance: Mr. W. P. Woll, Chicago; Law: Mr. F. R. Habachek, Minneapolis, Minn.; Legislation: Mr. C. H. Watts, Philadelphia; Membership: Geo. Hodson, New York City; Publicity: Mr. R. F. Hartz, Indianapolis, Ind., who were unanimously elected. A rising vote of thanks, with three ringing cheers, was accorded Dr. Mueller, retiring chairman, also a valuable gold watch was presented to him as a token of friendship and appreciation for his untiring efforts in behalf of the association during the past year. Next was report of your secretary on the Georgia publicity campaign, which was followed by a brief report by Dr. Louis N. Robinson, who for the past two years has been making a survey of the small loan business for the Russell Sage Foundation. Dr. Robinson stated that he was sorry to disappoint but the survey had not been fully completed, much to his regret, but he expected to have it in shape for publication in the very near future. After hearing a few other reports meeting adjourned.

We had a very fine luncheon and chicken dinner aboard ship, and after dinner had the pleasure of sailing up the Chesapeake in the moonlight, docking in Baltimore at 10 p.m. Mr. Madison, Mr. Lyons, Mr. Dobyns, Mr. Mahoney, Mr. Brown, Mr. MacMurtry, Mr. Applegate and several others played poker and sang old-time southern melodies and made speeches until 3 a.m. when the house detective put them to bed.

The official attendance at the National Convention was not announced but I would guess that there were approximately 300 present. State winning the national cup for largest attendance was not announced. This information however will be furnished in next issue of the Lenders News. The eleventh annual convention it was announced will be held about the first week in September, 1925, in Providence, R. I.

It was our privilege before the convention closed to try to express, with a rising vote of thanks, our deep and sincere appreciation of the courtesy, zeal and enthusiasm which two members of the Maryland Association, Mr. Howard Mattingly, President of the Master Loan Service, Inc., and Mr. Hougham, exhibited in providing every possible comfort and convenience for the welfare of the guests. The success of the Baltimore convention was due in a large measure to the untiring and unselfish efforts of these two boys to make each individual present feel that the Maryland Association and the city of Baltimore were honored to have him as a guest. The Maryland Industrial Lenders Association and the American Industrial Lenders Association are to be congratulated upon this wonderful Tenth Annual Convention, which, it was the consensus of opinion, the best convention held to date.

Mr. Madison stated that the outstanding features of the convention were the adoption of a code of ethics and the address by Mr. Woodlock, of St. Louis, Mo., National Secretary of the Associated Retail Credit Men's Association, and the rare judgment used in the selection of prominent speakers. Mr. Mattingly, Mr. Hougham and all members of the Maryland Association were highly complimented for their handling of the many details which made the tenth annual convention head and shoulders above any convention held in the past.

Discussion of the exchange bureau then consumed balance of the afternoon. It was finally moved by Mr. Snyder and properly seconded that the Chair appoint a committee to work out the details in connection with getting the exchange bureau started. The Chair appointed Mr. Zachary, Mr. Davis, Mr. Herbert, Mr. Snyder and Mr. Steimle.

There being no further business, meeting adjourned at 5:30.

A. B. Madison, Chairman.

MARYLAND

The Maryland Industrial Lenders Association held a short business meeting at 8:15 p.m. on Tuesday, October 14, in the Board Room of the M & M Building, 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

Among those present were: J. D. Goldrick, Roy T. Baseman, H. C. Moore, Lee Pumphrey, Lewis Neymeyer, Clifford Smith, H. T. Mattingly, C. Howard Hood, A. E. Potter, J. E. Turner, E. E. Hougham, Herman Lappe and Glen S. Knapp.

On motion the minutes of September meeting were approved as distributed.

Report of Officers

Treasurer Goldrick reports cash in Treasury, $375.

Secretary Moore reports membership of 20 with all state and national dues paid to date, 9 of which are members of the exchange. Six members are eligible for membership in the A. I. L. A. This information has been passed along to National Secretary Kehr under date of October 14.

The Secretary read a letter from Mr. Wm. J. Barrett, Jr., of the Bank Commissioner staff who advised there was $2,139,002.49 invested in the small loan business in the state of Maryland as of August 30, 1924.

Chairman Goldrick of the finance committee states that he was not in a position at this time to give a detail account of the expenditures in connection of the A. I. L. A. Convention. The cost being approximately $5,300, and it will be necessary that a fund of $650 be raised to settle all expenses.

According to the arrangements made at the April, 1924, monthly meeting each office was to be assessed $100 towards the expenses of the A. I. L. A. Convention and if necessary contribute up to $2.00 per $1,000 according to the investment of his office covering year of 1923.

A general discussion took place by all members present as to how much each office should be asked to contribute to make up this shortage and it was agreed that each office would contribute 50 cents per $1,000 according to his investment covering year 1923.

In order to have sufficient money to take care of our obligation Secretary Moore was instructed to notify each member accordingly and ask them to contribute proportionately.

Mr. Hougham of the Exchange Committee reports the exchange has been in operation since Oct. 6, and it is surprising to know as to how many borrowers are doubled up with 3 or more companies.

To date the exchange has been the means of locating several skips, also the working address of slow accounts.

All members of the association who are in good standing are eligible to membership in the exchange.

Prospective members are requested to communicate with Messrs. E. E. Hougham, H. C. Moore or H. T. Mattingly.

No further business to transact, upon motion of Mr. Hood, seconded by Mr. Potter, the meeting adjourned.

H. C. Moore, Secretary.

PERSONAL LOAN DEPARTMENT STARTED BY LOCAL BANK

Union Trust, Hudson National Inaugurates New Departure in Banking System

The Union Trust and Hudson County National Bank, Bayonne branch, has organized a personal loan department, which is now in operation at their new and commodious building at Broadway and Twenty-third Street. In creating this department the bank is the first financial institution in the State of New Jersey to inaugurate a plan to assist those in need of funds and who find it difficult to borrow except through loan companies.

The plan as outlined by the bank is a simple one, enabling the individual who is in need of money to obtain a loan ranging from $25 to $300 at the legal bank rate of interest, which is 6 per cent per year. Loans may be obtained to pay legal debts, insurance premium, taxes, interest on mortgages, expenses incurred by illness, births or deaths, operations, dental work, educational and other purposes worthy of consideration. Through the personal loan department the borrower can arrange to make weekly, bi-monthly or monthly deposits, thus enabling him to accumulate sufficient funds to pay his note when it becomes due with as little inconvenience as possible.

Loans made through this new department will be based on the character of the borrower, his honesty, moral responsibility and stability of income. In addition to this, the bank is secured by the financial responsibility of one or two co-makers, whose signatures are required on the note; the number of co-makers depending on their individual worth and size of the loan. The borrower need not be a depositor of the bank at the time he applies for the loan.

In commenting on the inauguration of the personal loan department, Vice-President Conway said: "In establishing this department we were influenced by the fact that Bayonne is one of the country's largest industrial centers, its population consisting of a great number of wage earners who are barred from borrowing through regular banking channels. This is a new departure in banking, and should result in a closer relationship between the masses and the bank, particularly assisting that class of people to develop into systematic savers. Another feature of this plan which will prove of great benefit to the borrower is the method used in accepting payment by the bank, making him a member of our savings department, and eventually receiving interest on his deposits at the rate of 4 per cent."

Mr. Morris Bernhard will be in charge of the personal loan department.

167 Ask Injunctions Against Salary Brokers, Alleging Usurious Rate of Interest Charged

THE LIBRARY OF THE NOV 29 1924 UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

COURT IS ASKED TO STOP BROKERS FROM COLLECTING

100 Additional Petitions of Same Nature Are to Be Filed To-day in Fulton Superior Court

CLAIM THAT 15,000 PATRONIZE BROKERS

Both Letter and Spirit of Law Regulating Such Business Violated, Defendants Declare

Placing 48 salary-assignment brokers in the roles of defendants, petitions were filed by 167 plaintiffs in Fulton superior Court Wednesday afternoon, each of the plaintiffs alleging that the designated salary brokers had charged usurious rates of interest in their operations and each praying the court to restrain and enjoin the defendants from collecting the salary assignments, either by filing the original papers with the assignor's company or by garnishment proceedings.

The 167 petitions for injunction were filed through Attorney Henry B. Hicks, who has offices in the Citizens and Southern Bank building. Attorney Hicks stated Wednesday night that he had prepared 100 additional petitions from as many plaintiffs, which will be filed early to-day. The petitions filed Wednesday formed a mass of documents of such bulk as to require the services of three men to transport them to the courthouse and every available deputy clerk was pressed into service in recording the suits.

15,000 Clients of Brokers

Attorney Hicks declared that 15,000 citizens of Atlanta are doing business with salary-assignment brokers, and that the 48 individuals and firms made defendants in the suits filed Wednesday represented less than half the number of brokers who are operating this class of business in Atlanta at the present time. He stated that the results of the suits being filed would test the legality of the salary-assignment business as it is being operated in Georgia.

Setting forth in their petitions for injunctions that the salary brokers are operating so as to avoid the letter and the spirit of all laws regulating such business, the 167 plaintiffs include the following allegations in their prayers to the court:

Allegations of Plaintiffs

That the original cash transaction was made after the plaintiff had signed a form in blank.

The "the defendant left said blank spaces with the intent and purpose of filling in said blanks himself whenever petitioner should fail to pay said principal loan and the interest thereon, or pay the interest thereon and renew the same, and that the defendant left said spaces blank with the intention and purpose of thereby avoiding any question as to whether said wages were already earned.

"That at the time the defendant required him (the plaintiff) to sign said purported assignment, defendant did not intend to notify petitioner's employers of the fact of such purported assignment for sale, but intended for petitioner to draw his own wages and come and pay said loan and interest to defend, or renew the same.

Rate Declared Illegal

"That the rates of interest contracted for, reserved, charged and received on such loans are illegal and usurious, and well known by the defendant to so be.

"That the aforesaid purported assignments and sales signed in blank as aforesaid are not bona fide sales and assignments of choses in action; that at the time of executing the same, the relationship of debtor and creditor was the foundation of the transaction and contract, and that the said purported sale and assignment is purely a scheme and device contrived for the purpose of covering up and disguising the true nature of the contract and transaction."

The petitioners further set forth that it was the custom of their employers to discharge such employees as had salary assignments filed against them or garnishments filed as a result of such contracts.

The suits further charge that the plaintiffs were caused to continue renewal of the salary assignments through fear of exposure that would cause them to be discharged by their employers.

"Petitioner shows that, on account of the excessive interest charged by defendant and others of its ilk, with whom petitioner has become involved in the same manner as set forth in this complaint, he has borrowed from one to pay the other so as to protect his position.

Threatened to Tell Employer

"Petitioner avers that although defendant has not presented said purported assignments to petitioner's employers, he has repeatedly threatened to do so unless petitioner continue to pay the illegal and usurious interest on same."

The petitions pray that the defendants be compelled to deliver such assignments as they now hold, and that the court declare them illegal and void and canceled. They also pray that pending hearing on the petitions, the defendants be restrained and enjoined from filing notice of assignments with petitioner's employers or from attempting to collect on the contracts in any manner whatsoever.

The salary assignment brokers made defendants in the petitions filed Wednesday are as follows:

operating under the Act of June 4, 1919, P. L. 375. On May 10, 1922, the plaintiff borrowed from the defendant $125.00, giving as a security for the repayment of the loan a judgment note which was afterwards filed in the Prothonotary's office and judgment entered thereon to No. 348 June Term, 1923. In making this loan the plaintiff agreed to repay to the defendant the sum of $125.00, "with interest at three and one-half per centum per month." The note further stated that—

"It is understood that the undersigned shall pay this obligation by paying the sum of $125.00 this day lent, in eleven monthly installments of $10.00, and one installment of $15.00, together with interest, at the rate of three and one-half per centum per month on the unpaid balance of the loan hereby evidenced, until said loan, with interest, is fully paid, together with any costs or attorney's collection fees which may accrue by law of contract under this obligation."

On January 22, 1924, a writ of fieri facias was issued upon the above stated judgment in which a credit of $37.00 was allowed to the plaintiff. The plaintiff paid to the defendant $123.65, consisting of $88.00 principal and $48.65 interest, whereupon the writ of execution was stayed. Thereafter the plaintiff brought suit before Alderman John P. Hallman, claiming the right to recover the interest of $48.65, so, as he alleged, unlawfully collected, and, in addition, $50.00 as a penalty, as provided in the Act of June 4, 1919, P. L. 375. The alderman entered judgment fo the plaintiff whereupon an appeal was taken by the defendant to this court.

The plaintiff's amended statement was filed July 2, 1924, setting forth the facts substantially as we have stated them, and claiming to recover the sum of $98.65, being $50.00, penalty and $48.65 interest which the plaintiff claims to be usurious.

The defendant filed an affidavit of defense in the nature of a demurrer claiming that the plaintiff's statement as filed evidences no cause of action in law for the reasons, (1) the plaintiff does not show any right of action against the defendant; (2) the averments of fact in plaintiff's statement disclose no illegal act on the part of the defendent. The defendant, a Pennsylvania corporation, operating under the Act of June 4, 1919, P. L. 375, was wholly within its legal rights in collecting the interest as alleged in plaintiff's statement, and no right of action raises to the plaintiff by reason thereof; (3) the defendant's acts were wholly within its rights under the aforesaid act of assembly.

As we have stated, the defendant was licensed to do business under the provisions of the Act of 1919, to which we have referred, section 2 of which, P. L. 380, provides:

"Any person, persons, copartnership, association, or corporation who shall obtain a license in accordance with the provisions of section one of this act, shall be entitled to loan money in sums of three hundred ($300) dollars or less, either with or without security, to individuals pressed by lack of funds to meet imediate necessities, at his, their, or its place of business, for which said license is issued, and to charge the borrowers thereof, for its use or loan, interest at a rate not to exceed three and one-half (3½) per centum per month. No fees, fines, or other charges, either in addition to or as a part of the abov specified interest, shall be charged or collected under any pretext whatsoever."

It is further provided that interes shall not be payable in advance or compounded and shall be computed only o unpaid balances for the time that ha elapsed at date of payment. It is furthe provided that if interest in excess of tha prescribed shall be received by any licensee the said licensee shall thereupon los his right to receive or collect the interes allowed under this act and shall be entitled to recover from the borrower onl the amount actually loaned, together wit interest at the rate of six per centum pe annum upon unpaid balances. The ac further provides:

"Any person, borrowing money fro any licensee under this act, who shall b charged and pay any interest in exces of that prescribed and allowed by th provisions of this act, shall be entitled t recover back from the lender, by actio at law begun at any time within tw years from date of the last payment, an and all sums of money so charged an paid in excess of the amount of th original loan, together with interest at th rate of six per centum per annum upo unpaid balances up to the date of fina payment of said loan, and in additio fifty ($50) dollars as a penalty, to b paid to the borrower."

The pending action was brought unde the last quoted provision of the Act o 1919. The Act of 1915, of which thi is an amendment, is constitutional; Commonwealth v. Puder, 261 Pa. 129. Th principal question raised at the argumen was whether the defendant was entitle to collect interest at the rate of three an one-half per cent. upon its contract wit the plaintiff after said contract had bee filed in the Prothonotary's office an judgment entered thereon. It was contended by counsel for the plaintiff tha after judgment the defendant was entitled only to interest at the rate of six per cent, and, therefore, this action woul lie because more than six per cent wa collected, the plaintiff being compelle to pay three and one-half per cen monthly from the date judgment wa entered upon the contract until final payment in January or February, 1924. I support of this contention the plainti refers us to Altoona v. Morrison, 24 Pa Superior Court Reports, page 417, whic holds that under the Act of May 2 1889, Article 15, P. L. 277, regulating th incorporation and government of cities o the third class, a city may, after a lie for taxes has been filed, add the penalty of one per cent per month on the amoun of the lien until judgment is entered o the lien, but thereafter it is only entitle to interest at six per cent on the amoun of the judgment. A careful reading o the opinion of Presiding Judge Bell rendered in this case and affirmed by th Superior Court, demonstrates that thi authority supports the contention of th defendant rather than the plaintiff. I appears that the one per cent per mont allowed by the said Act of 1889, is imposed as a penalty for non-payment. Section 22 of said Act of 1889 provides that judgment and process shall be with like affect as in other cases. Commenting thereupon, Judge Bell says, page 419:

"What is one of the effects of a judgment? That the plaintiff thereafter is entitled to interest on the amount of his judgment until the same is paid. 'Lawful interest shall be allowed to the creditor for the sum or value he obtained judgment for, from the time the said judgment was obtained till the time of sale or till satisfaction be made:' Act of 1700, section 2, 1 Purdon's Digest, 1063. 'Interest is a legal incident to every judgment:' Fitzgerald v. Caldwell, 4 Dallas, 251.

"The city, then, by the language of said section 22, would be entitled to interest after the entry of judgment. It could scarcely be claimed that in addition to such interest the city would likewise be entitled to the one per cent. per month penalty. 'Interest is the penalty for nonpayment,' .... and to add a further penalty of one per cent a month would be piling a penalty on a penalty, procedure certainly not allowable unless rendered mandatory on courts by the plainest and most specific legislative intent."

It thus appears that, in the Altoona case, from which we have just quoted, the city endeavored to impose a penalty upon the defendant of one per cent a month, after judgment was entered against the defendant upon scire facias sur municipal lien, upon which, under the Act of 1700, the city was entitled to interest at the rate of six per cent. To have allowed the claim of the city would have enabled it to collect, not only legal interest at six per cent upon its judgment, but in addition thereto a penalty of one per cent a month, which could not be allowed "unless rendered mandatory on the courts by the plainest and most specific legislative intent."

The case at bar, which we have under consideration, differs from the Altoona case in this: the defendant in this case was authorized by the Act of 1919 from which we have quoted, to make the loan to the plaintiff and to charge interest at the rate of three and one-half per cent per month; the plaintiff contracted to make the loan and to pay interest at the rate of three and one-half per cent per month until the loan was fully paid. The loan was not fully paid until after judgment was entered upon the contract between the parties and until execution was issued thereupon. The plaintiff's statement fails to disclose any violation of the Act of 1919, upon which his action is based, and therefore is not entitled to recover back the interest paid nor the penalty provided in said act, as a punishment for those who violate its provisions. We think, therefore, the demurrer must be sustained, and we direct judgment to be entered for the defendant.

BENEFICIAL LOAN & INVESTMENT CO. V. IRA. (NO. 10759)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. May 5, 1924)

A transaction by which plaintiff company took notes bearing 12 per cent from defendant for $365, and gave two checks, one for $300 and the other for $65, latter being returned to plaintiff to apply on alleged subscription to its stock, help under evidence to be within prohibition of C. L. §§ 3781-3801, invalidating loans for $300 or less if bearing more than 12 per cent interest.

2. Appeal and error Key 170(2)—Constitutionality of statute cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

The constitutionality of a statute could not be raised for first time on appeal, where question was not called in any manner to attention of trial court.

Department 3.

Error to County Court, City and County of Denver; G. A. Luxford, Judge.

Action by the Beneficial Loan & Investment Company, a corporation, against John W. Ira. Judgment for defendant. On plaintiff's application for supersedeas. Supersedeas denied, and judgment affirmed.

Wayne A. Gunkle, of Denver, for defendant in error.

Sheafor, J. Suit brought before a justice of the peace in replevin by the plaintiff company against the defendant to recover possession of an automobile. The judgment was in favor of defendant for possession, or its value—$300. Plaintiff appealed to the county court, where trial was had to the court without a jury and a like judgment rendered. Plaintiff brings the case here for review, and asks that the case be determined upon its application for a supersedeas.

The facts are as follows:

On or about February 13, 1923, the defendant was the owner of the automobile in question, for which he paid $300, and upon which he gave the plaintiff a chattel mortgage to secure six certain promissory notes executed and delivered by defendant to plaintiff, aggregating the sum of $365. The notes and mortgage bore date February 13, 1923; the first of the notes becoming due matured in one month after the date thereof. None has been paid. When the first one became due and was not paid, plaintiff took possession of the automobile. The notes provided that they should bear interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum from date until paid, and if interest or principal was not paid at maturity then accrued interest and principal to draw interest at the rate of 24 per cent per annum, together with all attorney's fees and other costs and charges for their collection.

The defendant claims that on the date mentioned he borrowed $300 from the plaintiff, for which the notes and mortgage were given, and that he borrowed it to pay for the car in question, while the plaintiff claims that it was lent him on that date $365, and gave him two checks for the same, one for $300, and the other for $65. The record discloses that defendant indorsed and cashed the $300 check, and that he indorsed the $65 check and returned it to the plaintiff. It appears that the plaintiff paid about $19.60 for insurance on the automobile, and for filing and recording a bill of sale and chattel mortgage about $2.85.

It further appears from the record that the plaintiff refused to make the loan to the defendant unless he signed a subscription agreement for 300 shares of the preferred stock of plaintiff company, par value $1 per share, payable $65 in cash at the time, and the balance in 30 installments of $8 each, which it appears he did, the company claiming that it made no loans of $300 or less to any one, unless the borrower subscribed for stock in the company. It further appears that the company in the prosecution of its business makes loans for more, as well as for less than $300. Prior to the making of this loan plaintiff had procured a license and given a bond for the year 1923 as required by the provisions of chapter 159, Session Laws 1919 (Compiled Laws 1921, c. 63), and at the time of the making of the loan plaintiff delivered to defendant a statement of the loan as required by that act, upon which was printed a copy of section 13 thereof.

[1] The defendant claims that when this loan was made the plaintiff was opertaing under and pursuant to the provisions of that act, and as a licensee thereunder; that as a consequence the contract of loan is void, and plaintiff is entitled to recover nothing, nor can plaintiff enforce payment of the money lent or foreclose the chattel mortgage on defendant's car.

The plaintiff contends: (1) That the loan in question was for more than $300, and therefore does not come within the prohibition of chapter 159, Laws 1919 (Compiled Laws 1921, c. 63). (2) That, even though the loan be considered as one for $300, or less, still the transaction was a valid one, because plaintiff had the right to refuse to loan its money to any one, but a given class of persons. (3) That the subject-matter of sections 13 and 17 of chapter 159 is not indicated in the title of the act, and therefore contravenes section 2, article 5, of the Constitution.

It is perfectly clear from the evidence that the actual amount lent by plaintiff to defendant was $300. The $65 were in fact retained by plaintiff as the first or cash payment, on defendant's subscription agreement for the purchase of stock of the plaintiff company, and if we assume that the stock transaction was valid, then plaintiff simply paid for the insurance on the car and for recording the papers out of its own funds, without authority from defendant so to do. If, however, we should find that the stock transaction was entered into as a subterfuge in an effort on the part of plaintiff to evade the provisions of the law, and charge and receive more than 1 per cent per month, then the plaintiff fares no better. The notes bearing 24 per cent per annum after maturity are plainly unenforceable.

We think the court did not err in holding that the transaction, as shown by the evidence, came within the prohibition of Session Laws 1919, c. 159.

[2] The assignments of error that the act in question is unconstitutional cannot be considered by us. The record fails to disclose that this question was in any manner called to the attention of the trial court. The plaintiff could have raised the question at the trial by an objection to evidence, or by appropriate motion, and, having failed to raise it in any manner there, cannot raise it here for the first time. This has been so often decided by this court that a citation of the cases is unnecessary.

Finding no error in the record, the supersedeas is denied, and the judgment of the county court affirmed.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED FAVORING REEVES CANDIDACY

Resolution

Whereas, A Chairman and other officers of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, are to be elected for the ensuing year at Convention to be held by said Association in the City of Philadelphia, December 3d, 1924, and

Whereas, We the members of the Pittsburgh Industrial Lenders Association, having high regard for our fellow citizen and associate, Mr. P. B. Reeves and desiring to have a Pittsburgh Lender serve our association as Chairman, we have prevailed upon him to permit his name to be put forth as candidate for the office of Chairman of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association and Mr. Reeves now being Vice-Chairman and it being the custom to elect the Vice-Chairman to the office of Chairman for the coming year. Be it

Resolved, That all members of the Pennsylvania Association are hereby urged and requested to support P. B. Reeves with their votes and influence for the above office. Be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Pittsburgh Association be instructed to send copies of these resolutions to each member of the Executive Committee and National Secretary.

The above resolutions passed unanimously at a meeting of the Pittsburgh Industrial Lenders Association, held in the city of Pittsburgh, October 24, 1924.

Pittsburgh Industrial Lenders Ass'n.
A. H. Thale, Secretary.

REASONS WHY

There isn't a day scarcely that goes by that the National Secretary does not have brought home to him some reason or advantage for membership in our State and National organizations. One of the big reasons and the one that pays dividends in dollars and cents, is the privilege of referring foreign accounts to brother members in cities where skips go and where no other connections are available for the collection of accounts.

Appropos to this question comes the following bit of interesting statistical information which proves the point. For six months, April to September, both inclusive, the Newark office of one of the prominent chain organizations spent $1,016.00 in salary, $144.08 in carfare, a total of $1,160.08 in endeavoring to collect their own and the skip accounts of others referred to them for collection in New York City. The total amount collected during the same period amounted to $2,035.83.

Many who read this and the author is one of them, can be thankful for assistance rendered in the collections in New York City accounts by this firm. The collection of one account of this kind more than pays the dues in many cases which are paid to our State and National organizations. Membership in our State and National Associations brings this service without additional cost although it is a great burden upon the office rendering the service. This reciprocity in the collection of foreign accounts is one of the most valuable assets of State and National organization membership. Non-members are denied this service unless they pay a commission to the collecting company of at least 25%.

A. I. L. A. DIRECTORY

You know that it has been customary to publish in our Year Book each year, a complete list of the names and addresses of our membership, alphabetically arranged according to States and Towns. To save time and expense, we have confined our membership directory strictly to the name of the State, the Town, the name in which the membership is held and the local address. We have never attempted to include the name of the active head in charge of each office, but the suggestion has come to us that we ought to consider adding this information to our list. For example, the suggestion has come from a prominent member in Chicago saying that he would like to communicate with Colonel Pond's company in Cleveland. In looking over our membership directory, he finds only the names of the companies which are members in Cleveland, but he is unable to distinguish from these names, the company with which Colonel Pond is identified. If the membership as a whole is interested in this suggestion, and will supply the name of the active head or manager of each office, we will be pleased to include the information in our directory which appears in the Year Book. Unless, however, prompt response is made, it will be impossible to adopt the suggestion this year.

RHODE ISLAND

Mr. Watrous, General Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Street of the Chamber, Mr. Wick and myself met last Thursday and laid the foundation for the convention in Providence next September.

Mr. Wick has the entire, tentative program, and is to send you a copy within a few days if he has not already done so. You will find us on the job every minute, and if we seem to lag in any of the necessary things to be accomplished, just write us about it.

We are sending you a copy of the minutes of our last meeting, and you can use Mr. Wick's program with it as copy for the Lenders News.

J. H. Wickstrom, Secretary.

The regular meeting of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Providence Biltmore Hotel, Providence, R. I., at 7:15 p. m. Thursday, October 16, 1924.

The meeting was called to order by W. G. Wood.

Nine members were present.

On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Neal, the minutes of the meeting of June 19, 1924, were approved as distributed.

On instruction of the Chair the roll call was dispensed with.

Report of Officers

Chairman Rich reported progress.

Treasurer Neal reported on hand October 16th, $82.52 and on motion of Mr. Pomfret, seconded by Mr. Delaney, this report was approved.

Secretary Wickstrom reported thirteen members in good standing as of August 1, 1924. No delinquents.

New Business

A committee of three, Mr. Wood, Mr. Lovegrove, and Mr. Wickstrom, were appointed to interview the advertising manager of the Evening Bulletin to arrange, if possible, to secure better position for our ads that appear daily.

We are paying for classified advertising but do not get it, and should be placed in the classified or preferred column.

Mr. Wick has promised to take it up with the Chamber of Commerce providing that the committee are not successful in obtaining the space in the Bulletin that we are entitled to and pay for.

Mr. Nelson Street of the Chamber of Commerce commended the members on their ability to bring to Providence the next convention of the National Industrial Lenders Association. He mentioned that the Chamber would give its whole hearted support to make this convention the best ever.

Mr. Street was given a vote of thanks for having perfected the arrangements whereby the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association gets the next convention.

On motion of the Chair, Mr. Wickstrom was given a rising vote of thanks for his interest in behalf of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association at the recent convention at Baltimore.

Mr. Wick of Philadelphia gave a splendid talk on the valuation of the Exchange Bureau and cited many instances where the exchange had been in operation and how the members had remarked that through this exchange it prevented, in a short time, any customer from having more than one loan.

Mr. Wood also commended on the goodness of an exchange of this kind and is heartily in favor of starting it at once. Eleven members are reported as favoring this exchange which should become effective within the next two weeks.

Mr. Street said that the Chamber would be willing to take care of the exchange in Providence for a nominal sum and as soon as the Providence members were ready and had decided on what plan was best, to submit their plans to him.

Mr. Watrous, General Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, with Mr. Street also of the Chamber, Mr. Wick, Mr. Wood and Mr. Wickstrom formed a committee to work out a tentative program for the convention next September. The convention headquarters will be the Providence Biltmore Hotel and the date for the convention, September 2, 3, 4, and 5th.

The following committees were appointed: Publicity Committee, Mr. Moran, Chairman; Entertainment Committee, Mr. Kennon, Chairman; Reception Committee, Mr. Delaney, Chairman; Finance Committee, Mr. Neal, Chairman; Ladies Committee, Mrs. Wickstrom Chairlady; Program Committee, Mr. Kehr, Chairman; Speakers Committee, Mr. Watts, Chairman. On motion of Mr. Wood, seconded by Mr. Rich, the Personal Finance Company of 76 Dorrance Street, Providence, was unanimously elected to membership.

J. H. Wickstrom, Secretary.

PROVIDENCE STARTS EARLY

Dear Mr. Kehr:

I promised Mr. Wickstrom, Secretary of the Rhode Island I. L. A., that I would send you a copy of the tentative ground work for next year's Convention at Providence, R. I.

The Rhode Island members had an Association meeting last Thursday evening, and I want to say that they are a snappy bunch and got busy quickly. Every member is enthusiastic over the coming Convention and I know you can rely on each and every one of them to do their part to make the 1925 Convention a pleasant memory. They have decided to make it a New England affair if the members of the Maine, Massachusetts and Connecticut Associations signify their willingness to go along. The Secretary has been instructed to write them, but Rhode Island is ready to handle the thing alone if one of the other Associations would prefer entertaining in their state in the near future.

We are going to have the hearty support of the Providence Chamber of Commerce, which stands ready to assist us in every way possible toward making this affair a success. They will have a stenographer at the Registration Desk continually, to write letters for guests, answer questions and direct the ladies concerning matters of interest in Providence. This organization will also see to it that we get all the publicity desired. They are willing to take entire charge of, not only Rhode Island, but country-wide publicity, or they will be glad to assist a publicity man selected by the Association, who is to write up the matter and they will assist in having it broadcasted. They will arrange to secure any speaker who we may desire in their locality and we can't aim too high, for they are able to get anything we want.

Mr. H. Nelson Street, who is the convention man of the Chamber of Commerce, has requested that you send him any publicity matter you wish broadcasted and he will see that the newspaper items appear promptly. Will you be good enough to communicate with Mr. J. H. Wickstrom, Secretary of the Rhode Island Association, 87 Weybosset Street, Providence, R. I., on Convention matters and if convenient, we would be pleased to see copies of letters passing through, so we may at all times be in touch and assist where possible, for the smooth-running of the program.

Without realizing that other New England States should be entitled to chairmanship of various committees, they appointed mostly Rhode Island men, but the list may be changed if other New England States signify their desire to help. The Committee Chairman appointed tentatively, are as follows:

Business Program, Kehr; Speakers, Watts; Publicity, Moran and Hartz; Finance, Neal; Entertainment, Kennon; Reception, Delaney; Ladies Committee, Mrs. Wickstrom.

Mr. Wood is showing a wholehearted interest in the success of the coming Convention and I thought it would be nice to have him represent the Rhode Island Association in answering addresses of welcome. I know he would be glad to act as toastmaster of the banquet if Mr. Aufderheide prefers not to accept this honor.

The matter of speakers for the banquet hinges somewhat on Dr. Faunce being in Rhode Island at the time of our Convention. You will note that we selected two additional speakers of note in case he is unable to participate. Mr. McDonnell, now President of the Chamber of Commerce, is a very able speaker and he may favor us even though he refuses to accept reëlection at the January meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. The first choice of speaker for the luncheon, Mr. Anthony Dyer, is a witty orator and will honor us if he is in the city at this time. You will note that there are three substitutes in event of Mr. Dyer being unable to be present.

The entertainment of the ladies is also subject to change, depending on future developments.

Definite arrangements have already been made with the hotel for the dates as specified, September 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th. The hotel is well adapted to entertaining conventions, having all the comforts of the best class hotels, all rooms having connecting baths. On the matter of reservations, the guests should know that single rooms with bath may be secured from $4.50 upward. Double rooms with bath for two persons, $6 and $6 50. Rooms with twin beds for two persons, $6.50 to $8. I am giving this information from memory, as I do not have my notation before me at this time.

The visitors will find that Providence will hold out a welcome hand and make things as pleasant as possible. Now that the boys have started out, they are going to have occasional meetings, which will be increased in number as time goes on.

It is now in order for you to make suggestions, which I know they will be glad to follow. Arthur L. Wick.

On instruction of the Chair, the Roll Call was dispensed with.

Secretary Watts reported a membership of 107, 100 in good standing as of December 31, 1924. One of the delinquent members is overdue since July 1, 1923, one since January 1, 1924 and five since July 1, 1924. Seventy-five of our members are members in good standing of the American I. L. Association as of February 1, 1925. There are 252 licensed lenders in Pennsylvania. On motion of Mr. Ezekiel, seconded by Mr. Hartman, this report was approved.

Publicity Committee Chairman Moore reported through Mr. Watts, that generous publicity had been given throughout the state covering the meeting of to-day.

Entertainment Committee Chairman Hart commented upon the goodness of the meeting held at Reading in July and specifically urged each member to recognize the opportunity for properly educating business associates and friends, and referred particularly to the so-called independent lender, in his desire to have full representation at the annual meeting in Philadelphia, Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, December 3rd.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

The Secretary reported the dismissal of the Holtz prosecution in Philadelphia by the Banking Department. The question of the dues of the Citizens Loan and Investment Company of Williamsport, which was referred at the last meeting to a Committee consisting of the Chair and Mr. Hart, was on order of the Vice-Chairman, laid over.

NEW BUSINESS

On motion of Mr. Hartman, seconded by Mr. Fahringer, the following lenders were unanimously elected to membership —Tennis Finance Company, 6009 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Personal Finance Company of New Castle, 201 Greer Building, New Castle, and the United Small Loan Corporation, 212 Pittsburgh Life Building, Pittsburgh. Carried.

The recommendation of the Executive Committee, with respect to a member whose stock sale promotion literature seems to be contrary to the spirit of to-day's conduct of the business of making loans to necessitous borrowers, was considered and on motion of Mr. Hart, seconded by Mr. Henderson, the Executive Committee was ordered to have this member present himself before them at a time mutually agreeable to confer on the entire question.

On motion of Mr. Gill, seconded by Mr. Henderson, the Secretary was authorized to inform the Sesqui Centennial Association of Philadelphia, of our endorsement of their intent to celebrate the 150 years of American Independence.

On motion of Mr. Hart seconded by Mr. Ezekiel, the Secretary was instructed to draft a suitable resolution of approval of the general letter of the Banking Department, with respect to the segregation of the sale of stocks and bonds from the conduct of the business of lending.

"PETER G. CAMERON, ESQ.,
Secretary of Banking,
"Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

"DEAR MR. CAMERON:

"We, the members of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, licensed under the small loan act, in a meeting assembled at Pittsburgh on October 9, 1924, and having before us your general letter to all small loan licensees, of September 22, 1924.

"Resolved, To approve of the action taken by you and to commend your effort to keep the business of making small loans to necessitous borrowers dignified and the conduct of the licensees within both the letter and the spirit of the law.

"And it is further Resolved, That Secretary of Banking Cameron be assured of the willingness of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association to at all times coöperate in strengthening the relationship between the Banking Department and licensees and to so conduct the business as to be regarded as a necessary branch of American finance in the communities in which they are engaged.

C. H. WATTS, Secretary."

Messrs. Ezekiel and Hart reported as delegates to the Baltimore Annual Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association, and both spoke in glowing terms of the splendor of the occasion and urged all to prepare to be in attendance at the next meeting in 1925 at Providence, Rhode Island.

On motion of Mr. Buck, seconded by Mr. Liggett, it was unanimously agreed that the members desiring the help of members in other cities in Pennsylvania, in the collection of accounts, to forward the necessary information to the Secretary, he to forward the account to the member who will undertake to collect it and in this way to divide the responsibility of collection accounts among the members. Further, that accounts for collection in other states should be forwarded direct to the Secretary of the state association in which the account is located and he will perform a like service. This resolution was unanimously adopted at the Baltimore Convention and it is now approved.

The general discussion which followed J. F. Rupert's, of the Atlas Loan Society of Pittsburgh, well prepared paper on "Coöperation with Retail Credit Associations," indicated how vital and important a question was proposed. Mr. Rupert was given a vote of thanks for his intelligent proposal of this subject.

On motion of Mr. Ezekiel, seconded by Mr. Liggett, a vote of thanks was tendered the Pittsburgh Committee for their having perfected the arrangements for the luncheon, business meeting and dinner, to be followed by dancing.

C. H. WATTS, Secretary.

At the luncheon served prior to the business meeting, John D. Werts, Assistant Cashier, First National Bank of Pittsburgh, gave a most interesting and instructive talk on "Banking Regulations." At the dinner served in the Ball Room of the William Penn Hotel, the 75 diners present were most agreeably repaid by the discourses of the Rev. L. Walter Mason, D.D., First Unitarian Church of Pittsbugh, whose subject was "Is Our Industrial System Moral?" Frank I. Gosser, Esq., who spoke on "Sentiment in Business" and Secretary Watts, whose subject was "This Place Under New Management."

COMMITTEE REPORTS

Secretary: Secretary Bray reported that we had a total membership of twenty-eight (28) with twenty-five (25) members dues paid up to date. He also reported that he received an application from the Personal Small Loan Company of Richmond for membership in May. He sent out a ballot to all members of the Executive Committee by mail, and they were unanimously elected. Upon motion of Mr. Pope, seconded by Mr. Phillips, the Secretary's report was adopted as read.

Treasurer: The Treasurer reported $355.90 on hand with all bills paid. It was moved by Mr. Mattingly and seconded by Mr. Bray that the treasurer's report be accepted.

Executive: Chairman Herbert was not present and there was nothing to report.

Membership: Chairman Reynolds was not present and there was nothing to report.

Publicity: Chairman Phillips said he had made arangements to have a news item at this meeting run in the newspapers, but had nothing else to report.

Legislature: Chairman Hodson was not present and there was nothing to report.

Communications: The Secretary read a letter from the National Secretary, Mr. Kehr, regarding the collection of foreign accounts. This was discussed, and the Association unanimously went on record that we collect all foreign accounts free of charge for members of the American Industrial Lenders Association, and that our delegate to the National Convention be instructed to vote accordingly on this matter.

New Business: Mr. Pope brought up the matter of advertising. He said it had been brought to his attention that we did too much advertising, encouraging the public to borrow. There was some discussion on this, but nothing was done at the present time.

Mr. Northey brought an invitation from the Retail Merchants Association for all members in Norfolk to join their Association. Mr. Mattingly moved that a Committee be appointed to meet with the Secretary of the above Association and report back later to the Virginia Association. The Chair appointed Messrs. Northey, Bradshaw and Porter. They reported back that the Retail Merchants Association would be glad to operate a special clearing house for us if all the loan offices would join. The dues would be $100.00 a year, payable quarterly in advance.

Two of our Norfolk members had already joined, and another promised to join. This was left to be discussed by the Norfolk members later.

Mr. Mattingly, Chairman of the Publicity Committee for the National Convention held in Baltimore, September 24-25-26-27, asked all members to attend and assured them that they would have the time of their lives.

It was necessary to select a delegate to represent us at the National Convention. Mr. Bray was nominated by Mr. Bradshaw, and seconded by Mr. Phillips. Mr. Appleby was nominated by Mr. Mattingly, secondly by Mr. Pumphrey. Mr. McMurtrie was nominated as alternate delegate by Mr. Mattingly and seconded by Mr. Porter. The Chair appointed Mr. Bradshaw to take a ballot and Mr. Appleby was appointed delegate and Mr. McMurtrie alternate delegate.

It was decided to hold our next meeting at Roanoke, Thursday October 23, 1924.

The Chair appointed Mr. Price to act as Chairman of the Entertainment Committee and get other members in that city to help him.

There being no further business to transact the meeting adjourned at 5:15 P. M.

We met in the Banquet Hall at 6:30 P. M. The principal speakers were Senators Smith and Barron, Dr. Howard I. Stewart, Pastor of the First Baptist Church, and Major William E. Callender. Attorney Cleaton E. Rabey acted as Toastmaster.

This was the best meeting ever held by the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association. FRANK BRAY, Secretary.

HAVE YOU ANY ACCOUNTS IN BUFFALO?

DEAR SIR:

Some time ago I wrote to you requesting the name of some correspondent in Buffalo, N. Y., who could handle a collection there for us. You gave me the name of the Buffalo Security Company and they in turn gave me the name of Burt J. Wall, the Deputy Sheriff, of 26 Trinity Place, Buffalo. I wish to recommend Mr. Wall very highly to any other of the Association Lenders who have collections in Buffalo. He has handled two accounts for us there, both of which were very bad accounts. He has succeeded in collecting the accounts in full and his work has been very satisfactory and his collection charges reasonable. JAMES P. GILL, Manager.

SMALL LENDERS TOLD TO WATCH LEGISLATION

Senators Smith and Barron Make Addresses at State Association Meet

"I am well aware that the general public throughout the state appreciates the service your association is rendering. Your association has filled a long felt want, not only in Virginia, but in every commonwealth where you have organized," stated Senator Alfred C. Smith, of Norfolk County, in an address last night before the Virginia Industrial Lenders' Association, which held its quarterly meeting at the Hotel Southland. The senator referred to the association as "the working man's friend," and called attention to the fact that there are some members of the Virginia legislature who are trying their utmost to destroy the business of this association.

"I know of no more worthy undertaking than that in which you people are engaged, but, remember, that one of the greatest obstacles that you have to encounter and contend with is the law-making body of your State. There are some men in the General Assembly of Virginia who do not understand your business, and are trying to destroy it; and, gentlemen, if we here expect to progress as our neighbors on the north, south and west you will have to send the right people to the legislature—people that are familiar with your profession and your activities."

L. E. Pope, chairman of the association, presided at the meeting, and Attorney Cleaton E. Rabey acted as toastmaster. Major Wm. E. Callender delivered a short address, commending the work of the association. Dr. Howard I. Stewart, pastor of First Baptist Church, was the "life of the party" for a short while, and Senator J. S. Barron, of Norfolk, delivered the principal address.

"A good many people in Virginia understand and appreciate the need of such an association as yours. You people do a great deal of good when you extend a loan to one in need. There probably will be a bill introduced shortly to cut down your rates of interest, and my advice to you would be to get in touch with the man who reads the bills in the house and when such a bill is introduced, have him advise you in time in order that you may fight it before it reaches the committee. There is not a great deal of work attached to it when it is reached at that stage—before it reaches the committee."

Representatives from all over the state attended the meeting. Among those present were:

George McCallum, Roy L. Northey, C. S. Phillips, W. H. Appleby, Cliff Cross, Herbert Minor, H. M. Porter, Dr. Howard I. Steward, of Norfolk; and F. Bray and W. F. Bradshaw, secretary and treasurer of the association. L. E. Pope, chairman of the association; E. H. Biel, C. H. Purvis, A. B. McMurtrie, U. S. Kenworthy, and W. R Smithdeal, of the Smithdeal Business College, of Richmond.

M. B. Coker and William Biel, of Portsmouth; Senators J. S. Barron and Alfred C. Smith, of Norfolk and Norfolk County, respectively, and Major Wm. E. Callendar, of Norfolk; Messrs. Mattingly and Phumphrey, of Baltimore, and Mr. Hardiman, credit manager for Watt's of Norfolk, who impressed the association with the importance of coöperation between the retail merchants of Norfolk and the local Industrial Lenders.

Members of the association from Roanoke, Lynchburg, Richmond, Portsmouth and Norfolk expressed themselves that the meeting in Norfolk last night was the most successful of all gatherings previously held.

Chairman Pope announced that the next state association meeting will take place in Roanoke, October 3rd, and that the National Association will meet in Baltimore, September 24th-27th.

O'Brien; Waterbury, A. S. Edwards; Mutual Finance and Investment Co., Bridgeport, F. H. Lovegrove; National Loan Co., Hartford, Mr. Gwellym; Personal Finance Co., Bristol, A. C. Kelsey.

Visitors: New England Equity Corp., Bridgeport, Mr. Bumsted; Bitting, New Haven; A. H. Sanderson, Hartford, Conn.; H. M. Dunbar, Norwich; Fidelity Finance Corp., New Britain, Joseph Chernoff; United Loan Company, A. H. Kanto and Mr. Kinder, Bridgeport; Silver Loan Co., New Haven, D. DiCerbi; Columbus Finance Corp., New Haven, M. DelVecchio; People's Finance Co., Hartford, Louis Saxe; Fidelity Loan Co., Bridgeport, Mr. Miller.

The Chairman, T. C. O'Brien, of the Membership Committee gave a report on the campaign for new members.

On the subject of coöperation, very helpful talks were given by Mr. Bitting of the New England Equity Corp., Mr. Lovegrove of the Mutual Finance and Investment Co., Mr. Edwards of the Equitable Industrial Loan Society and Mr. Saxe of the People's Finance Co.

Under the head of unfinished business, Mr. Edwards, Mr. O'Brien and Mr. McMullin were appointed a committee on application forms for new members.

The delegate to the National Convention, Mr. McMullin made a report.

On account of the meeting of the legislature this winter, Mr. McMullin was made Chairman of the Legislative Committee. H. G. MCMULLIN, Secretary.

ILLINOIS

The afternoon session of the joint Illinois and Iowa State Association meeting was attended by sixty-eight members and we served one hundred seventy dinners at the Banquet. Ohio was represented by one member; Indiana by nine, including the National Chairman, Mr. Aufderheide; and Iowa by eleven, including Judge Wood, Attorney Dunshee, and Miss Beach, State Examiner.

We want to recommend the joint meeting idea to other state associations for we believe that they promote neighborly state good fellowship, create wider and renewed association interests, have a broadening influence and tend to get the members away from the old home state which might result in better National Convention attendance.

There was not a single disappointment on the program; every speaker at both sessions appeared and did himself credit. Each participant in both the afternoon and evening sessions is to be congratulated and has been given an expression of appreciation by the Illinois Executive Committee.

All the talks and papers were splendid but, of course, all of them cannot be published in THE NEWS, however, we will appreciate your spreading the National Chairman's address, copy of which you will find enclosed herewith, in the next issue of THE NEWS.

THE UNIVERSITY DEC

Ninth Annual Convention—Pennsylvania Association

Delay beyond the customary time for the holding of the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders' Association only served to increase the interest in and attendance at that event on December 3, in Philadelphia. Profiting by last year's experience, when the available accommodations at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel were inadequate for the number of those attending the annual dinner, the officers of the Association this year decided to obtain a room large enough for its dinner guests even though the date for the convention had to be set later than has been customary.

The wisdom of their decision was attested by the number of those who attended the ninth annual banquet in the grand ball room of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel on the night of December 3. It was the consensus of all those fortunate enough to attend the dinner that it marked high tide in the Association's list of notable successes and set a new mark for future dinners to excel or even equal. But, brilliant and enjoyable as this recreational feature of the convention was, its more serious side as represented by the business sessions proved of solid importance because of the constructive discussion of problems of the lending business which were generally participated in by members attending.

Incident to the business transacted, was a spirit of state pride and public spirit manifested in the motion unanimously by the meeting to appropriate $100 toward the $25,000 fund being subscribed for the purchase of the Penn Charter, in order to assure its preservation as a public treasure. The famous document signed by William Penn in 1682 for the benefit of the people of the colony is now held in private ownership, and the purpose of the fund is to purchase it for presentation to the State.

The first session of the convention was called to order Wednesday moning, December 3, in the Clover Room by Chairman W. S. Herron of Philadelphia, with Charles H. Watts in his place as secretary.

An extended discussion followed Chairman Herron's statement of the practice of a lender in lending to a borrower even after it had been ascertained through the Exchange Bureau that the borrower had obtained the maximum of loans from other lenders.

Upon invitation of the Chairman, W. P. Woll, of Chicago, Chairman of the Finance Committee of the American Industrial Lenders' Association, took the floor to explain the action taken at the last annual convention in Baltimore relative to a voluntary increase in membership dues in the national body. Mr. Woll asked that the State Association approve the action of the Baltimore Convention and on motion of Mr. Watts this was done.

After the morning session luncheon was served in the room adjoining. The only speaker was James H. Maurer, president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor. Mr. Maurer spoke extemporaneously, and the sincerity and earnestness of his remarks obviously impressed his hearers and held their closest attention. Of plain, unassuming address and without the oratorical graces that many public speakers affect, Mr. Maurer was yet at ease and so effective in the vigor and earnestness of his utterances that his talk undoubtedly "got over" with his audience to a much greater extent than many addresses of more polish and pretension.

At the outset he disclaimed any purpose to tell his hearers anything about their business since he was more concerned in outlining to them the attitude of working men. Referring to the earlier days of industrial lending, he spoke of the evil that attaches to the giving of a bad name, declaring that this was a handicap that had been removed by the reforms attending the legalization of industrial lending. His own understanding of the difference between lenders who exploit borrowers and those who operate in strict compliance with law had come, he said, only after study of modern methods, and the best way to bring about a general appreciation of the fairness and usefulness of industrial lending was to demonstrate by their dealings with the public that the industrial lender does not seek exploitation of borrowers but seeks to relieve those who most need relief.

Mr. Maurer referred to the necessity for the small loan business, not for the well-to-do but for those who possess no bankable security and who are the greatest beneficiaries of a system of financing on equitable terms. To exploit this class, he declared, would be criminal.

"Bear in mind," he said, "that those who are sorely in need of money are in no more position to dictate the terms of a loan than are those in need of employment able to lay down the terms under which they will work."

Mr. Maurer stated it as his opinion that a second handicap to the lending business was the first impression the public gets of the legal rate of interest charged on industrial loans. "You may know the rate is not excessive," he said, "but the borrower does not know it, and the impression he obtains that the rate is too high scares away many prospective borrowers."

Qualifying his remarks with reference to the rates by saying that his recommendation for a reduction in it was not based on any exhaustive study of the risks and expenses of industrial lending, but that it proceeded merely from surface observations, Mr. Maurer suggested that the rate should be reduced to the lowest point at which a fair profit could be made. He believed, he said, that this reduction in the end would result in greater profits through the greater numbers of borrowers it would mean.

Describing the conditions of working men in the State, Mr. Maurer spoke for better workmen's compensation law, for an old age pension law and for child education. He decried Americanization by pagentry, flagwaving and patriotic singing. More practical methods than these were needed to make good Americans of the alien, he declared. More could be done, he thought, in this direction by throwing every safeguard around the workmen to protect him from exploitation, to insure him adequate compensation when injured in the performance of his work, or to his family if he loses his life while so occupied, by providing old age pensions which would prevent the scrapping of workers in their old age and by giving every child an equality of opportunity through education. "You cannot sing Americanism to the alien or ram patriotism down his throat," he declared.

The speaker asserted that the industrial lender could do much in the work of Americanization by just and humane treatment of the ignorant workers in their financial difficulties. He drew a parallel in the relations of labor leaders and lenders toward industrial workers, for he said that both saw the miseries of the poor at first hand. The lender, while not in business for mere love of humanity, had opportunities for service, for he came closer perhaps to the misfortunes of the poor than any other business and by a mixture of philanthropy—not charity—in his dealings with this class he could be of great help, not only to his business but also to society.

Upon the reconvening of the meeting for the afternoon session the Committee on Nominations reported, and the following officers were elected for 1925: State Chairman, P. B. Reeves, Pittsburgh; first vice-chairman, William Young, Philadelphia; second vice-chairman, V. D.

The prepared program of papers was then carried through, the first paper being by Harry B. Halloway, Philadelphia, on "A New Path Across an Old Field." Mr. Halloway's paper will possibly be published in one of our subsequent issues along with other papers prepared for this meeting.

The annual dinner was held in the grand ball room of the hotel at half past six o'clock in the evening. Covers were laid for about 500 diners with a cleared space for dancing in the middle of the floor facing the speakers' table on a dais at the east end of the room. The ballroom was beautifully decorated with Christmas greens, palms and smilax, festoons of which descended from the center of the vaulted roof of the ballroom to many different points in the balcony.

The decorations at the tables were cut flowers and at each plate were dinner favors of gaudy headdresses, Japanese parasols, many-colored toy balloons, rattles, whistles, bells and other noise making instruments, which were speedily put in use by the dancers as a way to emphasize their requests for encores from the excellent jazz band which gave a program during the serving of the dinner. The menu card was an unusual example of the printer's art, being a booklet with covers of grained silver, with a scroll border of pale gold and lettering of royal blue. The frontispiece of the booklet was an excellent photogravure portrait of Walter S. Herron, the retiring State Chairman. Other pages bore the menu, quotations from distinguished men commendatory of the Uniform Small Loan Law, the names of the dinner speakers and of the list of state officers and of the executive and entertainment committees of the Association, and the program of musical numbers and the entertainment which followed the after-dinner speaking.

In keeping with the high grade quality of the menu card was the dinner itself, which was of seven courses, excellently served and thoroughly enjoyed by the diners. Mr. Watts presided as toastmaster at the after-dinner speaking, and acquitted himself with the grace, ease of manner and felicity of expression that he has acquired through long experience in the role of a public speaker upon whom many calls have been made.

William F. Broening, formerly Mayor of Baltimore, the first and principal speaker of the evening, referring to the festive character of the evening as evidenced in the holiday decorations, said that it was his intention to yield to its sway by making his remarks very brief. He had caught the inspiration of the occasion, he said, which was a meeting of minds for the discussion of how to conduct their business in a manner calculated to meet with public favor and to merit confidence.

Down through the ages, from the slaying of Abel by his brother, mankind had been burdened with a heritage of selfishness, he said, and this selfishness had characterized the early days of lending which had brought it into that public disfavor from which it had been rescued only by its rehabilitation at the hands of men with a vision of fairness and of service.

Mr. Broening recounted the experience of a family threatened with disruption because the wife had become a victim of exploitation, from which he had been able to extricate her upon her appeal to him. It was this, he said, which had first prompted his interest in remedial loan legislation. Commending the wisdom of the law regulating industrial lending on terms of fairness equally to borrower and lender, he declared that not until the Uniform Small Loan Law was enacted was the problem of industrial lending solved.

Those responsible for the enactment of the law, he said, were entitled to the gratitude of the great members of people of small means who were the direct beneficiaries of the service now rendered by legitimate lenders. The best feature in the law, in his opinion, was the provision placing its administration with the State Banking Department and requiring that the books of lending companies be open to the State's bank examiners It was this supervision, he asserted, that had eliminated the undesirable lenders from the business.

Reviewing the changes effected by the operation of the law, he said there had been an honest effort to conduct the business along proper lines, to make it serve a useful purpose by helping to tide over the needy in emergencies and to provide a service to those who are unable to obtain financial assistance otherwise. One prime service rendered, he said, was in saving the self-respect of deserving persons by preventing the necessity of borrowing from friends or a recourse to charity. It was the law under which lending is licensed, he said that makes it possible to render a great and needed service to many.

The message the speaker bore, he said was the continuing sense of the responsibility and obligation the individual lender owes to his organization and to the state which has legitimatized his business. By bearing this in mind always industrial lenders would win and retain the confidence of the public, would be of real help to those deserving of help, and would help to dissipate the gloom in houses of poverty and bring a measure of happiness to lives otherwise cheerless and dark.

Concluding an address of evident sincerity and sympathetic understanding Mr. Broening said that the time of the year suggested as an appropriate message that lenders be actuated with the purpose to make the coming holiday a real Christmas for those applying to them for aid and to be animated by this same Christmas spirit in their business dealings throughout the coming year.

Edwin R. Cox, Philadelphia, who as State Assemblyman in the Pennsylvania legislature, was author and sponsor of the law under which industrial lending is conducted in that state, was the next speaker. Mr. Cox spoke of the importance of the personal equation in any business, for in any line good people engaged in it were necessary to the winning of public favor. He referred to his experience in welfare work which in 1907 first evoked his interest in remedial loans. He became convinced as a result of his observations then that lending to be of real helpfulness must be put on a plane which would attract to it business men imbued with ideals of justice and service.

In the nine years since the law had been on the statute books of Pennsylvania, he said, industrial lenders in the State had gone along a course which at the present times spells success. He briefly sketched the persevering struggle to enact a law regulating lending, acknowledging the assistance he had from foward-looking men who are now in the membership of the State Association.

His experiences in his investigation of money lending prior to the introduction by him at three successive sessions of the State Legislature of a bill to regulate lending, had taught him that there are two sides to every question, that the lenders have rights as well as the borrowers. He urged that lenders of Pennsylvania continue to conduct their business with the same strict adherence to the letter and spirit of the law and the same jealous regard to the fair repute of their business, and saw in the future an ever increasing respect for them on the part of the public.

Mr. Watts, recalling his association in the days of working for loan legislation, with Captain Souder, Assistant Superintendent of Police of Philadelphia, then a Captain of detectives and of valuable assistance in the investigations that preceded the drafting of the proposed law, called upon him. Captain Souder disclaimed any intention of making a speech, but said he would merely greet his hosts and express the great pleasure he experienced in feeling that he had had even a little to do with making them happy in the present status of industrial lending.

Lafayette Temple, of Baltimore, the final speaker, kept his hearers in constant laughter by his witty comments on things in general and nothing in particular, by his good humored comments and humorous stories. Mr. Temple sounded the real "keynote" of his talk, which ranged the universe for topics, when he remarked well in the course of his discourse that he hoped his audience was not taking his utterances seriously, that he would be grievously disappointed if he thought he had been taken seriously. It was evident from the continuous responses his hearers accorded him that he was no more disappointed than they were.

After the speaking program, the entertainment program was given on the stage at the south end of the ballroom. Dancing until 1 o'clock Thursday morning followed the musical revue, and put the finishing touch to an evening which on all sides was pronounced complete in every particular.

The members of the entertainment committee, headed by A. V. Hart, Chairman were: J. G. Lobb, E. B. Webster, William Young, J. A. Lyons, V. D. Moss, A. S. Ezekiel, W. H. Darrach, and W. F. Buck.

SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING INDIANA ASSOCIATION

The semi-annual meeting of the Indiana Association was held at Logansport, November 13. The meeting was called to order by Fred Davies, President.

It was moved and seconded that the officers be authorized to select Hotel for Annual Convention.

G. W. Farrington, chairman membership committee, reported four new members since May. R. C. Aufderheide moved that the Association appropriate $200.00 for this committee to be used to increase the membership.

The meeting was turned over to the managers, D. T. Hurry acting as Chairman.

H. E. Arnett reported on the high spots of National Convention held at Baltimore; the various subjects discussed at the convention were reviewed, all of which will appear in the year book of the American Association.

L. L. Bishop of Indianapolis read a paper "Our Relations with the Public." Discussions followed by H. H. Burrell in which he advocated the closing of all loan offices on Saturday nights. R. C. Aufderheide, F. L. Thompson and A. R. Dana joined in the discussion.

Chas. Kienzle, representing Joseph Baum of Ft. Wayne read a paper "Our relations with Competitors." This was followed by a discussion by S. F. Smith, O. S. Beck, Mr. Staley and H. E. Arnett.

F. L. Thompson read a paper "Our Relations With Our Customers" in which he insisted upon Service being one of the factors that should not be overlooked. Discussions were followed by R. C. Hardisty, M. S. Kent and others.

Paul A. Hancock read a paper prepared by S. S. Ganser of Hammond on The Relations with our customers in which he said that years of experience have taught us that we gain the confidence and good will of our customers by showing them every courtesy, keeping their business confidential and accommodating them to the best of our ability.

The meeting adjourned for the luncheon which was held in the dining room at 12:15. There were present about twenty-five guests, merchants and professional men of Logansport.

Special numbers by Elmer Olson.

After luncheon, Judge D. C. Arthur welcomed the loan men to the city of Logansport and told us how we had increased the standards of our business since the Lenders had organized the Association.

Benj. Blumberg of Terre Haute gave the response.

The real treat of the day was given in a very humorous address by Fred High, editor and publisher of Chicago. His comparisons of the Service we could render to the public was given in his "Philosophy of Making Service Pay" and was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Hon. Lowell Neff of Logansport gave an address on "Brotherhood of Man." Every man listened to this address to the fullest extent, his message was one of Service and during his address he said—"Americanism is not measured by percentage. It is by the service we are able to render to society."

A. C. Broughman read Mr. Levitt's paper on "Mirrors that Reflect." This paper will be published in the LENDERS NEWS and should be read by all. It was also read at a joint meeting of the Illinois and Iowa Association held in Chicago November 7th.

J. H. Aufderheide sent a telegram extending best wishes and regretted that he could not be present. A. C. Broughman moved and it was seconded that the secretary write Mr. Aufderheide a letter congratulating him as the newly elected Chairman of the American Association and to tell him the boys of the Indiana Association are with him to a man.

It was moved and seconded that Indiana adopt the code of ethics prepared by the American Association. Motion carried.

H. E. Arnett moved, seconded by A. C. Broughman, that a committee be appointed to draft uniform papers. Motion carried. It was suggested that this committee confer with Mr. Elmer Johnson before final adoption.

The open office was discussed but the consensus of opinion was that it did not meet with favor in Indiana.

C. N. Rider on the subject of "What Constitutes a Slow" said that a slow was one who could pay and did not, regardless of the time.

"Does the Association approve of Legal Action." The answer from those who discussed the subject was only in extreme cases and think the second time before filing a suit.

"Are Farm Loans Advisable at this Time" was answered by the remark that careful inspection should be made because live stock, especially horses are decreasing in value.

The secretary read the following opinion and this question was raised because of a suit filed to foreclose mortgage in which the kind of receipt given was attacked.

November 5, 1924.

MR. ROY F. HARTZ, Secretary,
Indianapolis, Indiana.

DEAR SIR:

Apropos of your recent visit to my office with Mr. W. A. Zumpfe touching the question of receipts to be given by small loan brokers in compliance with the Indiana statutes, I submit the following:

The question before us is whether Section 3 of the Act of 1897 now applies to licensees under the Act of 1917. In my opinion it does not apply. When the Act of 1913 was passed by the Indiana Legislature it constituted special legislation touching a particular class engaged in a particular, well defined business. Such legislation has been held to be constitutional and proper under the Indiana Constitution. The Act of 1913 contained in haec verba, all the provisions of Section 3 of the Act of 1897. The legislature thereby made those provisions a part of the special statute applying to the special business and thereby enacted that licensees under the Act of 1913 should give the receipt so specifically described in Section 3 of the Act of 1897. The legislature did not stop by leaving licensees under the Act of 1913 subject and amenable to the law of 1897 as it stood. It went further and made these provisions touching the character of the receipts specially applicable to licensees under the Act of 1913.

When the Act of 1917 was enacted the Act of 1913, including the section containing the provisions as to receipts, was expressly repealed, it being the apparent legislative intention that licensees engaged in business as small loan brokers should not thereafter be required to comply with the provisions of the Act of 1913 touching the character of receipts to be given. The legislature in effect said that these provisions shall no longer apply to licensees and such licensees shall not hereafter be required to give receipts as described in the Act of 1913.

The Act of 1917 provides that a plain and complete receipt shall be given the borrower upon the making of each payment. There is very much difference between a plain and complete receipt and the receipt described in the Act of 1897 and in the repealed section of the Act of 1913. The provision in the Act of 1917 that a plain and complete receipt shall be given undoubtedly dispenses with the giving of any other than a plain and complete receipt, this provision being entirely inconsistent with, if not repugnant to, the provisions of the Act of 1897.

Of course, as you suggested upon your visit to my office, the Act of 1897 still remains on the statute books and is undoubtedly applicable to persons taking chattel mortgages who are not licensees. Prior to the special legislation touching licensees, first enacted in 1913, the Act of 1897 was undoubtedly applicable to all persons taking chattel mortgages upon household goods, etc., as security for debt. The Act of 1897 remains on the books, but all of the acts of the legislature touching the subject of the chattel mortgage business must be construed together, and each of them given proper effect. The special legislation applying to the small loan brokers is complete and sufficient in itself. There are many provisions of our statutes touching the loaning of money which are yet inapplicable to small loan brokers. For instance, the General Usury Statute has not been repealed by any express enactment, but it is conceded that both the Act of 1913 and the Act of 1917 gave small loan brokers the undoubted power and right to contract for a much greater rate of interest than is permitted by the Usury statute. In short, the old Usury statute had been rendered inapplicable to licensees under both the Act of 1913 and the Act of 1917 by the express provision permitting them to charge a different rate of interest.

You will therefore readily see that the fact that a former act applying generally to all persons, as the Act of 1897 touching the character of receipts and the old Usury statue, is no longer applicable to licensed brokers under the Act of 1917, because the legislature in clear, specific terms has made different provisions respecting them. I still adhere to my opinion that the licensed small loan broker is not required to give anything more than a plain, complete receipt upon receiving payments from borrowers and that the provisions of the Act of 1897 touching receipts required to be given to borrowers are not applicable to your mortgages.

Yours very truly,

JAMES W. NOEL.

A motion that the Elks Lodge be given a vote of thanks and also the members of the committee who were responsible for the wonderful program was made, carried.

A motion was made and approved regarding the handling of foreign accounts. The American Association at their convention held at Baltimore passed a resolution recommending that all foreign accounts should be sent to the State Secretary of the State in which the account was to be collected.

OUR RELATIONS WITH OUR CUSTOMERS

BY CHAS. L. GANSER, Manager, Provident Loan Association, Hammond, Indiana.

Years of experience have taught us that we gain the confidence and good will of our customers by showing them every courtesy, keeping their business confidential, and accomodating them to the best of our ability. These qualities are the foundation for satisfactory business relations, not only for the present but establish us in the esteem of our patrons for the future when they are in need. One satisfied customer recommends others.

When an individual calls at the office asking assistance, explaining that he has had death or illness in his family, or some other misfortune, it is our object to show a wholesome regard for his interests, explaining to him thoroughly our method of assisting him financially, and just what his obligation with the company would be if a transaction is made.

I find it a good policy to address a customer as "Mr. or Mrs.," never calling them by their given name so as to avoid intimacy. Intimate terms very often result in dissatisfied customers owing to the fact that unreasonable favors are often asked and if not granted cause dissatisfaction.

There are three classes of customers, good, indifferent, and bad. Regardless of their paying qualities each should be treated with every courtesy and consideration, it being our object to keep the good will of the good ones, and trying to gain the good will of those who are indifferent and bad. With few exceptions we accomplish our object, and on the whole enjoy a congenial relationship with our customers.

"OUR RELATIONS WITH OUR CUSTOMERS"

When I sat down at my home Monday evening to prepare this paper, I wrote the title and wondered what I could say that might in some way be helpful and constructive, and the story of the colored Baptist preacher who was visited by his fellow Methodist minister occurred to me as fitting my case exactly: The Baptist minister had the rather careless habit of scattering his prepared sermons over the floor and chairs of his study and this being observed by his contemporary the following dialogue took place. "Brother don't you think it powerful careless of you to let your sermons lay around that away—the devil will read them and kill all your influence with your congregation before you deliver your sermon." The Baptist minister replied "No brother, the devil can't hurt my sermons a bit, for when I gets up in front of my congregation nobody, not even the Lord or myself, knows what ise going to say."

Our good Chairman, Hurry, realizing my plight in some manner forwarded me some helpful suggestions for which I wish to acknowledge his foresight and render my most sincere thanks.

To the subject: Our Relations with Our Customers, is the spark plug of our business motor and unless we are hitting on all four, six or eight, according to our individual capacities, in our direct contact with the persons who make our business possible, then our business will immediately reflect our inefficiencies. We serve a vital definite need in the states and communities wherein we operate and we can do this only by dealing carefully, with honor and courtesy to all with whom we come in contact.

We should be careful that a loan when made will be helpful and not a burden. We should know that all details of the transaction are fully and clearly understood by all parties concerned and that no loans are made to persons physically, mentally or legally incapacitated to contract. Those generally coming under such classifications are minors, people of advanced age, foreigners unable to understand our language and those with physical or mental ailments that render them either incompetent or inclined to capitalize their infirmities.

The Legislature of our State and many sister States in their wisdom, have seen fit to pass laws legalizing and regulating our business and the burden is on us, as men and trustees of a great business, to discharge our obligations to our customers in honor and integrity.

Our business and the managers of the individual offices stand in the same position as the father of a large family, for your customer comes to you with his joys and sorrows,—perhaps the stork has signified his intention to visit the home, the oldest child may be ready for college, the accumulated bills have perhaps become a burden and the weekly or monthly pay check will not reach all and leave the necessary margin for current expenses, or, the grim reaper may have issued his call to which all must respond. On the brighter side, perhaps a business opportunity has opened that requires ready capital and in these and the many countless other circumstances that arise daily, the great mass of the people, that 70 per cent or more without credit in the banking institutions of our country, turn to you The Industrial Banker, if you please, for the assistance the emergency and condition demands. He tells you his troubles or joys as the case may be, depends on your advice and assistance and you must respond in an understanding, ethical and humane manner that will reflect credit, not only upon yourself and your customer, but upon the vitally necessary business in which you are privileged to participate.

In accepting my place on this program I signified my intention to make this paper brief, knowing a discussion would follow by many more capable than I to enlighten us on this subject and bearing in mind the letter from our esteemed chairman which read—"Paper not to exceed ten minutes" D—— Hurry.

LOAN COMPANIES RELATIONS WITH COMPETITORS

Although this heading might have applied ten or fifteen years ago, I do not think that it applies at the present time, rather, Loan Companies Relations with Other Offices. Relations as I see it in the present instance, means members of a family and we are members of a family and we should treat each other as such.

In former years it was Competitors with a vengeance in most cases; if you could put one over on the other fellow there was great rejoicing. A bad account was drilled or posted, a new card made out showing prompt payment, soiled in some way to give it a pocket worn appearance and if perchance the office was called for information, they were informed that he was good pay; th truth was handled in a very careless manner. If the client went of his own accord and inquiry was made, he was given a good recommendation. If a good customer was inquired about, the office would immediately hurry a man out to the customers house with money to make the loan and the other office was out of luck. This was not a one-sided affair, as the compliment was returned in the same manner or some other similar stunt pulled off. Thus it was fifty-fifty with much ill-feeling and distrust engendered thereby.

Since the organization of the American and State Industrial Lenders Associations, all or most of this has been changed, as it should be, and if not, there should be no delay in making the start.

Cultivate the acquaintance of Managers and members of other offices, talk over the general affairs of the business and if you can give your neighbor a bit of information that will be helpful to him, he is going to appreciate it and very likely he has something worth while to give you in return. This is not going to happen only once, but, is likely to occur many times in the course of the months and years to follow.

What about your advertising is it of the right sort. There is many a line of advertising in newspapers, circulars, and letters casting discredit on other offices, that can well be left out. It is written in a subtle, insinuating way, giving the reader the impression that that office is better than the rest. We are all operating under the same Law and the same rate and there should be nothing of this kind appear—Examine your advertising matter carefully and often, before you place it in a paper or circular, cut every single thing that looks suspicious or disparaging of the business of your fellow loan office. It don't help you much if any and makes the prospect suspicious of you as well as the other offices and will lower you in the estimation of the general public and those you most wish to educate to the fact that you are in a legitimate business. All your educational advertising will be harmed by such methods of soliciting business.

We preach service at every American —State and Managers association meeting; does it apply less to ourselves than it does to the general public; if it be possible, it means more. Being over-anxious to increase your business, you will make an extension of credit without fully informing yourself by inquiry of just that office which may have the prospective customer on his books. This places a hardship upon both offices as well as the person to whom the credit has been extended, although the party may feel that he is able to take care of both accounts or does not care at all, which in most instances is the case.

Give this your most serious thought—service to yourselves—it covers everything.

Don't cut the rate to get the business of some other office, it is a most despicable thing to do, it is unethical, against the principals of the Association, unwritten if not written, ungentlemanly and you lower your standard of self-respect among your fellowmen, demoralize the business and lay yourselves open to criticism by the general public and Legislators in particular, laying up trouble for yourselves and the business in general.

There are two most reprehensible acts that I question are being practiced now, which I wish to mention however.

Don't solicit prospects by searching the public records for names of those, who have or have had loans with other firms. Your City directory and telephone book are at your right hand to use at any time and is the more honorable way and without a doubt equally as profitable.

Another phase of this subject is the bribing of employees for a list of the clients in the office in which he is employed. Such tactics can not be too strongly condemned.

Let me suggest the best way for Service to Each Others

It is not new to you, but, if it is not in operation in your City now, make up your minds to start at once. Have weekly or monthly meetings of the Managers and employees on certain fixed days or dates, where there are two or more offices. Fully exchanging thoughts and ideas, thrashing out any fancied injustice with honest friendly feeling, which soon clears the atmosphere. Many times it will be found that it is simply a case of misunderstanding. When an account is prospectively to be taken up from one another, give full information, his past and present performance, what you know about him, give the dates of payment, etc., and show your customers card if desired.

At the meetings you discuss matters of interest that have come up since the last meeting in the course of your business.

You will be most agreeably surprised, the good you will derive from this close coöperation without losing one iota of business, rather it will be most helpful to all in every way. You will get a better understanding of each other and gain in knowledge of your business.

OUR ATTITUDE AS LOAN COMPANIES DISPLAYED TO NON-BORROWERS

By L. L. Bishop, Capital Loan Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

We should at all times present the most favorable impression of our business to the public at large.

Our business will be gauged by the ethics we display in its transactions.

We should never entertain a feeling that our business is not on a par with any other big business; with this feeling, we are duty bound to present to the public the fact that we are really business men. We can never elevate our business unless we as managers elevate ourselves and our employes under us.

This is the first phase of this question in "Our Relations With the Public" viz, presenting to the public an outward appearance as business men.

The second part of this subject should deal with our relations with the public.

These should be formed by our affiliations and connections with civic bodies, Chambers of Commerce, Clubs, Churches, etc., and our willingness to engage in all civic relations that will bring us in contact with other lines of business and a chance to show to our fellow men that we do not really wear horns, but instead, we exist because of a need for us, an ever increasing want, and that we definitely have a duty and service to perform, as no business ever can live unless there is a need for it, which, as we all know is supported by the fact that Money Lending was in evidence with the beginning of Jerusalem and has continued in various forms down the line of generations to the present time.

We must come out from under cover and never lose the opportunity to talk and explain to the un-informed, who we are and why we are here. This is necessary, as the average layman knows very little, if any, about the chattel loan business; in fact all of us, even to-day have heard the expression made by non-borrowers, "I did not know there was a place of this kind."

We must remember the public at large can see the necessity for a grocery store and a furniture store and we as loan men see the justification of our business, but remember, the people who do not have to borrow money on chattels knows very little about it and need much enlightenment from our standpoint.

Summing up I would say:

First: Conduct ourselves as real business men and be sold on our business.

Second: Connect with all worthy organizations and make your influence felt.

Third: Education and justification of our business to the non-borrower.

OVER $660 SECURED IN SHARON JOB

Checks and Valuable Papers Are Left Behind in Bold Robbery of Provident Company's Offices.

By smashing the combination lock on a huge safe at the Provident Loan Company offices, second floor, 108 East State street, early to-day, robbers gained entrance to the strong box in the safe and stole $667.48 in cash.

Leave Checks.

The robbery was discovered this morning shortly after 7 o'clock by Mrs. Charles Thompson of Wheatland, employed in the offices, and who arrived early to clean the place.

Entrance to the offices was gained by slipping the bolt of a Yale lock on the outer door. The buffer of the door was pried away from the door jam, and a corset stay used in slipping the lock.

Sledge Is Used.

A heavy sledge with the handle sawed short, used in breaking the combination lock on the safe, was left behind by the robbers. A book was used to deaden the noise. The entire office was ransacked and papers strewn about the place.

Visit Other Offices.

The offices of Drs. Myron Murstein and Alvin Davis, dentists, just across the hall from the Provident Loan Company, were also entered, supposedly by the men who entered the Loan establishment.

Nothing was taken from the doctor's offices, but the lights were turned on and a thorough search made of the place. The lights were discovered on early to-day.

Loss Is Insured.

J. G. Sipotz, 206 Jefferson avenue, is manager of the Provident Loan establishment here. The loss is covered by insurance, it is announced.

Police are working on meager clues. Negroes are believed to have committed the theft. Tools used in entering the safe were left in the place.—The Sharon Pa. Herald. Nov. 19, 1924.

HISTORY OF MORTON S. HAWKINS MAIL FRAUD CONSPIRACY CASE

One of the most unusual stories of graft, swindling and deception ever heard in Indiana was unfolded in federal court in the Hawkins mail fraud conspiracy case, which ended with the verdict of the jury. Nineteen persons originally were indicted on charges of using the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud and conspiracy to use the mails to defraud. The principal defendant, Morton S. Hawkins, president of the Hawkins Mortgage Company, about which the alleged fraud centered, is a fugitive from justice and the object of a nation-wide search.

Another defendant died since the indictments were returned last January, and another's bond was forfeited when he failed to appear in court, but he is understood to be where the government can lay hands on him. Sixteen persons stood trial.

The trial began November 11, and nearly seventy witnesses from more than sixteen states testified. The case was worked up by leading United States postoffice inspectors, assisted by expert accountants of the department of justice rated as the best in their department. Those who were assigned to the case were: John W. Welborn, of the Indianapolis office; O. B. Williamson, in charge of the Philadelphia (Pa.) division, and W. J. Marles, in charge of the St. Paul (Minn.) division of postoffice inspectors. The accountants were the veteran Thomas P. Merilees, of New York City, and J. S. Egan, of Omaha, Neb. These men also worked on the MacCray case.

Parent Company

The Hawkins Mortgage Company, through the operations of which the greatest mail fraud case ever tried in the history of the district of Indiana was brought to the attention of the government, was the parent company of 104 Welfare Loan Societies scattered through eight states, and with sixteen branches in Indiana. The Mortgage Company controlled the loan societies through holding 51 per cent. of the common stock of each. In the course of the operations of the Hawkins interests, the heads enlarged their field of operation and absorbed a number of concerns, some of which were in a shaky financial condition, and then traded contract holders and stockholders out of their equities by giving them in exchange for their holdings stock in the Mortgage Company, which had a par value of 1 cent, but which they represented to be worth $65 a share or 6,500 times its value.

Concerns that were absorbed by the Hawkins Mortgage Company, and which figured in the federal court testimony, were the Indiana Rural Credits Association, Indianapolis; the Coöperative League of America, Pittsburgh, Pa.; the United Home Builders of America, St. Louis, Mo., and the Security Home Savings Company, Kansas City, Mo.

Defendants were: Morton S. Hawkins, president; Anthony A. Scheib, secretary; Carl B. Anderson, treasurer; Leo P. Harrington, auditor; John T. Sutton, vice-president; Frank B. Jaqua, general counsel, all of Portland, and A. R. Sax, New York City, former general sales manager of the Hawkins Mortgage Company; the Rev. William Webb and William Sacks, wealthy Missouri politician and promoter, former controlling trustee of the Home Builders, both of St. Louis; Charles S. Succop, J. A. Clark and Harry J. Bovard, all of Pittsburgh, former trustees and officers of the Coöperative League; Earl N. Sapp, of the Kansas City concern, who has not been apprehended; J. D. McCallum, Detroit, Mich., a former Hawkins official; William M. Jones, secretary-treasurer of the Indiana board of agriculture, and Mord Carter, Indianapolis business man, defendants through their connection with the Indiana Rural Credits Association, and Frank J. Haight, accountant, formerly employed to do actuarial work for the Indiana and other state insurance commissions, and Frank C. Willis, another accountant, who were charged with being members of the conspiracy in that they made an inflated audit.

$4,000,000 to $6,000,000 Loss

It was alleged that investors, more than 6,000 in number, and scattered to all corners of the country, had lost between $4,000,000 and $6,000,000 in actual money.

The Hawkins Mortgage Company, the United Home Builders of America, the Coöperative League of America and many of the Welfare Loan Societies, are in the hands of receivers. Lew Wallace, Indianapolis attorney, is receiver for the mortgage company, and in his report to the federal court said the assets were practically worthless.

Reily C. Adams, president of the Security Trust Company, is receiver for the Coöperative League, under appointment of federal court, and Clarence E. Coffin was appointed receiver for the Indianapolis branch of the welfare loan system, under a state court appointment. In addition, many of the other branches are involved in litigation.

It has been recommended by a special master in chancery in federal court, that the mortgage company be adjudged bankrupt.

Testimony in the federal court trial, which began after Hawkins and his associates had repeatedly caused delay, was the most startling ever heard in a fraud case in this district, it was said. Hawkins made every effort to obtain a delay and to be tried before a district attorney other than Homer Elliott, even going to Harlan S. Stone, attorney general of the United States with charges against Elliott, the postmaster-general, postoffice inspectors and others. This all was brought out in the trial.

Reports of Political Pressure

The defendant Sacks is known as a political power in Missouri. A report current around the Federal building last summer had it that all sorts of political pressure was being exerted to stop the prosecution. Testimony before a senate subcommittee that was investigating the conduct of the department of justice under Harry M. Daugherty, then attorney-general, last March, was that Sacks had stopped one fraud case prosecution, in Texas.

In a further effort to obstruct the trial, Hawkins filed a petition against Elliott and more than sixty others, including prominent attorneys and officials, alleging a conspiracy to dissipate the assets of the Hawkins Company. As Judge A. B. Anderson was on his vacation, Judg George W. English, of the eastern distric of Illinois, was assigned, and issued several orders in the case. Judge Anderso threw the petition out of court on hi return after commenting on "strange proceedings" in his absence.

Practically every time Hawkins turne around, he was represented by a new se of attorneys. For a time he had prominent Indianapolis lawyer who ha taken part in nationally famous cases He had in rapid succession members o a New York firm who were prominent , Chicago attorney, more local attorneys and then a former United States distric attorney from St. Louis, who represente him in the criminal case, but withdrew after Hawkin's bond had been forfeite October 2 for not appearing in court.

Testimony in the trial was to the effec that assets listed by Hawkins in exces of $9,000,000, in reality had an accountant's value of approximately $700; tha various ruses and crooked schemes wer employed to sell stock; that corporation were wrecked after the firm had bee absorbed; that dividends were paid ou of the proceeds of stock sales; that o the 104 welfare societies only thirty-eigh ever opened their doors, although dividends were paid by many more and that all except two lost money; that the Hawkins Company had not made money since 1918, in fact lost every day; that false advertising was employed and numerous misrepresentations made to prospective stock purchasers and other violations of the law.

In the course of advertising, Hawkins stock, the concern of that name issued numerous pamphlets emphasizing the reliability of the "House of Hawkins" and the unimpeachable integrity of the officers of the mortgage company. One of these documents was called "A Banker's Honest Opinion," and professed to be a disinterested recommendation of Hawkins and Hawkins stock by Morgan Wamsley, Cincinnati, president of the Hamilton County National Bank, who in fact, was a director in the Hawkins Company.

A number of the persons who were defrauded, and who were among the witnesses, were widows, old men, former soldiers who had invested money saved in France; women who had invested their husbands' life insurance, farmers who had sold their Liberty bonds, attracted by high interest, and similar cases.

Market Letters

Another "creature of the defendants" was the Cincinnati Bond and Investment Company, which sent out "market letters," purporting to be recommendation of Hawkins stock from an independent broker. These were written at the Hawkins home offices in Portland, Ind., it was testified.

A further scheme employed by Hawkins and his associates was to send out a letter, in reality written at his direction expressing confidence in himself and the company, and signed with the names of others, without their permission. Wholesale juggling of accounts was carried on, according to the testimony. The income-producing assets were insufficient to meet expenses and an enormous amount was expended to sell stock and to obtain capital.

The Indiana Welfare Loan Societies

were at Indianapolis, Ft. Wayne (the first to be established), Evansville, Muncie, Richmond, Marion, Logansport, Anderson, South Bend, Michigan City, Lafayette, Elkhart, Terre Haute, Vincennes, Kokomo and New Albany. The only branches in the United States to show a profit for the entire period of operation, when the government accountants balanced the books in May, 1923, were those at Vincennes and Terre Haute. The mortgage company held out large amounts from the various companies, or sales of preferred stock therein, that amounted to a total of nearly $1,000,000, according to the testimony.

The Hawkins interests were active at the last session of the state legislature in defeating a "blue-sky" bill that had the sanction of the state securities commission, and were reported to have expended a large amount of money in lobbying against the measure. Those who have been following the operations of the Hawkins crowd assert that had there been an adequate "blue-sky" law, the people of Indiana would have saved hundreds of thousands of dollars.—Indianapolis News, Nov. 26, 1924.

NOTICE

The National Secretary's attention has been called to the fact that some members operating in states where the small loan business is regulated by law and under the supervision of a State Department, are soliciting information direct from the State Departments on points of information involved in the law. This procedure is contrary to the precedent established by most if not all State Associations, as the custom has been where a ruling is desired on any point involved in the small loan law of any State, the matter should be taken up with the officers of the State Association and the information desired obtained by the State Secretary. Obviously this is the only way in which all members may have the benefit of a ruling established by any of the State Departments because it is customary when a rule or opinion of any state officials is obtained, that copies of it reach the National Secretary who is always pleased to publish anything of this sort which is for the general information of all members. Unless this is done, many questions might be put by individual members which are of the same character and the Department is obliged if not annoyed to answer the same questions repeatedly.

Members should remember to send their foreign accounts for collection to the State Association secretary in which they are located for allocation to the member nearest the account who is not already loaded with foreign accounts. The purpose of this resolution was to divide equally the work incident to foreign collections and relieve the popular collectors from an unequal share of the burden.

CONVENTION IN PROVIDENCE

The American Industrial Lender's Association is to hold its next convention in Providence, in September, 1925, having accepted the invitation extended to the organization, at its last meeting, in Baltimore, by the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders' Association. With that invitation was extended a welcome to Providence from Governor William S. Flynn, Mayor Joseph H. Gainer, and President Thomas F. I. McDonnell, of the Chamber of Commerce.

The national association is not only engaged in the business of loaning money, but it is making special effort to standardize the methods of that line of business, as well as to secure uniform laws in the several states. It was organized at Philadelphia, in 1916 and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Its Chairman is J. H. Aufderheide, Indianapolis, and G. W. Kehr, of Harrisburg, is the National Secretary.—Providence Magazine, November, 1924.

Chairman of Committee on Relations with Licensing Officials

Chicago, Ill., November 8, 1924.

MR. H. T. MATTINGLY,
322 Equitable Building,
Baltimore, Md.

Dear Mr. Mattingly:

Shortly before the Convention Dr. Mueller created the Committee on Relations with Licensing Officials. You probably heard my first report as Chairman of that Committee made at the Convention.

The purpose of the committee is to develop the most satisfactory relationship between state officials who are charged with the administration of small loan laws and the supervision of the business of licensees.

In some states vey satisfactory progress has been made, but there is room in every state for greater development. The committee does not feel that it should attempt close personal contact with licensing officials, but that it should work through someone in each state. The logical person to represent the committee in each state is the vice-chairman.

I will appreciate your writing me in detail what contact licensees in your state enjoy with the Department, who if anyone has been authorized by your state association to represent them before the licensing official and what special benefits have accrued to licensees.

If no one in your state has functioned in this capacity, will you not develop it with your state association and determine what you would like to accomplish in this respect and advise me?

The purpose of this letter is to find out what your experience has been so that other states may profit, or if your experience has not been satisfactory, so that we may have the opportunity of offering suggestions.

If your state association does not meet in time to let me have your advice not later than November 20, and it is possible to submit the matter to the Executive Committee, I will appreciate it. The reason for this is that I have been requested to make a further report to the Executive Committee which meets in New York the later part of November and it would be helpful to have your reply.

Yours very truly,
L. C. HARBISON.

Secretary Moore read the above letter and several members commented on the goodness of developing at all times satisfactory relationship with the Banking Commissioner and his assistants who have charge of the actual supervision of our business. The general opinion of the members present was that inasmuch as 97% of the Industrial Loan Business in Maryland is carried on in Baltimore City, each individual licensee could easily discuss in person with the Commissioner any matters that may pertain to his own individual office, yet matters may come up that would naturally concern the Maryland Association, and it would be best to appoint a committee to contact the Commissioner on this subject.

On motion of Mr. Hood seconded by Mr. Potter the meeting adjourned until 7:30 P. M., in Tuesday, January 13, 1925.

H. C. MOORE, Secretary.

VIRGINIA

The regular quarterly meeting of the Virginia Association was held at the Hotel Roanoke, Roanoke, Virginia, Thursday, October 23, 1924.

The business meeting was called to order by Chairman Pope at 3 P. M.

The secretary called the roll, and the following members were represented:

Roanoke Loan Society, Roanoke, Va.; Beneficial Loan Society, Roanoke, Va.; Federal Security Company, Lynchburg, Va.; United Small Loan Corporation, Richmond, Va.; Citizens Loan Society, Richmond, Va.; Home Guarantee Company, Richmond, Va.; Citizens Loan Society, Norfolk, Va.; The Empire Company, Norfolk, Va.; Norfolk Security Company, Norfolk, Va.; Beneficial Loan Society, Portsmouth, Va.

We also had with us Mr. V. D. Moss of Philadelphia, and Mr. A. C. Christensen of New York.

The Secretary reported that we had a total membership of twenty-eight (28), with twenty-six (26), members—dues paid to date.

Treasurer Bradshaw reported the cash on hand July 24, 1924		$355.90
Collected from members at banquet in Norfolk		93.00
Dues collected since		20.00
		$468.90
Disbursements
Banquet at Norfolk, July 24, 1924	$136.60
Incidentals from July 24 to October 23 ..	19.11
Cash on hand August 23, 1924	313.19
Totals	$468.90	$468.90

Upon motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Bray, the treasurer's report was accepted.

The Secretary read a letter from Mr. M. E. Bristow, Chief Examiner of banks, in which he stated he had sworn out a warrant against Mr. Hardee of the Harris Investment Company of Norfolk for making alleged illegal charges on loans, and asked our coöperation in prosecuting this case when it came to trial.

Mr. Moss moved that the Association go on record, commending the work done by members for their assistance to the Banking Department in getting the evidence on this office.

Considerable discussion as to what action to take against the Harris Investment Company, in this matter—Mr. Moss moved that it be "Resolved that the Harris Investment Company of Norfolk, Virginia is hereby suspended by this Association, pending the outcome of this case, for conducting their business in a manner unbecoming to the ideals of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association." The Secretary was ordered to notify the Harris Investment Co., and also send a copy of Resolution to the Banking Department and National Secretary. Upon motion of Mr. Price it was left to the Secretary to use his own discretion, whereby he could withhold notice to the Harris Investment Company.

Mr. Bradshaw moved that the Association have a reporter at the trial to bring out the facts that we, the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association were instrumental in bringing this company to trial. Mr. Moss seconded the motion and it was unanimously carried.

Mr. Appleby, our delegate to the National Convention, made his report to the Association. The Secretary told the members that the American Association needed more money to carry on the work they were doing. All the National members were asked at the Baltimore Convention to pay the maximum dues, or where they had been paying on the average monthly balance, to pay $.50 a thousand extra, which would make it $1.00 a thousand instead of $.50.

Mr. Moss spoke at some length on this subject, stating considerable money would be needed for the National body to function properly. He said he hoped that Virginia would not wait for the other states to take the lead, but go on record right now, and agree to pay the dues requested by the National Association. He stated that the company he represented would pay the maximum dues. Everybody present agreed to either pay the maximum dues, or $1.00 a thousand, on their average loan balance for the year.

Mr. Moss spoke of handling foreign accounts, and he stated this matter was brought up at the National Convention, and the American Association went on record that no charge would be made to any member of the National Association but regarding nonmembers this was left up to the member to charge what he pleased.

Mr. Moss also spoke on the unfavorable decision against a member of the Georgia Association by the Supreme Court, which ruled that they could not charge on daily balances, as the law read that interest should be computed on monthly balances, instead of daily balances. After some discussion all members pledged themselves to notify the Secretary so he could notify the National Secretary if they got into any litigation, whereby they thought it might be unfavorable to the business. Mr. Price asked the Chair to appoint a member in each city to report to the Secretary anything of importance to the Association. The Chair appointed Messrs. Price, Hill, Edge, Biel and Bray.

Mr. Pope suggested that a special committee, representing all interests be appointed to look into legislative matters for 1926, and report to the Association at our next meeting in January. The following committee was appointed, V. D. Moss, Chairman; Messrs. Bradshaw, Phillips, McMurtrie, East, Mattingly, Pope, Appleby, Edge, Hodson and Mrs. Davis.

Mr. Pope brought up the subject of paying the Secretary some kind of a salary on account of the amount of work he had to do. Mr. Christensen moved that we pay the secretary $100.00 a year, starting this year and to take effect at once. Mr. Edge seconded the motion and it was unanimously carried.

Mr. Price brought up the subject of knocking your competitor and made a very good talk on this subject. Messrs. Moss and Pope also put up a strong case against knocking, and showed how it reacted against the business as a whole.

The Chair asked Mr. Kenworthy to tell the members how the clearing house was working out in Richmond. He stated that everything was working fine, and that they were going to have a meeting of the clearing house once a month, and have both the managers and the outside men at these meetings, so as to get them acquainted with each other. This was considered a splendid plan, and other cities in the state are going to adopt the same plan.

UNPAID BILLS

Mr. Appleby submitted his bill of $45.60 for expenses as delegate to the National Convention. The treasurer was ordered to pay it.

NEW BUSINESS

Mr. Pope submitted the application of the Virginia Security Company of Roanoke for membership. Upon vote they were unanimously elected.

It was decided to hold our Annual Meeting in Richmond, January 15th, 1925, and as there will be considerable business to transact, it was decided to make a full day of it and have a business session at 10 A. M. and one at 2:30 P. M. and banquet in the evening.

The Chairman made a strong plea for every member to be present and also bring their wife or sweetheart along, as they intended to entertain them royally.

The Chair appointed Messrs. Edge, Kenworthy and Reynolds, all of Richmond as the Entertainment Committee.

It was decided that we would have three papers read at the January meeting by three members, the members and the subjects to be assigned later by the Chairman and Secretary.

Mr. Bradshaw brought up the subject of selecting a nominating committee now, so they would have plenty of time to choose a representative slate for officers and report at our January meeting, when new officers would be elected.

Mr. Edge moved that Messrs. Moss, Christensen and Appleby be elected to acted as nominating committee and the Secretary to act in coöperation with them. These gentlemen were elected, with Mr. Moss as Chairman.

There being no further business, the business meeting adjourned at 6 P. M.

Mr. Price, chairman of the entertainment committee gave us a splendid banquet. Senator Holman Willis was the chief speaker and he lauded the Small Loan Licensees for their part in uplifting the business.

FRANK BRAY, Secretary.

THE HAWKINS FRAUDS

That there were gigantic frauds in connection with the operations of the Hawkins Mortgage Company and allied organizations no one can doubt. Many people were swindled, the losses amounting to between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000. The only questions involved in the trial, which ended yesterday with the conviction of fourteen men, was whether these men were parties to the conspiracy, or had knowledge of it. Some one was guilty of conspiracy to defraud, and of using the mails for fradulent purposes. Under fair and impartial instruction from Judge Geiger, the jury found that fourteen of the sixteen men on trial were guilty. The verdict is believed to be sustained by the evidence.

It is easy to moralize in such cases as this, and some moralizing there of course ought to be. Millions of dollars have in the past few years been stolen—for that is what it amounts to—from the people by fradulent companies. Perhaps the dwellers in this highly favored section of the country have been the chief sufferers, and yet one must not forget Ponzi, who "stung" the people of Boston and vicinity for enormous sums. It is appalling to think what men will do for money, and what risks innocent investors will take to gain it. Both classes are almost certain to lose, though sometimes an extra shrewd scoundrel manages to make his pile, and at the same time beat the law. As for the crop of suckers, it is apparently inexhaustable. It is all a miserable business, and one in which any man with a shred of manhood in him ought to be ashamed to engage.

From the economic point of view the evil is quite as serious. The "earnings" of rascally promoters, and crooked corporations, run into the billions, and those "earnings" are an economic loss to the community as well as a loss to the people who are plundered. It is all most disgraceful to the American name, and tends to give this country a bad reputation for honesty and integrity. Just how many Americans are "living by their wits" or, being engaged in legitimate business sometime take a desperate chance, it is impossible to say, but the number must be large. A census of them would be exceedingly interesting. Many are morally guilty even though their operations do not fall within the letter of the law. Others are not caught, and still others escape on technicalities, or because of the unwillingness of the losers to prosecute. Such a verdict as that of yesterday ought to do much good, and help somewhat toward curing a social condition that is certainly not sound. A community—could there be such a one—divided between swindlers and swindled, between those who prey and those who are preyed on, would not in any true sense be a society at all.—*Indianapolis News. LOOKING INTO THE FUTURE

An address by J. H. Aufderheide, National Chairman, before the joint meeting of the Illinois and Iowa Associations, held in Chicago, Nov. 7, 1924.

It is indeed an honor to address this joint meeting of the Iowa and Illinois Associations and an especial pleasure to me as Chairman of our National Organization, because I am enabled by addressing you jointly to kill the proverbial two birds with one stone. It has not been often that an American Association Chairman has had such an opportunity or the good fortune to address two State Associations simultaneously, altho I have some misgivings about how the boys back home in Indiana will interpret a "joint" meeting. "Joint" means one thing in Indiana and another in Illinois.

When the secretary of the Illinois Industrial Lenders' Association, Mr. L. T. Baker, invited me to address this gathering, I began at once an exhaustive hunt for a subject for my address that would be interesting to the members of the Iowa and Illinois Associations; something a little less hackneyed and shop-worn than the usual talk about the Uniform Law, or the benefits to be derived from membership in the State and National Organizations. I wanted to give you something stimulating—something with a "kick" (mental, not the kind Henderson is thinking about.)

I could not find what I wanted and I therefore, wrote to Mr. Baker asking him to suggest something timely and interesting. Mr. Baker is a very resourceful man and I was confident he would make the proper suggestion which would help me out of this difficulty. How well he succeeded in aiding me in this matter, you may already have guessed. The subject or title of my address is "Looking Into the Future," which Mr. Baker suggested would be inspirational, as well as interesting to all of you. Therefore, instead of a time-worn and shop-worn address, I come to you in a new rôle. The Prophet's Robes are upon my shoulders. I am the Eva Fay of the Industrial Loan business, the magic seer who will gaze into my crystal and tell you all the wonderful things that shall happen to us in the future.

A prophet is without honor in his own country, and I am going to begin by asking you first to look backwards and consider the industrial loan business of to-day as compared with the past; to-day with ten years ago. Is there anyone who could have prophesied ten years ago that the industrial loan business would progress to the dignified and important place which it occupies to-day in the financial structure of our country? What other business has shown the remarkable progress in ethics and standards within so short a period of time? The history of the Industrial Loan business contains all the elements of a great and inspiring story, from the beginnings of a few far-sighted pioneers to the fine achievements of to-day. Buried under facts and figures there is a story of hopes and plans, of failures and successes, of crucial experiences thrilling with human interest. The romance of the industrial loan business of to-day is the story of manhood at its best, typical of sterling character, integrity, industry, courage, vision and perserverance. To those pioneers we owe a debt which we shall never be able to pay.

The main point that our splendid record of achievement discloses to me is, that when men desire a thing they will go to great lengths to obtain it. Time, toil and personal sacrifices are nothing to us, providing we sincerely desire to uplift, dignify and improve this business. The future will be exactly what we make it. Do you desire with all your hearts that we shall not stand still, but that we shall progress? Will you use the foresight and energy that characterizes the management of your personal business for the benefit of all? If you will show the whole-hearted devotion to the fine principles established by our American Association, and a willingness to sacrifice selfish ambitions for the sake of uplifting and dignifying this business, I prophecy that in the future every iota of prejudice and narrowness, which has characterized the public viewpoint of the loan business, will disappear.

I said before that no human being could have foretold the wonderful progress made in our business within the past ten years. No one can say to-day what another decade will unfold to us. Each member of the State and National Organizations is a factor and has a responsibility in determining the ultimate achievements in our business. It is important that each one direct his energies toward the true goal. If we earnestly desire what is right and decent and respectable, we shall labor to attain it. If we do not labor to attain it, it is because we do not want these things because we will not strive for them to the best of our ability.

To look into the future we must look back into the past, by considering our former achievements we shall be better able to gauge what our future successes will be. By knowing where we made mistakes, we are in a position to avoid making the same errors. Consider what strides have been made in the right direction and what part you personally played in making possible all what we have gained. Have you done your part? Have you contributed to our cause? Not money alone, although, that is one way of showing your earnestness—but what thought and what practical whole-hearted support have you given? What engages a man's affections tells us what he is. If you are going to subordinate the good of this business for your personal gain, if you are thinking only of dollars and not of uplifting and dignifying our business, I need not depict the future to you in rosy terms. In other words, the picture of the industrial loan business of the future depends upon what we make it. The Iowa and Illinois Associations and the National Organization of the future will function successfully in proportion to what we put into these Associations now, to-day.

This paper is necessarily inconclusive because we cannot see into the future far enough to make it comprehensive and clear. There are many vital questions confronting us to-day. We shall solve every problem, but it is a task that requires the best that each one of us can give. Soon the American Industrial Lenders' Association will publish the Code of Ethics adopted at the convention in Baltimore. I trust that each member of the Iowa and Illinois Associations will adopt this splendid Code of Ethics in the daily conduct of his business. Most men who have achieved greatly, have kept steadily before them fixed principles by which they have been guided. In Chicago, not so many years ago, there lived such a man. I refer to the late Marshall Field. The dominant ideas in the career of this great man are splendid things to remember, and I am going to give them to you as being applicable to-day to the industrial loan business. There are twelve ideas in this creed:

The Value of Time
The Success of Perserverance
The Pleasure of Working
The Dignity of Simplicity
The Power of Kindness
The Influence of Example
The Obligation of Duty
The Wisdom of Economy
The Virtue of Patience
The Improvement of Talent
The Joy of Originating
The Worth of Character.

Members of the Illinois and Iowa Lenders' Associations, keep before you such fine ideals and constructive principles. By doing so, we may look into the future and see the industrial loan business elevated to a place in the nation's businesses that is second to none. Remember each one plays an integral part in making our future brighter and better, and I am sure each one of you will do your part.

SERVICE AND ADVERTISING

By E. I. Levitt, Des Moines, Iowa

A short time ago I had the pleasure of visiting an amusement park in one of our western cities. There we passed through what was called the Hall of Mirrors. We learned something new about ourselves, for those mirrors reflected our appearances in some of the most grotesque manners. At one time I was tall and thin, then I became short and fat; one mirror said I had a long neck, and a very short body, while another insisted that I was altogether the most freakish of freaks. It was a relief when an ordinary mirror reflected the truth about me. You may be sure that I was extraordinarily relieved upon finding that I was not the distorted being I had been led to believe.

It is my opinion, that many of us, engaged though we are in performing the most worthy of services to our fellowmen, are distorting that service to the public eye through the tone of the advertising we employ.

That is one of the points in advertising which I wish to discuss to-day and if I can bring home to you the necessity of mirroring your service to the public in its true light, then I shall consider my effort, not wasted, but as having constructed a step forward for the benefit of the profession.

Step out of your office, and for a moment rub shoulders with the people of your city. Listen to their discussions on the street, and in their homes. Such a diversion from your ordinary beaten path of the business will bring home to you the fact that the opinion which the average person possesses regarding most commodities, be it of merchandise or of service, has been created for him by that type of advertising which he has seen.

Read the daily paper or magazines over their shoulders and you too, will see how the advertising of every day mirrors the character of commodities on the market. You will see the service of one retail store, for example, written up as a bargain hunter's paradise, displaying cheap, loud speaking type and illustrations, while that of another store across the street will be reflected as dignified, straightforward, honest and confidence instilling.

Be honest with yourself and admit which type of advertising will build up a longer, lasting, and more profitable business. It is the power of advertising to show your business as a cheap bargain store or as a dignified institution by the type of advertising used.

Now let us consider our own profession. I ask you what opinion concerning your business do you want to create in the minds of the public? It is in your power to choose and have. You may build it to be one of cheapness and insincerity, or of dignity and confidence.

I trust that your attendance at this convention means that you are interested in the latter.

How can this be accomplished? In my humble opinion the public, and please bear in mind that eighty-five per cent of the public are your prospective customers, will grow to have confidence in your business if your advertising expresses it.

It is not my thought to suggest the mediums you should use, such as newspaper, bill board direct-by-mail, etc.

I am concerned with only the reaction of the public mind, caused by what you say and how you say it.

Bear in mind the fact that the Small Loan business has been subjected to much criticism; that it has not occupied as high a position in the opinion of the public as we feel that it has deserved. For these reasons we must put forth greater effort than other lines of business to accomplish our purpose.

If we had not already raised the standards of our business, within ourselves, I would say that our problem is not an advertising one; it would be that of reorganization, legislation and a general house cleaning. But I am happy to say that the Small Loan business is a clean, honest, dignified and much needed one. You, are to be congratulated because you have made it so.

Getting the public to understand it as we do is a task which advertising can accomplish if you give it the proper coöperation.

Now, how can this be done? It is not my purpose to tell you what to put into your copy.

Tell your story of service, show that it is needed, that it has helped others, that it is available to all honest folk; a business that is dignified, sincere and reliable. You have a story in which people are interested.

Bear in mind the fact that upon this feature is built the character of your service as understood by the great majority of the public. Thousands see your advertisements before they see you and they have no other way of correctly judging you and your business.

Make your advertising attractive; use white space; give your words a little air; don't crowd them into a one or two-inch want ad.

Remember that your advertisement is fighting for the attention of the reader; fighting against pages of news, screeching headlines, funny cartoons and interesting stories of life. Added to these are the columns and columns of other advertisements, clamoring for attention.

If you use display advertisements, be sure to select good clean cut, apt and interesting illustrations. Get out of the ordinary rut of advertising. Forget the sing song type of copy which include certain set phrases that have gone unchanged for years. Don't be afraid to strike out with a new idea—to tell your story in a different way than your competitors do.

When you write your copy bear in mind the fact that you are talking to people, just as human as you are; that you have something to sell but that they won't buy unless you make them believe in you and your service.

Make them understand that your organization is a living, breathing personality whose sympathy, interest and sincerity are providing a service which is vital to the life of your community.

This human interest element is found in almost all of the better advertisements appearing daily in the papers of your city. Department stores, insurance companies and banks play up the human side of their service, and realize that this element occupies a very important part of their business dealings.

We men of the Small Loan business can learn an excellent lesson from bank advertising. Our interests are closely related, for both deal in a financial service which must have the confidence of the public and our ads should be of the same type and character of a bank ad.

If you do not feel sure of your ground in planning and writing your advertising call in an advertising man of experience to help you. Get his viewpoint; his ideas, and his frank comments upon what he thinks of your business and how your advertising can be made to build up a favorable impression among the people in your city.

Coöperate with your advertising. It is not enough to put an advertisement in the paper and expect it to turn the trick single handed. A good advertising merely starts a train of thought which can easily be ruined and turned to your disadvantage by the bad appearance of your office and the lack of interest on the part of your organizations.

Let us imagine a prospective customer who has received a splendid impression of your company through the medium of your advertising, coming into your office where he finds a much less respectable appearance than he had expected; where he finds inattentive people uninterested in his affairs; careless about rendering a confidential service, prone to make mistakes of figures or judgment, and I ask you what can advertising possibly gain for you against such handicaps?

It is necessary that your chain of advertising be complete—every link be tuned in harmony and coöperating perfectly if you desire to reflect your business in its true light. Your office, your printed matter, your every action is advertising you and for that reason I call upon you to construct a chain of publicity that has no weakness.

A little introspection along this line of Small Loan advertising is good for us. It will pay you to closely analyze your own ads, the appearances of your office, and the other coöperative elements just mentioned. Determine for yourself the question of whether or not your business, which you try to conduct upon a high standard of ethics, is being mirrored in its true light or being distorted by unfavorable advertising and inadequate office facilities.

I think you will agree with me when I say that the people of your community generally do not appreciate the type of service which you are rendering, because you have not given your advertising an opportunity to properly reflect it.

CHECK INSURANCE

Recognizing the value of various protective devices in reducing loss from check alteration and forgery, the Metropolitan Casualty Insurance Company, of New York, announces a merit rating schedule for check protecting devices and safety paper, which schedule offers a graduated scale of discounts for various types of protective machines and papers.

With one or two exceptions, applying to the products of specific manufacturers, this is the first recognition by an insurance company of the claims of check protecting devices to premium discounts. Heretofore, with the exception noted above, flat premium rates have applied to check alteration and forgery insurance, regardless of the protective measures employed by the insured.

Announcement of the merit rating of check protective devices comes close on the heels of the acquisition of the Metropolitan Casualty by interests represented by J. Scofield Rowe, for the last several years vice-president of the United States Fidelity and Guarantee Company. This new check alteration and forgery bond premium graduation has received close study from Mr. Rowe for some time, and is his first significant announcement since his election to the presidency of Metropolitan Casualty.

A flat base rate which fails to recognize the value of devices which increase the difficulties of the forger is neither scientific nor equitable, in the opinion of officials of the Metropolitan Casualty, a contention which has been made for years by manufacturers of check writing machines and safety papers.

"With the old inflexible base rate, the preferred risk is penalized by grouping it with the risk in which the selection may be against the company," says Mr. Rowe. "With the merit rating plan, the selection is in the company's favor, even with the very appreciable discounts allowed, since it is only the best classes of check users that come within the classifications entitled to discounts."

Officials of the Metropolitan Casualty state that the merit rating schedule adopted is based upon what various types of check writing machines and safety papers accomplish in reducing forgery and making check alteration more difficult.

There are four classifications of check writing machines under the Metropolitan plan, entitling the user to premium discounts as follows:

A. A machine writing the amount of dollars in words automatically and properly spaced, having bronze type and steel platen (or its equivalent in durability), adapted to shred the paper and automatically impregnate it with ink in two or more colors, the degree of shredding to be predetermined by machine adjustment independent of the operator. Discount of 25% from base rate allowed.

B. A machine writing the amount of dollars in words automatically and properly spaced, adapted to shred the paper and impregnate it with ink. Discount of 15% from base rate allowed.

C. A machine writing the amount in figures, having bronze type and steel platen (or its equivalent durability), adapted to shred the paper and automatically impregnate it with ink in two or more colors, the degree of shredding to be predetermined by machine adjustment independent of the operator. Discount of 10% from base rate allowed.

D. A machine writing the amount in figures, adapted to shred the paper and automatically impregnate it with ink, the degree of shredding to be predetermined by machine adjustment independent of the operator. Discount of 7½% from base rate allowed.

The three classifications of safety papers, with premium discounts allowed, are:

A. Paper having thereon an intricate tint produced by printing from two or more plates that are entirely different from the resulting tint, readily removable by either mechanichal or chemical erasure, and a permanent printed hidden warning word or symbol made apparent when the tint is chemically removed. Discount of 25% from base rate allowed if paper has a chemically and mechanically sensitive tint on back. Discount of 22½% allowed when there is no chemically and mechanically sensitive tint on back.

B. Paper having thereon a tint readily removable by either mechanical or chemical erasure and provided it is so treated that such chemical erasure will produce a permanent colored stain. Discount of 12½% from base rate allowed if paper has a chemically and mechanically sensitive tint on back. Discount of 10% allowed where there is no chemically and mechanically sensitive tint on back.

C. Paper having thereon a tint readily removable by either mechanical or chemical erasure. Discount of 7½% from base rate allowed if paper has a chemically and mechanically sensitive tint on back. Discount of 5% allowed where there is no chemically and mechanically sensitive tint on back.

Combinations of check writing machines and safety papers also permit of substantial discounts.

Machines and papers are now being rated by the Metropolitan Casualty as they make application.

GROCER SUED FOR "WINDOW DISPLAY"

Jury Acquits Carlisle Grocer of Criminal Libel—Claim He Posted List of Persons Who Did Not Pay Bills

Because he placed a chart in his window on which he listed a number of names under the caption, "Persons who owe me and can pay me but won't," W. W. Daron, Carlisle grocer, faced criminal libel charges before the Cumberland County court. He was acquitted by the jury.

It is said that a number of names appeared on the list, which was posted last August, but only one man, William Fahnestock, of Carlisle, entered the charge. The prosecutor, it was testified, could neither read nor write. Mrs. Fahnestock, wife of the prosecutor, could and did read it. She testified that she requested the grocer to remove the sign and that he refused.

In the disposition of the costs the jury placed three-fourths of them on the defendant and one-fourth on the prosecutor. —The Patriot, Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 6, 1924.

EDUCATING THE BORROWER TO BE HONEST

By C. G. Liggott, of Dayton, Ohio, Western Supervisor Beneficial Loan Society of New York

I am pleased to have the privilege of addressing the members of Illinois and Iowa State Associations and their employes on this subject, and I trust that you will accept my recommendations, but should they be contrary to your judgment, please accept it as a well-meant effort on my part.

There are a number of ways that we can educate borrowers to be honest, the same as we receive our teaching at home, but you know that a borrower has a great many difficulties confronting him which makes it necessary for him to seek service of a licensed money lender, and in a number of cases where the applicant has made application for a loan, I feel that it is the duty of the lender to go into detail as to the reason for borrowing the money, for we must take into consideration that the applicant is probably in a very embarrassing position and he is trying to be honest but due to circumstances, probably employment, or neglect to pay his obligations has caused him to make a loan on his household furniture or guaranteed note.

There is no question but what the lender can obtain the necessary results by informing the applicant after the loan has been properly investigated and ready to be made that their credit is not up to the standard and that they are not only giving the lender security but it is a moral obligation on his part, as I feel 90% of the borrowing public are honest, if they had the opportunity to make sufficient money to meet all obligations, but in most cases you will find that some are extravagant and some are thrifty, but unless they get into an embarrassing position and if they are not indebted to such an extent that they have been sued or garnished, the lender does not consider that the borrower is honest, and will pay if given an opportunity.

The time to educate the borrower is when making the loan, for it has been mentioned many times that, "A loan well made is a loan well paid," and what should be impressed upon the borrower is the fact that they are in such circumstances that you are giving them the opportunity to regain their credit and prove to the public that they are honest, and the prospective borrower should be impressed with the value of the service you are rendering them, the cost of same and that it is entirely up to them to repay this as quickly as possible, for they can obtain additional funds at any time should they be in need. Ex-Governor James M. Cox of Ohio in an address made in 1917, said:

"I make bold to say that the legalized loan business is more of a necessity in an industrial community than perhaps a bank, for this a bank, for this reason: it is the poor man, who when he needs money, needs it most."

If all lenders will use a simple method of following up their accounts, installing honesty into the minds of the borrower, and the necessity of making prompt payment of principal and interest, assisting the borrower to get out of debt. It is a proven fact that we will regain the confidence of the public in the particular business that we are now operating for in a number of instances we often think that the borrower is dishonest due to the fact that they have not been requested to repay their installments promptly, payments are taken whenever the borrower wishes to pay, they become cold, and probably the lender at times feels that if they press the collections to such an extent they will lose business, but I believe that The Credit World, gotten out by the Retail Credit Men's Association, puts it very well by saying:

"The belief that the practice of permitting a customer to pay when he pleases tends to promote good will and increase business is not borne out by experience.

"The most successful managers are those who insist upon strict compliance with their terms."

AN APPRECIATION FROM "DOC." MUELLER

I am just in receipt of a Gruen wrist watch with the following inscription:

> "Presented to Charles G. Mueller by the American Industrial Lenders Association in appreciation of services rendered as National Chairman, 1923-1924."

It would seem that this watch coming at this time reflects the spirit of the season of the year. Good will toward men. When I reviewed this beautiful timepiece, which evidences extreme care and fastidiousness in its selection and when I read the splendidly worded inscription thereon I realized that it was symbolic of a fraternal affection and esteem, that touched me deeply.

Such evidence of affectionate regard is the stimulus to greater personal effort and sacrifice. During my recent administration as your National Chairman, rather arduous though it was, I find a great deal of satisfaction in the joy that I tried earnestly to serve in a conscientious fashion, in the best interests of each individual member of State and National Associations, to the increasing prestige and integrity of the small loan business in its entirety.

Please know I am doubly grateful; first, for the very beautiful and efficient timepiece, and secondly, for this manifestation of esteem. I shall take great delight in carrying this watch on my left wrist, where it will be nearest my heart. I shall always consider it among my rarest treasures. Above all I value the popular sentiment of fellowship it represents. Believe me always,

Yours to command,
CHARLES G. MUELLER.

BLUNDERING IN THE LOAN BUSINESS

By C. A. MILLER, of Peoria, Illinois

You know Mr. Baker had no idea I was going to be here. You see when this meeting was first contemplated he wrote me that the committee had selected me to give an extemporaneous talk or read a paper on some subject that I might select; but when the meeting was postponed he not only failed to send me a program but he even overlooked notifying me there had been a change in the date of the meeting.

You know it is human nature to want to do the very thing you believe someone objects to you doing, so I fooled Mr. Baker by notifying him I would be here and "Extemporate." But my nerve failed me at the last moment and I decided to read something instead.

The advantage of reading is the fact it is impossible to see the sickly smiles of sympathy or the amused grin on the faces of the audience. You see I had an opportunity of listening to some of the late politicians try to make a speech and know just how the audience feels when a man tries to explain something he knows little about.

So I thought I would talk about something that we are all familiar with. That something is "blundering in the loan business."

Now we do not need to kid ourselves and try to make ourselves believe we are never guilty of blundering. It is human nature to blunder and we can only try to minimize the number of blunders we make. A lot of us are inclined to pay too much attention to the other fellow's blunders and overlook our own.

First are the blunders of the outside man. We all will admit the outside man is one of the most important cogs in the loan office and the success of that office largely depends on his work. The manager however has got to supply the spark of enthusiasm and intelligently guide him over the roughest roads of the loan business, namely, "collections."

The average outside man is about what his manager makes out of him. Of course he must have the determination to work hard and intelligently. The manager who does not carefully go over the work of each outside man every morning is making a serious blunder and he has no one except himself to blame if his man does not get results. The manager's worst blunder is committed when he neglects to let his outside man know that every account that has been intelligently made should be collected in such manner that his business can be retained if the manager desires it. Get the outside man to talk about conversation he has had during the day with his worst account. You can easily pick out the flaws in his method of talking to the slows who are not responding to his calls.

The outside man blunders when he neglects to get into the house where he can talk to the client frankly and intelligently but courteously. He can never expect to accomplish anything by making doorstep calls and approaching any house smoking, even a cigarette. The smoke requires a certain amount of his attention and it is impossible to give one's best efforts if his energy is directed in several different channels. The outside man blunders when he neglects to thoroughly canvass the neighborhood on finding any one away from home. He can often save the time of a return trip by making strenuous efforts to find out when they left, which way they went, when they usually return, and if dressed for going to the business section or to the neighbors. He also blunders when he allows the wife to make a promise for her husband. She cannot make her husband keep the promise she made for him, and as she has not been asked to promise this call by the outside man is not only wasted efforts and time but every call made makes that particular customer just that much more difficult to handle. He grows callous to the outside man's arguments and each call increases the difficulty of getting a final settlement.

He also blunders when he uses "bulldozing" tactics. He cannot get results in that manner, and no one knows it better than the little fellow who must use tact, intelligence and shrewdness or probably get a couple of beautiful black eyes.

He blunders when he calls on a particular hard one on a day that he is not feeling confident. We all have our good and bad days, and when we have our bad ones we only make bad accounts worse by trying to talk to them when we are really licked before we arrive at the house. Have your outside man understand that you will appreciate having him tell you any time he feels unable to get results. Let him pass up that particular call till the next day. The next day he will get better results on it than you expected.

A manager is blundering when he takes the morning paper to the office. Every one will want to see something in it and the result is every one is standing around discussing something they have just read in the paper. Then the manager can hardly object to his help reading when he is also guilty.

The manager blunders when he fails to get to the office promptly on time so he can talk over things that have happened the previous day and give such honest and constructive criticisms is required. He blunders when he fails to frequently have a sort of round table where all can discuss the little faults they have noticed in the others and set about to correct them. It only takes a few minutes to have such a discussion, and if you let your help know you are sincere and tell you expect them to mention your errors also you will be surprised at the many little blunders on your part they pick up. Of course you always notice their faults, and unless invited they will not tell you yours. Such discussions are very interesting and often amusing. After a few meetings it is surprising how careful each one is so no one will be able to catch him blundering. Very small pocket notebooks where little notations can be jotted down at any time should be provided all employees.

Some managers are still under the impression it is real smart to try to slip some other company a bad account. This is about the biggest blunder that could be committed. We all can slip the other fellow bad deals but do not kid yourself, the other fellow will get next to your practices and he not only will lose all respect for you but will not let any opportunity pass to slip you something worse. He will not be satisfied to merely get even but will see just how much dirt he can do you.

By bad accounts I do not mean the average slow. I mean such accounts any manager has that has something under the surface that cannot at the time be detected. He blunders when he renews an account for the very purpose of sending that account to some other company about the time the first payment is due. A real good loan man collects his own extremely bad accounts or has them charged to loss and gain and considers them memorials to his own blunders. Many ordinary slows at one office will be good accounts at another and can safely be made after the manager has ascertained the facts and reasons why he was slow to pay at the other place. Slow accounts are often the result of the manager's blunder of overloading or his blunder in getting too friendly, or by not properly explaining the transaction at the time the loan is made, or by giving extensions too freely,

The manager blunders when he sneaks out to some picture show in the afternoon, when he neglects to daily analyze himself and familiarize himself with his own shortcomings and errors of commission and omission. He must be constantly on the job, but he often can take short brisk walks in the open with very little loss of time and great benefit to him.

The manager blunders when he fails to get the combined support of the office force. If he cannot get the support of any member of his office he again blunders by not having a heart-to-heart talk with the guilty one and find out who is at fault. Then if he still refuses to support you, get rid of him at once. One disgruntled employee will cause disastrous results with the whole office force. The whole force must work as one unit to attain the proper success.

It is the duties of the manager to see that the outside man takes pride in his personal appearance. A clean shave and neatly pressed clothes gives the confidence it requires to get results. Do not allow the help to parade around the office with hats on. Do not allow any profanity either from the help or from the clients. If the clients are handled properly one word of warning will usually silence a boisterous client who imagines he has some grievance.

The manager also blunders when he fails to occasionally visit the other offices and give them new assurance he is there to show coöperation and will honestly give such information about any of his accounts as may be asked. There are still legions of other blunders I could mention but I will leave the other ones to your own imagination and will close by saying that he commits a very mean blunder who fails to properly coöperate with his State Association and show this coöperation by attending the meetings regularly.

A REVIEW OF "USURY AND USURY LAWS"*

BY REGINALD HEBER SMITH, MEMBER BOSTON BAR

"The man who loans $100 to his fellow-man who desperately needs it for a month, and who charges him $3.50 therefor and makes a profit of less than a dollar on the transaction, is not a 'usurer' in any true sense of the word. He is rather a benefactor. He is not a 'usurer' because his net profit is no more than a fair remuneration for the services rendered; he is not a 'usurer' because instead of exploiting the borrower, he is extending to the borrower precisely the financial assistance that he needs—a help which no urban commercial or savings bank and few charities would think of extending."

"It should be recognized that those men, who, at the risk of their own capital, are making it possible for necessitous borrowers to obtain small loans at fair rates, are filling a gap in our credit structure and are performing a highly important social and economic function."

These interesting quotations are taken from pages 149 and 137 of a volume just off the press entitled "Usury and Usury Laws." Here at last we have in book form a thorough-going analysis of the small loans problem written after several years of study by an impartial, disinterested scholar, Franklin Winton Ryan, who is an Instructor in Banking at the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

The history of the development of this book is noteworthy. In 1921 Mr. Ryan submitted the first draft to the Faculty of Harvard University and was awarded the Jesse Isidor Straus Prize Scholarship. Continuing his researches in order to comply with the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, the final draft was finished in 1923, was entered in the Hart, Schaffner & Marx prize essay competition, which is open to any American without restriction, and was awarded the first prize of $1,000 by the committee consisting of J. Laurence Laughlin of the University of Chicago, John B. Clark and Wesley C. Mitchell of Columbia University, Edwin F. Gay of Harvard University, and Theodore E. Burton of Washington, D. C.

After such eminent men have by two successive awards attested to the exceptional merit of this book, it would be idle for me to attempt to add anything in the form of praise. I shall, therefore, endeavor only to present a compact summary of the contents of this invaluable economic and legal essay.

As its title suggests, this book is not limited to the small loans field. Its scope covers the whole era of usury but Mr. Ryan finds that the situation with regard to small loans is the crux of the whole usury problem and he states that he regards the chapters dealing with small loans as the most important in the book.

The first fourteen chapters dealing with usury in its historical, economic, legal and social aspects lay the foundation for his observations on the Uniform Small Loan Act. This background sheds much new light on controverted points and is intensely interesting. It leads up to certain novel ideas that I have never seen expressed before and which seem to me of the highest importance. For example, Mr. Ryan shows that for more than a hundred years authoritative economists like Turgot in France and Bentham in England have made perfectly clear to intelligent men the absurdity and folly of the usual type of usury law that fixes the legal rate of interest at six, eight, ten, etc., per cent. The absurdity can be stated with a modern illustration. On Dec. 19, 1924, the Bank of France raised its discount rate to seven per cent and its loan on security rate to eight per cent. This was done for the most excellent business and patriotic reasons. If France had not long ago abolished her usury law, if she still had a six per cent usury law as New York and many other states still have, this necessary and beneficial action would have been illegal and impossible.

These arguments have been reiterated in America, all economists are agreed on the point, bankers and business men have urged the repeal of the usury laws, yet the legislators of the American states have steadfastly refused, and they have been adamant in their refusal. The legislators have been right, Mr. Ryan states, because they are determined at all costs to prevent the exploitation of poor and necessitous borrowers and if they had repealed the usury laws the poor would have been without any protection whatsoever. This attitude persists. In other words, our lawmakers will not repeal the usury laws until they can be shown how to protect in some better way the small necessitous borrowers. The answer, of course, is contained in the Uniform Small Loan Act and Mr. Ryan says that if the business interests of this country want to secure the repeal of the usury laws they must first secure the adoption of the Uniform Small Loan Act. This suggestion seems absolutely sound and I especially call it to the attention of the Committee on Legislation of the American Industrial Lenders Association. The members of this committee, by the way, will find this book to be full of excellent phrases and sentences that can be quoted with effect.

For centuries men have felt strongly about usury and the historical material in Mr. Ryan's book helps us to understand the origins of this peculiar, and to-day unreasonable, antipathy. The hatred of injustice is a natural and laudable human instinct. But the present day prejudice concerning usury does not spring from that source; if it did we should find just as strong a prejudice against merchants who sell goods at a large profit whereas, as a matter of fact, the community is apt to regard such successful business men as among its leading citizens.

It is hard to see how it can be right, on the one hand, to sell a ten-dollar chair for fifteen dollars and wrong, on the other hand, to sell ten dollars cash for a promise to pay fifteen dollars. Yet the distinction exists and is so old that it is recognized by law. The Supreme Court of the United States held the minimum wage law unconstitutional because it interfered with freedom of contract. Every usury law interferes with freedom of contract but the same Supreme Court has said:

"No court would declare a usury law unconstitutional even if every member believed that Bentham had shown for all time that such laws did more harm than good."

In its original form this antipathy to usury was a reasonable, logical feeling that is easy to understand and respect. Primitive people lived in tribes knit together more or less closely by actual blood ties, there was a feeling of kinship, the simple articles that were loaned—a plow, a spade, etc.—were loaned as accommodation for friends and not as a matter of business. The ancient notion that no interest should be paid on such a loan is precisely the same feeling I have to-day if I lend my brother a trunk. I expect him to return it but I do not expect him to present me with a suitcase in addition.

Well-intentioned but misinformed persons who oppose the Uniform Act at legislative hearings are fond of recalling this traditional feeling by reading the Biblical injunction against usury. Mr. Ryan quotes the famous passage but he quotes it all. Moses did say "Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother," but Moses defined usury as "usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything * *." Legislative adherence to this text would clearly involve regulation of the price of food as well as regulation of the price of money. The first recorded case of usury did not involve money at all, but occurred when Jacob induced Esau to sell his birthright for a mess of pottage. This was usury because Esau was faint from hunger, Jacob had food and he exploited his brother's necessity to the very utmost. The rule against usury at its inception was not a rule directed against money lending but was a rule directed against what we would to-day call profiteering.

The fact is that to-day, under radically changed conditions of life, this rule is no longer applicable because the reason for it has disappeared. With the growth of commerce and the necessity for capital, the matter of lending money becomes a definitely organized business entitled to its profit as much as any other business in the world.

The general usury laws of the several States were adopted early in our history by colonial and state legislatures which had in mind the English statute of 1713, passed in Queen Anne's reign, limiting interest to five per cent. It is noteworthy that at this same time England was regulating wages, the price of food and other necessities. When those ideas were transplanted to America the notion of regulating the price of commodities gradually faded away and under our constitutions the whole theory of price fixing, except in the case of monopolies as the public utilities, was relegated to the scrap-heap. Stringent regulation of interest rates remained, however, and it has continued down to the present time despite the fact that the European countries were, one after the other, repealing their usury laws.

The stubborn persistence of this feeling about usury in America for so long a time and in the face of the experience of the rest of the civilized world must be attributed to the small loans situation, where extortion is peculiarly easy, and which affects precisely that class of persons for whom the legislators in a democratic country are especially solicitous. The most recent state to enact a usury law is California at a referendum in 1918. The official pamphlet distributed by the state to the voters gave as the first point in favor of the law—"It will protect the poor man who cannot afford to pay high rates." It is the poor who apply for small loans. Generally they need the money, not to reinvest it in a productive enterprise, but to buy food, clothing, pay bills for rent, coal, and medicine. They need the money desperately, they have little or no security to offer, and they are in no position to bargain. It is obvious that the unscrupulous lender can exploit this situation and start the borrower down the road of compound interest from which there is no escape but death. This is the nub, the core of the whole usury problem and that is why Mr. Ryan who started to write a book on usury in general ended up by writing a book about small loans in particular. He saw perfectly clearly the direction in which the facts pointed and he followed them through until he came to the inevitable conclusion.

If Mr. Ryan's book can be brought home to the public he will have paved the way for a complete solution of the existing deadlock that has made our progress so painfully slow. Bentham proved the futility of usury laws as applied to commercial and banking transactions but he overlooked the small loan which is an entirely different transaction. This is precisely what the American legislators will not overlook. They intend first and last to protect the small man on his small loan. The tragedy is that in the absence of intelligent guidance they have adopted exactly the wrong method.

We all know this part of the story. We know how the legislators through their misguided zeal to fix too low rates have brought about deplorable and terrible results that have been a national scandal. Mr. Ryan states it well:

"Thus it came about that society in its desire to protect the needy borrower from exploitation and extortion, acting through the agency of public opinion, stigmatized the business of the lender as unsocial; and, acting through the agency of legislatures, made the business illegal. A lender could not make any profit at all under statutory maximums of twelve per cent per year or lower. The actual result was to increase the rates which borrowers were compelled to pay."

The first intelligent guidance came from the Russell Sage Foundation. The brilliant pioneering work of Arthur H Ham need not be detailed here because it is so well known. Mr. Ryan submits the Uniform Small Loan Act to a searching analysis, sets out its advantages and disadvantages, and after striking the balance concludes "We can find nothing to controvert the opinion that it should be enacted in every state."

Economists have developed, tested, and proved certain definite principles which are as inescapable as the law of gravitation. With these standards, Mr. Ryan measures the Uniform Act and finds i sound. He next proceeds to the vital question of the three and one-half per cent rate. It is refreshing to find a man who is not deceived by the phrase "interest of three and one-half per cent per month" as most persons are deceived. If a lender actually received as pure interest as much as forty-two per cent a year it would be indefensible. In fac in this forty-two per cent interest plays a very small part. Mr. Ryan estimates that "pure interest is not over one-eighth of the forty-two per cent total charge."

Regardless of the exact fraction, it is clear that at least three-fourth of the forty-two per cent rate has nothing to do with interest at all. We know tha but we seldom take the pains to talk explicitly about it. To call an item "interest" which is at least three-fourth no interest is like the trapper who claimed that he made his rabbit stew out of rabbi meat and venison fifty-fifty and when pressed to explain said "one rabbit, one deer is fifty-fifty." The failure to make this interest charge clear to legislators and the public generally is, to my mind the greatest hindrance in every campaign We use the phrase "interest at three and one-half per cent per month" because i is short and convenient. That phrase ought to be taboo, it is generally mislead ing, and it is as dangerous as TNT. What the borrower pays for expenses merely reimburses the lender for the actual cost of doing the business. No profit is involved, the lender makes no gain, at best he breaks even. "Interest" to most minds is synonymous with "profit." To the man in the street forty-two per cent interest means forty-two per cent profit. The instant a legislator hears the phrase his immediate reaction is "no." When rates are discussed the predominant part played by expenses must be explained and reiterated until it is clear.

The Uniform Act was designed to be, and is, a practical statute. Experience indicated that any system permitting fees and expenses to be charged as separate items was susceptible to abuse. Therefore all charges were rolled up into one lump figure of three and one-half per cent.

The word "per cent" connotes "interest" which in turn sounds like "profit." The word "per cent" is not commonly used to mean reimbursement for office expenses. The general usage is to express such items in precise figures of dollars and cents. Those who know the small loans business understand exactly what the three and one-half per cent covers and therefore what it means. But nobody else does and the phrase "interest of three and one-half per cent" first and last, every word of it, conveys exactly the wrong impression to every one who hears it for the first time.

The only way to correct this impression is to tell the exact truth in actual figures. Metropolitan banks have recently had cost accountants study their processes to find out exactly what it costs to make loans and carry commercial checking accounts. I suggest that a typical small loan office might well be analyzed in the same way. Nothing could do more to straighten out the misconception under which ninety-nine out of 100 persons labor as to the three and one-half per cent rate than proof that to make a $100 loan repayable in ten monthly installments involves a cost for overhead, bookkeeping, postage, collection, etc., that averages $3.00 per month (or whatever the exact figure might be). I believe that loan offices have reduced their actual overhead expense far below any comparable figure attained by any bank. But even that low figure when converted into a per cent item immediately looks and sounds big because while $30 is only .03 per cent of a $100,000 loan $3.00 is three per cent of a $100 loan. Tricks of mathematics and tricks of language conspire against us and our only course is to recognize these pitfalls and unremittingly strive to keep the facts clear and straight.

Three eloquent paragraphs may be quoted which give Mr. Ryan's conclusions as to the great virtue of the Uniform Act.

"..the only reason that can be ascribed to the legislators' refusal to repeal the general six, eight, and ten per cent usury laws was their sincere and well-intentioned determination to prohibit moral usury and exploitation. Yet, when legislators have honestly and without prejudice examined into the small-loans field where moral usury typically occurs, they have been forced by the facts to repeal the six, eight, and ten per cent statutory maximums in the field of small loans and to substitute therefor far higher rates of lawful interest—in most cases three and one-half per cent a month.

"Legislators in states where no such provision for consumers' small loans has been made may well be assured their six, eight, and ten per cent usury laws, instead of protecting the poor borrower and eliminating moral usury, have in fact turned necessitous borrowers over to the mercies of the worst type of lenders, the true loan sharks, and have created a condition under which their humbler citizens, instead of paying three and one-half per cent monthly charges, are in fact paying five per cent, ten per cent, and even higher monthly loan charges.

"On the other hand, the legislators in those states which have faced facts and have dealt with the problem accordingly, know that within their jurisdictions the new plan of regulation, with a fair loan charge geared to the actual expenses and risks of the business, has permitted honest capital to make small loans honorably, has lifted the whole situation out of the mire on to the plane of a legitimate banking service, and has exterminated exploitation, moral usury, and all the untold tragedy that necessity and ignorance have suffered at the hands of unscrupulous cunning and greed."

The credit union is considered by Mr. Ryan. In his opinion "it can never become more than only a partial solution to the industrial small-loan problem." He states the reason:

"The instant a credit union endeavors to serve the general public, it will have to pay rent, it will have to pay a living salary to a manager, and it will have the usual run of office expenses. In short, its costs will become as great as those of the industrial licensed lenders, so that, unless the credit union proposes to give no return on the capital employed in the business, it will be obliged to charge fully as high rates as those charged by the industrial licensed lenders. The advantages which reduce costs begin to disappear at the point where a credit union is organized to serve the general public."

An author who is so obviously impartial and whose keen mind has enabled him to tread the intricacies of the small loans problem and to appraise correctly the fundamental factors in the situation is entitled to a respectful hearing when he offers suggestions. Carefully avoiding any dogmatic pronouncement, Mr. Ryan suggests that there should be more flexibility in rates. It is his idea that loans might be classified as to amount, duration, and security, and that different rates should reflect the inherent differences in loans. The fixing and revision of such rates he would entrust to an administrative board or official as is theoretically done by the Massachusetts small loans act. He inquires whether three and one-half per cent is an adequate rate enabling legitimate lenders to make loans as small as twenty-five dollars.

These suggestions are timely and indicate questions as to which we should strive to keep an open mind. Such questions can be answered only by actual experience. We need to know more facts. I hope it may be within the scope of Dr. Robinson's survey to throw additional light on such considerations.

Nothing could be healthier for the small loans business than a continuing series of studies which may ultimately educate public opinion to a truer understanding. The battle for the Uniform Act must be fought for many years to come. Progress is none too rapid. The filing of briefs and presentation of arguments before legislative committees once a year is not enough. To permeate the public mind, to overcome inertia, prejudice, and misconception calls for continuous, not spasmodic, education. The right ideas, the true ideas must be sent out into the world through all available channels and especially through books and articles until those ideas finally gain sure lodgment in the conscious thought of the people. When that is achieved the Uniform Small Loan Act can be passed in every state in the Union in a single year. Towards this end "Usury and Usury Laws" is an important contribution. The forthcoming survey by Dr. Robinson and Mr. Hilborn will constitute another invaluable contribution. With the passing of the years let us hope that further studies will be made and further publications will be issued for the enlightenment and for the guidance of us all.

AN ADDRESS

By Hon. Edwin R. Cox at the Annual Meeting of the Pennsylvania Association, Philadelphia, Dec. 3, 1924.

Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, and guests: Mr. Watts is as amiable and courteous to-night as he was twelve years ago to me when I first took up this battle against the "loan shark."

The Mayor of Baltimore is a fine fellow, and he comes from a fine town, and I was down there last Saturday with a crowd of 80,000 other people, and they kept me there so long I almost made a vow I would never return to that great city. They were, however, very hospitable, but they would not let us folks go home, and it was one o'clock in the morning before we finally did reach home. And while it was a great game, it did not come up to the games we have out at Penn.

They tell a story about Mr. Babson, the great statistician, the man who forecasts the business of our United States, and we business men try to follow him, although his charts sometimes are very mysterious. Mr. Babson, at a meeting a couple of weeks ago, said he was invited down South by one of his clients to look over a large acreage that was being sold there, and he was amazed at the fertile soil and the wonderful trees on it. The man trying to make the sale was a good salesman, and he said to Babson: "All we need, Mr. Babson, is a few good people and some water," and Mr. Babson replied: "That is all that hell needs." (Laughter.) Now, I want to say to you to-night that all we want in this community is plenty of water and a lot of good people and then we are going in to win everything we start out for.

In 1907, when the great industrial panic visited our industrial section in Pennsylvania, I was working in welfare work in South Philadelphia, and it was then I met the first loan shark—not one, but hundreds of them. We were dealing out provisions from our station houses, and many people were coming there for food and other necessities so that they might live, and it was then that the operations of these loan sharks came to my notice. They wanted everything, they were not willing to share with the other fellow at all, and let me say this, when a man starts doing business and doesn't share with the other fellow, and doesn't realize the other fellow is a part of that community too, he is sooner or later going to be a back number, and unless you share with your neighbor and make life worth while to him too, your life amounts to nothing. It is the Golden Rule in business to-day, whether you are handling a business, commercial or financial, or whether you are in politics. The old order of things has passed and gone, and in the City of Philadelphia there is a new rule, and that is, we are going to give an honest, upright and truthful administration under this present Mayor of ours. It has been my good fortune to be able to handle the budget in the City of Philadelphia this year. Upwards of sixty-five millions of dollars probably will be expended, and I want to say right here, your tax rate is not going to be increased. I am going to say also that about 10,000 men in our city, including your police, firemen and park guards, have had their pay raised ten per cent. (Applause.)

Now, let me go back a little further in the loan shark business. You all remember how we worked for legislation to do away with the loan shark, and how at last we succeeded. You will recall also how you men endeavored to bring the business to a higher plane, under the sanction of the law, and I have watched you grow and grow. Nine years ago, I think I had the pleasure of looking at about a hundred men who had gathered together and agreed to go along under the act that we had passed, and to-night you spell this great word "Success." Captain Souders, now Assistant Superintendent of Police, was in Harrisburg, and I went to Harrisburg having just been elected to the Legislature, my first term, ambitious to help, ambitious to do something for my fellowmen, and naturally, I introduced the loan shark bill, and you all know what happened to it, the horrible battle over it, which cost me many nights' sleep. I met many men who were willing to help, and prominent among them was Mr. Watts, always courteous, always willing to work for the best interests of others and for the best interests of his organization. I was proud of him, I was proud to know him. And at last we passed the act and it was declared unconstitutional.

The citizenship returned me again, and again I returned the proposition, and the Governor vetoed it. And the citizenship again returned me, and we passed the act and it was declared constitutional. But I want to say my mind changed considerably in those years of battle. I was educated by you men, educated to realize that there were two sides to a question, educated to know that the men who were in that business also had rights, and when I began to realize that, I worked in every way I could for the men who were endeavoring to protect their business as well as to protect the citizenship. Then we got somewhere, and we wrote upon the statute books of Pennsylvania this law you are operating under. It is under my name, but I want to say to this assemblage that while my name is attached to it, too great credit cannot be given to every member of the legislature who was my colleague, and great credit also should be given to Captain Souder who worked side by side with me in endeavoring to do what was right for all—not for one but for all—and we have this act as a result of our work.

To say I am not happy to-night about it would be to lie, because I realize that you folks, just as the Mayor of Baltimore has said, have brought the standards of your business so high that you are now recognized legally in the State of Pennsylvania and doing business just the same as any other financial institution.

It is to your credit that this organization has grown to the size it is to-day. I realize that as you continue doing business as you have been doing it under the act, you will be respected far more in the future than you have been in the past, because "Nothing succeeds like success." I have sometimes blushed with shame in the last two or three years when I observed the vast amount of interest that has been charged by building and loan associations and by automobile people and then have looked back to the money that you folks were taking under the old régime, and yet you were called "loan sharks"! (Laughter.) I don't know what they can say to-day about the building and loan men or the automobile sales organizations. (Applause.)

There is no question in my mind that there is a standard in all things, provided we place that standard high enough and live up to it, we are bound to be respected. The public is very fickle, they soon forget.

We realize in Philadelphia that the loan business now is upon a plane that it does not take all the time of our detective agencies, and I also realize that there is growing up in the City of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania a greater and more serious evil, and that is the dope evil, and we have increased our detective forces in this city to combat that evil.

My friends, I want to assure you that your record is above reproach in Philadelphia for the past two years. I want to express my sincere thanks and appreciation for being invited here. I appreciate the honor, and I wish you all success. (Applause.)

MAKING CREDIT AVAILABLE FOR ALL

A good many thousand copies of "Making Credit Available For All" have been distributed throughout the communities in which our members do business and we are confident that this has been one of the best educational features ever undertaken by the National Publicity Committee. This account of the small loan businss, written by H. F. Woods, our publicity expert, is one of the most comprehensive statements crowded into a brief space, justifying the small loan business that has ever been prepared before. Members who have not received copies to date should place their order with R. F. Hartz, Chairman of the National Publicity Committee, 347 Bankers Trust Building, Indianapolis, Indiana.

One member used the following means of distributing the booklet in his community to business men:

> "Every Live Business Man
> Is Necessarily Interested in
> Other Lines That Directly or > Indirectly Affect His Business

"The enclosed booklet is being mailed business men to bring to their attention a credit factor that is of real importance.

"Ours is a business which is little understood and one in which the average business man thinks he has no interest. This view is hardly in accord with the facts, for it is well known that from 85 to 95 per cent of the people have no bank credit. Did you ever wonder how these folks finance themselves in an emergency? Have you ever thought how this problem affects your business?

"It is not our intention to make any argument along these lines here, but to let the booklet, which we hope you will read, speak for itself. We do, however, know that all business, including ours, is inter-related and the better our respective lines are understood by each of us the more practical the coöperation."

CODE OF ETHICS

Most members have been supplied with copies of the Code of Ethics, adopted at the Baltimore Convention and others who have not yet received their supply will get them before long. The purpose of the Code of Ethics in the first place is to acquaint all members with the rules of conduct which the National organization has adopted and it is hoped and expected that each member will practice the Code of Ethics faithfully in the conduct of his daily business affairs. Of course, we would like to see all the State Associations and individual members fall in line with the action taken by the National organization in this matter, but what is more important than all of this is to see that the thinking and so-called prominent citizens in every community are acquainted with our principles of business conduct. Business men's organizations, public welfare bodies, judges and other public officials should be sent copies of the Code with the compliments of the members sending them. It seems that a number of members have received very complimentary letters from officials high up in public life and others to whom copies of the Code have been sent.

DUES

Most of you no doubt have received from W. P. Woll, Chairman of the National Finance Committee, a request to say to what extent you would support the National organization during the coming year. Explanation was made at the National Convention of the necessity for an increased revenue over last year if the program of the National body was to be carried out. The demands upon the treasury are growing with the increased functions of the Association and if laws are to be enacted in States where the high rate lenders are in control and if the present laws are to be kept intact on the statute books, it is imperative that the members who are called upon to do this active service be supported liberally by the whole membership.

Assurances have already been received from many members, who will remit their dues this year on the basis of $1 per thousand on their average loan balance in accordance with the request embodied in the resolution adopted at the Baltimore Convention. In some cases some members will pay more than $100 per office per year on this basis. Another feature which is appreciated by the National Secretary's office is that many members will remit annual dues instead of semi-annual dues on February 1st, which will be a saving of time and expense all around. As the time for the payment of dues is again almost at hand, we urge and request all members to promptly remit in order that the national officers may meet their obligations promptly.

YEAR BOOK

Complimentary copies of the 1924 Year Book were promptly distributed among the members of the A. I. L. A., public officials, public libraries, and public welfare organizations last month. Members of the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations, because of mutual courtesies extended to members of the A. I. L. A. were also included in the free list. Possibly there are other persons interested in the small loan business who would like to receive copies of this publication, which contains a complete directory of the members of the A. I. L. A., the reports of the officers, addresses and discussions of our Baltimore National Convention, together with the Constitution and By-Laws, Code of Ethics, latest revised draft of the Uniform Small Loan Law, and a digest of State Small Loan Laws. Members who desire additional copies or others who would like to receive copies of the book can have their wants supplied as long as the edition lasts, by sending a remittance at the rate of $1.00 per copy to the National Secretary.

BALTIMORE

Baltimore, the official publication of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, November, 1924, issue, in an illustrated ten-page article, gives an interesting account of our Tenth Annual National Convention held in Baltimore September. The magazine also carries a half-page ad of the Maryland Association under the caption, "The Money Merchant Talks" in which an explanation is given of the necessary charge for small loans under the existing statute.

A NEW PATH ACROSS AN OLD FIELD

When I last addressed you, your committee selected the subject of my remarks. My good friend Mr. Watts, this time decided that selecting a subject for me would be futile. It appears there was a lengthy discussion as to whether I should be requested to again address you, which was quickly terminated when "Zeek" remarked: "Harry always does a lot of talking." We may as well put his name on the program. This morning when I asked my good friend Watts at what hour I should read this paper, he replied "We will hear from you this afternoon, because you know an audience is much more patient after lunch than in the morning."

My subject, as announced, is "A New Path Across an Old Field." I may adhere to the subject as closely as did Artemus Ward in his famous address upon Africa. After speaking for two hours about everything in the world excepting Africa, Mr. Ward said, "But my subject is Africa, and if you will consult a map of Africa you will know more about it in five minutes than I could tell you in a week." Now I say: Consistently read the INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS and you will learn more about "The New Path Across an Old Field" in five minutes than I will be able to tell you in the two hours allotted me by our chairman.

It is my good luck and your misfortune that I have just escaped Jury duty. Among those summoned and not wishing to serve was a fireman in charge of the boilers of a Manayunk Mill. After explaining to the Judge that he must be at the mill every day on account of frequent trouble with the boilers, the court asked: "For what length of time have you had charge of these boilers?" the fireman replied: "for twenty years sir," whereupon the Court said: "You will serve on the Jury and give the boilers a chance." I knew better than ask to be excused an account of making this address, as the learned Judge would have probably said; "You will serve on the Jury and give the convention a chance."

The money lending field is an old one. We have records of money lending and mortgage laws recorded on tablets that come to us from civilizations existing 4,000 years ago, and these records show that the lender was frequently accused of usury. It is therefore apparent that accusations relative to interest charges is anything but an innovation of modern times.

Coming down to a more recent period we find that Benjamin Franklin who died in the year 1790, leaving a will that provided twenty-five thousand dollars to be set aside as a trust fund for loans to young married artisans in Philadelphia and a like amount for Boston, a condition being that no loan should be of more than $300 to any person and all loans should be repaid with interest in ten equal installments. You will therefore readily see that the maximum amount of $300 for small loans, as well as a ten months payment plan, is anything but recent.

Coming down to very recent years I recall clearly when four kitchen chairs, a pine table, a large wooden cuspidor and a sixteen hour working day constituted a completely equipped money lending office. Oh! I forgot the two mottos on the wall—namely "Home Sweet Home." (which we seldom saw) also "Interest Sweet Interest" (which we did not always get) and yet another motto, not so conspicuously displayed read: "Try our painless endless payment plan, the more you pay, the more you owe."

Every path and organization must have a good foundation. The basis of our constructive work was really made by the Russell Sage Foundation. True, we at first said it was impossible to continue this business at the rate they proposed and it required many days of careful consideration before we finally accepted the terms of the Uniform Small Loan Law. Time and results have proved that the Russell Sage Foundation was right.

We all know of the recent rapid strides of our business made possible, not only by good laws, but with the coöperation of you men, whom I know are enforcing not only the letter but the spirit of this excellent law, so ably interpreted by the Secretary of Banking of this Commonwealth.

Our National and State organizations are doing a work of which we are justly proud. We all know that Industrial Lending is one of the fastest growing businesses in America. Growing, not only in volume but rapidly moulding public opinion in its favor. Therefore, no longer can the finger of scorn be pointed at the man engaged in the business of making small loans. We must not rest content with the great progress made. We aspire higher pinnacles.

The Uniform Small Loan Law is most equitable, if tampered with its usefulness will be sadly impaired and many thousands of worthy citizens deprived of obtaining money for commendable purposes at lawful charges.

We seek not a path terminating at the sign "Toleration," the goal we are striving for is the path terminating at the sign "Welcome." Glancing, about I see this path embellished with Moss, and made more Beneficial by a Young-Community-Booth. The path may now be trod Aright with a light Hart and the Courage of Lyons. It is illuminated by Watts and Wicks for all People of a good Household and is even safe for old Dobyns. In fact, the path may lead to regions considered Devine. However, with Woll, Huettmann, Zumpfe, Zimmerman and Doctor Mueller at the Helm, we may Buck the tide and take refuge under the East Lee of the Herron fleet.

Thanking you for your attention I close with the admonition to ever remember we are walking on a path which is clean. We must keep that path clean—Neither will we permit weeds to grow in our field.

WHEREIN LIES THE SUCCESS OF AN OFFICE

By W. F. Buck

The success of an office is one of vital importance, first to the owners or parent organization, second to the manager, third to the borrowing public.

The success to the owners consists in the amount of return on their investment and the permancy of the business.

To the manager it means a larger return in the form of salary and promotion to a more responsible position and sometimes a financial interest in the business.

And to the borrowing public, by the kind of service rendered either in the amount of money they receive, the size of payment they are to make or to some other one of many little human issues which the manager (and he alone) can do, to relieve some undue strain or worry.

The main office or owner can either help the manager to conduct a real successful office or can hinder him by either too much supervision or too many instructions.

A manager should be given wide latitude, freedom of thought, action and be unhampered by restrictions that are not applicable to his city.

It is almost an impossibility to have a main office issue instructions to their various managers that can be applied to each office under their control.

The conditions prevailing in one city are entirely different from another which may only be a few miles away consequently will require different handling by the manager.

Some offices issue instructions as to approving an application upon the amount of security the applicant must have, or the kind of position he must hold.

That is all wrong, for there are many applications which we take and make if it came to a question of collecting same through legal channels, we would not get 50% on the account.

There are other organizations who have so much system the manager does not have time enough to look for new business or keep after his collections, and so much supervision by men, who if it came to a shown-down could not manage an office even half the size of the one they are criticizing.

I know of a case in one of our organizations that the supervisor or auditor, I personally would not employ even as an outside man yet he tries to audit and instruct managers.

That is a question for the main office to decide and consequently has a lot to do with the successful operation of an office. Such men do not have the confidence, nor can they command the respect of the managers, consequently it weakens the morale of the office.

Let us boost the morale and make all of our men feel they are the most vital part of their office and their office is the most vital one of the whole organization. It will create a friendly rivalry among first, the outside men to produce the best results, then the assistant managers, and finally the manager who is the responsible head will try to do even better than he has ever done before.

Now for the Manager.

Do you ever start at the beginning of your month and figure the amount of interest you should collect for the month, take the number of working days and find your average per day and follow your collections by the day and try to keep up to the average you should collect?

Try it gentlemen, see how much it helps you in your work.

Do you ever take your slow cards, that is, real bad ones, and mark on them in some conspicuous place, from 1 up to 5 for the different types of slows and so much for skips located, call each number a point as one point 1, 2 as 3 points etc., and have your men see who can roll up the largest number of points per month?

You can either have it for clearing up the account entirely or receiving a substantial payment on principal and the interest to date or any number of ways that will make it very interesting to your outside men and in addition create a closer spirit among your men.

Do not hestitate to give them credit when they do an extra good job and also do not hesitate to call him any time he slips up on anything.

Also, check your number of accounts from week to week that are paying off and not renewing. Do not merely place them in the mailing list and forget about them until it is time to send out your usual O. K. letter, but keep your eye all of the time on the number of accounts in your turnover.

Mr. Manager you are the brains of your organization, your main office merely supplies the tools or money for you to work with and it is up to you to either make a success or failure of your office.

If your main office or supervisor issues instructions, do not hesitate to tell them if they do not measure up to the conditions and environment of your locality, they will not hesitate in telling you when you are wrong.

The main office is always open for suggestions and criticism, they are not infallible.

Write them at least once a month giving them the outlook of the business as you see it, that will broaden their views as to the needs of your city and if you are wrong or they have different views from you their criticism will broaden you and benefit your office.

Mr. Manager you are the one that by asking questions and by telling the main office your views and criticizing their method can gain all there is to be gained and make yourself invaluable to your organization and an eligible to higher and greater things in this most wonderful business.

Mr. Manager you are the one
"WHEREIN LIES THE SUCCESS OF AN OFFICE."

WHEN YOU WANT SERVICE GIVE SERVICE

By J. C. Lewis

There has been much written and said about service in the loan business, but the greater part of these articles and remarks pertains to our patrons. Service is such a great and paramount word in business to-day that every well thinking business man is striving to give the best that he has, not alone for the dollars and cents involved, but the good will that every act of real service produces.

I believe that every "honest to goodness" loan man, especially those in this association is conscious of the necessary service that we render the industrial class and is doing his level best to educate the public as to the value of this service, but what are we doing for the people who we continually come in contact with in order that our business may be properly carried on and accounts collected, namely: state officials, attorneys, sheriff and other public officers, charitable organizations, installment houses and brother loan men.

State examiners depend upon our service in order that this necessary business is conducted in a lawful manner. Are you closely watching the actions of other concerns and reporting any violation of the law to the department, thereby serving them and benefiting the standing of your business?

When an attorney makes inquiry about an account do you go just a little out of your way to give him full particulars and further educate him if possible? The one hundred per cent coöperation with attorneys does not only usually collect the account, but the rendering of such a service is also educational and a close follow up on the literature distributed, such as the "Code of Ethics," etc.

Three illustrations of the benefit derived from this sort of service comes very forcibly to my mind. In two of these cases the attorney assisted in the collecting of the accounts from his client. The other is worth relating the conditions as follows:

The assistant of a very able attorney and a man who was a State Senator and voted in favor of the Uniform Small Loan Bill advised his client to pay a certain company 6%. Immediately a conference was arranged. The cards were laid on the table with the result that the total amount was collected at once. The attorney was very thankfu for this service and the company was served to the extent that he is their friend and advises his clients differently to-day.

How can the sheriff and his deputies be served? By keeping in close touch with them as to the condition of accounts in their hands. Coöperate with them and accept the arrangements made by them (if reasonable) and they wil reciprocate one hundred fold on the accounts to follow.

Other public officers can be served by educating them to the fact that we are just what we represent. The warden o a certain jail absolutely refused to allow a loan man to interview a prisoner because of the nature of the business The manager made a personal call on this gentleman and after a lengthy interview he was convinced that we are no such bad fellows after all and to-day cannot do enough for the loan men. Yo may say this was not service but education, but if you will carefully compar the two you will find that to be educated is to be served, and if we serve w educate.

One of the most important duties o our service department is close coöperation with charitable organizations. Investigate the cases they call our attentio to with them and if the patron is reall down follow out the suggestions of th charity officers and show to them tha loan men not only have a principle, bu demonstrate the same by being humane It is no credit to the best collector i the business to attempt collection fror a pauper. There are occasional impostors that apply for charity, and have known the charities to assist in th collection of these sort of accounts b reason of the fact that worthy case were given every consideration.

What do you do for the departmer stores and installment houses in you locality, also those from other cities wh per chance forward you an account t look up?

I have always been a booster for th Retail Credit Men's National Associatio because we have so much in commo with these men. We make loans on th articles they sell. Their customers ar our patrons. They have bad account to collect and so do we, and many time they are collecting from the same peopl we are. Therefore, why not cement link in the chain of service with thes installment houses and department store if we expect their coöperation.

I have seen inquiries from departmer stores, installment houses, etc. thrown i the waste basket. This is not the spir of coöperation and service. The peop making these inquiries are human being and deserve some consideration. Sho them you are regular fellows and yo are sure to reap your harvest in servic

When such an inquiry comes to m notice I give the desired information (permissible) carbon the letter on th inquiry blank, place it on file. More information has been obtained on skip and bad accounts in this manner tha any one source of information I kno of. Some one will say that's all righ but it costs money, takes time, installment houses would make a collecting agency out of our office.

It may cost a little, take a short time, and you will perhaps experience imposition occasionally, but every loan and credit man should realize that this branch of service is an asset and not a liability. Dealing with credit men has taught me that this is true. While employed in Philadelphia, because of this service it was my privilege to shake by the hand with one exception the credit manager of every department store in the city and also a number of the installment credit men.

The following illustration is conclusive proof as to the value of serving the other fellow:

Very recently I was confronted with a bad separation case. The husband called at the office and wanted me to take the furniture, but said it was being purchased on installment from three houses. I immediately got in touch with these concerns with the result that they permitted me to sell the furniture, take our balance from the proceeds, and pay them from the remainder on a pro rata basis. I did not only get their word for this, but each of them put it in writing for the benefit of my files. Why did they take this extraordinary action? Because every time they asked for service they received it, not evasive or disinterested service, but service with a little pep to it. In fact we collected for one of these men a balance from a previous separation case that he would not have gotten otherwise. There are many cases similar to these coming to our notice every day.

Are you getting your share of service from installment houses, etc.? If not, there is a reason.

How are you treating your local competitors? It was my fortune to manage an office in a city where the selfish spirit was prevalent. These competitors were sociable when they met, but would give no business information to one another. Being a new man in this city one of them called me on the 'phone and asked about a certain account. I gave him the information desired and told him there were two things he could not have in my office—the cash drawer and a list of accounts, but I was anxious to serve him in any other capacity. This man called at the office the same day, not to get information, but to see if I looked the part I played over the telephone. We became very good business friends and this feeling spread among the other competitors and to-day I think everybody is happy.

What do you do with an account received from an out of town loan company or credit manager of some installment house? Is the card pigeon-holed until you have a spare half hour to attend to this matter? Do you feel that the collecting of this account means nothing to you in actual cash? Does the selfish feeling creep into your being that our accounts come first, the other fellows' later.

If so, how would you like a credit man in California to treat your accounts in this manner? We hear so much of educating the public, but education begins at home. We must be educated to educate, and I believe that one of the most important branches of the service department in the loan business is to serve each other, irregardless as to whether you personally know the other fellow or not. It should be sufficient to know that he is in the credit business and needs help. The public and credit world are not concerned as to who you are, but what you are, and this you can prove to them by the brand of service you give.

There are many other illustrations that could be given that show the value of service to the people who we expect service from, but it is sufficient to say that the gist of this article can be summed up in very few words—you reap as you sow, and you receive the same service as you give. Therefore, if you want service put a little spirit in the service you render.

INDUSTRIAL LOAN BUSINESS AS A VOCATION

By A. G. Zimmerman, Eastern Supervisor Beneficial Loan Society

The Industrial Loan Business, or Small Loan Brokers, as the business is classified, is one of the most interesting, fascinating, helpful and permanent businesses in the world.

Few realize that the better class of people constitute the borrowing public that satisfies its needs through the small loan service of to-day.

That the public appreciates the small loan service to-day is established by the manner in which they patronize the business.

To become engaged in the loan business to-day, the requirements are many; we must understand and have knowledge of the laws and regulations governing the business; accounting in every branch is applied to keep the records of each transaction. Credit investigation must be made so capital can be advanced and collected in order that pleasant relations continue to exist with the client.

Young men and women who are high school graduates and have taken a business course at college are the type of person that is being selected to-day. They are being trained in this special field of work which is being recognized by State after State that enacts the uniform Small Loan Law.

Many of the large organizations have bulletins giving special instructions to the service staff.

All members of the service staff must be healthy and alert, and the duties of an investigator are such that he is kept out of doors most of the time.

Many promotions come about through the transfer of a member of the service staff who has demonstrated his ability to handle a larger office than the one in which he has been working, and who may desire to live in another city. Such changes broaden their viewpoint, enlarge their experience and increase compensation. It also serves to bring the experience and knowledge gained in other locations to the benefit of the newer office.

Every position in the service staff work is standardized from careful analysis, in order that each employe may receive the best type of training most calculated to develop the best of his talents to achieve a definite success in his work.

In the course of a day's business the service staff is in constant contact with the general public, who, in a confidential business manner, consults with them about their present daily financial problems, these mostly being with respect to domestic problems.

These intimate, personal, financial details of a family are bared to us and in our confidential position, the modern loan man must not violate this confidence.

The work is very interesting and helpful to borrower and loan man.

Every business house in the community at some time has credit relations with the general public and many bills owed merchants are settled by our small loan service. In this way the borrower keeps his credit good and the merchant realizes quickly on his pending accounts.

The employees enjoy the benefits and business privileges extended by the members of National and State Associations, Chamber of Commerce, Board of Trade, Credit Men's Association, Credit Exchange Bureau and also give their support to charitable organizations. The help turnover is small as the service staff finds permanent employment where advancement is assured.

Every one engaged in the industrial small loan business should be proud to explain to new workers what an interesting vocation it is to follow.

"Daddy, why do the other fellows' fathers tell them that you are a success in your business?" asked my little son, as he came running in from school.

"Well, son, I don't know why they should say that, except that I have always been proud of my business, and maybe, that is the reason why I have attained some success, but why do you ask?"

"Oh!" replied the boy, "Because the fellows are always asking me to find out what you think of something."

The next day, a similar incident occurred, except that the question this time was:

"Daddy, what is your business? Where do you go every morning when you go to the office?"

"This time I understood his question and told him with pride in my tone that I was engaged in the small loan business and that I went to the office every morning to help other people. To my astonishment, he asked me if I were glad and proud that I was engaged in this business because he said that his chums' parents had told him they were in the finest business in the world—that of banking.

When I explained to the boy that I was working at a business that I would rather be in than anything else I could possibly think of, that I liked it so much that I would work at the business for nothing if I could afford it, he caught some of my enthusiasm and pride and a little while later, I heard him challenging his young friends to a discussion of the merits of the business of their respective fathers.

This is something of the pride that every one of us—in the small loan business—experiences. Our enthusiasm is rapidly becoming contagious and even though our industry is as yet, comparatively unknown as compared with other more widely discussed professions, an increasingly larger number of applications for employment in this small loan business are constantly being received by all lawful lenders. Personally, I think that our business is the finest business existing and I talk it, think it, and dream about it so that I am sure that the pride which I have in my work, communicates itself to those members of our service staff who come in constant contact with our borrowing public and they, too, become imbued with a similar spirit of pride that a citizen holds for his state.

After having spent years in this industry, and, as I regarded the future of our profession as being built on the solid rock of present activities, I am more and more impressed with the great primary need for a thorough understanding of our grave, moral responsibilities. As I regard ourselves—and as it has been confirmed innumerable times by my associates—we are in the definite class of receiving confidence of thousands of people who reveal to us that which they hold most private. We, in turn, must hold such confidences inviolate. The average borrower who comes to us, in this lawful lending business, is a normal, honest citizen with pride in his own ability and for his family. In revealing to us the secrets of his personal finances, he does so under the stress of necessity and because of our assurance that we will not reveal his confidence to any person.

Gentlemen, it is my earnest conviction that as soon as our great borrowing public learns that we really mean what we say when we tell them that we will protect their confidence—and those borrowers find out after a period of time that none of their friends have learned of their financial embarrassment, indicating that we have kept our word to them, then, and not until then, will our small loan business be lifted to the dignity of acceptance by the people of this country. When they learn that they can trust us, borrow from us in perfect safety and without fear of exposure and learn through actual experience or by the solemn assurance of an intimate friend that we are to be trusted—then will we be on our way towards permanent acceptance which spells success.

Every one of you who are actively engaged in the small loan business could undoubtedly reveal hundreds of pathetic, human-interest cases which have been adequately relieved by a small loan—the borrowers having repaid the loan and thus become staunch supporters of the lawful lender. If these human-interest cases should be collected from all of you and published in pamphlet form, such a collection would be the most striking evidence and offer the most complete set of reasons for the adoption of a small loan act by every state that we can possibly secure. Think of it, gentlemen, there are now only twenty states which have passed an adequate small loan act and under which lawful lenders are now operating for the help of citizens of that state. I venture to say that if we could properly regulate our propaganda and disseminate it among the sections of the country which we feel need our industry the same as this State, that we could arouse a great, sweeping, popular demand for the enactment of our small loan law which would have its instant effect upon the various state legislatures and maintain its insistent demands until the legislative and executive departments of the state department satisfy the people's will by such enactment. It would be a good deal like a manufacturer who, in an endeavor to popularize his own brand of candy, would seek to arouse favorable, popular opinion for his product and so, of course, force the retailers of his section to stock his goods. As far as I know, the small loan industry has never adopted this method of securing the enactment of our approved small loan law and I do not say at this time, that such methods would be the best, but I do emphatically uphold the principles showing the advantages of the small loan business to the borrowing public and ranging them on the side of the lawful lenders in a combined effort to have our Uniform Small Loan act passed.

Can there be any doubt in the minds of you, who have lived with this business from its inception as lawful lenders up through the vicissitudes of its struggles for recognition and who can read the handwriting on the wall for its glorious future, that in time the small loan business will become one of the largest, most popular and best recognized industries in our business world? We are succeeding and will continue to progress along the solid paths of fundamental building because we are sincerely giving a definite service of genuine help to more than 86 per cent of our countrymen. A well-served and satisfied borrower doesn't forget the lawful lender who helped him. In his way—whether loudly or quietly—he proclaims his satisfaction with the service of the lawful lender to all of his friends. He may not perform that act which all of us in the small loan business wish would happen, that of definitely recommending another borrower but he simply cannot help the thankfulness which he feels from communicating itself to others in one form or another. He proclaims the gospel of the lawful lender just as certainly as he would turn to that same lender again when in need.

For the general information of those of you who may not be entirely familiar with the purpose of the lawful lender under the small loan law, I will explain briefly that a lawful lender makes small loans in amounts up to and including $300 on the security of the borrower's house furniture which is left untouched in his home. The loan is made on the signature of husband and wife without further endorsers and runs from a period of one to twenty months, repayments being made to suit the convenience and income of the borrower; interest is charged at 3½ per cent per month on unpaid balances so that on the last month of the borrower's contract, the interest will only be paid on a very small sum. This interest charge has been arrived at after a period of research covering five years and an expense of several hundreds of thousands of dollars by the Russell Sage Foundation who recommended such interest rate as being most fair to borrower and at the same time permitting only a reasonable earning on the investment by the lender. Although it has been proved beyond further doubt that the vast majority of people are honest, there must still be allowed some small percentage for loss and this is covered by the general interest rate. There are no fines, fees or other charges and the borrower receives the full amount of the loan for which he applies. Most people borrow to pay pressing bills and keep their credit good in their communities, but there are many who borrow from a lawful lender to add to their savings for the purpose of making a first payment on a home or to assist needy relatives. Many classes of people avail themselves of the small loan business, ranging from the day laborer to the professional class and the incomes of the borrowers range all the way from $75 a month to $3,000 and $4,000 a year although the average earnings of the majority of the borrowers range from $100 to $200 a month.

The necessitous borrower finds in the lawful lender a friend who will respond to his financial troubles with practical help—such practical help being under the definite supervision of the state banking laws, which assures him of fair treatment and definite protection. He cannot go to the bank of his town because of the lack of proper security acceptable to banks and he is probably too proud to seek aid from his relatives or friends. Into this space comes the small loan business which actually serves more than 86 per cent of the people of this country. There has yet to be written a black mark against a lawful lender. They are scrupulous in observing the laws of their industry and are looking towards the future which they are building on their present helpful activities.

The lawful lender must be a man of more than normal intelligence, possessed of tact worthy of a diplomat and have an enormous amount of understanding and sympathy. His contacts with the borrowing public frequently reveal harrowing situations which are nearly always relieved. We have yet to hear of a lawful lender who has definitely turned away a case requiring financial assistance where its merits exceeded the security offered. Character, stability and reputation are far more weighty factors in the making of a small loan than the condition of the household goods taken as collateral.

The business of the small loan industry is one of the most interesting professions of which I know. It becomes as fascinating to a loan man as the newspaper business does to the genuine newspaper man. Its close contact with human nature at its best and worst is a never-ending source of interest and education. There are plenty of opportunities of advancement for the earnest worker, for after he starts as an investigator, he may rise to the position of manager after a period of training and experience. As the manager of an office, he has full authority for the granting of loans and becomes in actual fact, the confidant of hundreds of people of his city. His responsibilities, moral and financial, are worthy of being recorded in any book which attributes praise to the worthy. The small loan business is noted for its care of its employees. Insurance, education, opportunity for a transfer from one city to another, thus broadening a manager's experience and viewpoint, are common factors among the lawful lenders while the ever present thought of performing a daily humanitarian service is surprisingly large in its influence of attracting and retaining the affection of the average loan man for the small loan business.

To become engaged in the loan business to-day is to devote ones' self to one of the most interesting, fascinating, helpful and permanent professions in the world. Our understanding of the laws and regulations governing our business must be broad. Familiarity with every detail of the many varied departments of the business must be general and thorough. Our industry serves the merchants of a community in a very practical way through supplying money to individuals with which to pay their bills to merchants. Membership in and close contact with local Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, Credit Men's Associations, Credit Exchange Bureaus and attending meetings of the National and State Industrial Lenders Association, as well as taking our part in the civic and charitable life of the community, all serve to establish the individual engaged in this business in an enviable business of trust and respect in his community. To-day, gentlemen, we can say to you with challenge and pride that we have fought for, and acquired our place recognized as worthy of the vital part we play in the economic life of our country.

RETAIL MERCHANTS BUREAU

I appeal to you again for assistance in helping start a ball rolling among the lenders throughout the country, as I know how useful the propaganda in the LENDERS NEWS has always been.

As Chairman of the Special Committee, "Retail Merchants Bureau," I have a plan that if every lender will interest himself personally to create contacts locally with the merchants of his town, it will be very helpful in creating a friendly and coöperative spirit between them. Our work is along the same lines and our problems in the loan business are no different than those of the merchants, because it is a credit business pure and simple.

It would be a burdensome task for me to appoint a committee in each city for the purpose of a closer contact and better understanding between lender and merchant and if you will, through the LENDERS NEWS, broadcast my desire for assistance in what I am striving to do, I know it will be helpful and in addition to that if you will write to the secretaries of the various state associations asking them to appoint a committee in each city where the lenders are interested, the purpose of which will be for that committeeman to secure the assistance of his local lending members to visit the merchants and offer to coöperate with them in the saving of bad accounts and the locating of skips. The merchants in return, will in all likelihood, be helpful to us along the same lines.

It will be possible for us in many instances, to save a merchant giving credit to a man who we know, from our records, to be already overloaded to the limit. In other cases we may find it possible, if a merchant is unable to collect a delinquent account, to make that delinquent a loan with which to pay off the merchant and we take the responsibility of collecting.

In the matter of skips, we may have a fund of information that will be helpful to him in locating a skip or we may have the desired information at that time, which should be passed to them.

The merchants in some localities, still feel that the lender is a man who must be closely watched and who has not yet reached the classification, from his point of view, to being entitled to his friendship and trust. This is because the merchant does not know the lender personally and I am sure the contact will be very valuable to both lender and merchant.

When these committees have made their contacts and have had actual experience of real helpfulness, I would like to have them write me about the concrete cases, which will be useful to me in making my report for the next convention of the national association.

Your coöperation and that of lenders generally throughout the country, will be very much appreciated.

Very truly yours,
ARTHUR L. WICK,
Chairman Special Committee.

FACTS ABOUT PROVIDENCE

Providence, the Convention City!

This is the slogan that is being broadcasted throughout the length and breadth of the Country.

This is the lure that has attracted thousands to the city of Roger Williams during the past two years and is destined to attract thousands of others in the days to come.

Providence, true to the traditions of its founders, has followed the quiet, dignified conservative tenor of its way; happy in the satisfaction of praise well merited, of commendation justly earned.

But now, it has suddenly burst forth and presents to the world those attributes with which nature, history and literature have so richly endowed it.

Confident in its ability to make good its every claim, Providence appeals to the tourist to visit her shrines of religion education, industry and natural environment and with in all sincerity offers a cordial greeting and genuine hospitality of the generations of men and women who have made New England famous.

Providence has been selected as the place for the 1925 Convention of the American I. L. Assn. and is even now making the necessary preparations incident to the visitation of the members who, it is expected will embrace this opportunity to combine business with pleasure; get into the real atmosphere of old New England and become better acquainted with the members of the business they represent.

Providence, as a convention city, is a positively assured success and already several large gatherings—commercial, industrial, religious, philanthropic and fraternal—have been housed, feted and entertained. Many leaders in industry have, by the convention route been brought for the first time to Providence. Many others who have in the past made short business trips here are given their opportunity by a longer stay to know what Providence stands for in its industrial activities, in its social life and its historic associations. Neither from the standpoint of immediate and material gain can here be any doubt as to the importance of the Convention to those who attend.

Providence was founded in 1636 and was incorporated as a city in 1832. Like Rome it was built on seven hills—Tockwotton Prospect, Constitution, Smith, Federal, Christian and Willard. The first Mayor was Samuel W. Bridgham who served from June, 1832, to Dec. 3, 1840, dying in office. Since then there have been 24 Mayors, the present incumbent Joseph H. Gainer, having been in office since January, 1913.

The members of the American I. L. Assn. who assemble here for the Convention in 1925 have much to see that is of historic importance. New England is rich in this respect and offers attractions of surpassing beauty and interest. In these days of the automobile and trolley car, distances between points of interest cease to be great or prohibitive. Within easy reach of Providence are to be found world-famed Newport and Narragansett Pier, where nature and wealth have combined to bring forth beauty and where society makes its Summer capitol. The Atlantic Ocean is at Rhode Island's front door, sweeping miles of its coast and affording bathing beaches that are unexcelled, and in the parlance of the day we exclaim, "The water is fine—come in." There is nothing so exhilarating as a dip in old ocean on a hard sandy beach with the surf breaking musically over it.

At no great distance from the seat of the convention—scarcely more than a couple of hours drive by auto through a delightful country with ever-changing scenery—is historic Plymouth where the Mayflower landed that intrepid band of Pilgrims who laid the foundation of an enduring State; and Cape Cod, Martha's vineyard and Naturkcet, wind swept and ocean beaten but quaint, picturesque and restful. Boston, "the hub of the universe," only 45 miles from Providence, has an allurement all its own, appealing to every American who has an interest in the beginnings of our National life. Here patriotism's fires burned brightly; here the hallowed places have been preserved as nowhere else in America, and on every hand are to be seen the memorials of the heroic past—Fanueil Hall, the old South Church, Bunker Hill Monument, Harvard University—beacon lights in the country's history.

Providence is the shrine of religious tolerance, and the visitors, as they go about the city, will see many places and things with which Roger Williams the Apostle of Soul Liberty, was intimately associated.

This flight of Roger Williams was 29 years after the first English settlement was established at Jamestown, Va., where the immigrants either toiled ceaselessly on land that was not their own, and produced crops for the benefit of others, or went without provisions from the common storehouse. Roger Williams and his band of living companions acquired land from the Indians. Passing over the period of the King Philip War which resulted in the disintegration of the great Narragansett tribe, for the visitors will not have the time in which to inspect the scene of the great Swamp Fight near Kingstown or to run over to Mount Hope, King Philip's stronghold, reference is now made to the part Rhode Island took in making the early history of our nation.

It was in Narragansett Bay that the first blood was shed in the war of the Revolution in an encounter between the citizens and an invading force. This was when the British revenue schooner "Gaspee" was burned by patriots, who, hearing that the much-hated "Gaspee" was aground on a sand bar some 10 miles down Narragansett Bay and must lie there until the rising tide floated her off, rowed down the bay after dark and fired the ship. That was on the night of June 10, 1772, the old Sabin tavern in which the conspirators met has long since been torn down but there are numerous other interesting historic buildings yet to be seen.

Boston had her celebrated "Tea party" Dec. 16, 1773, but Providence had one of her own, burning tea in Market Square, March 2, 1775. At little more than a month later came the uprising and the battle of Lexington, and the colony had 1,000 militiamen ready to start for the seat of war as soon as the information arrived here that the red-coats had opened fire upon their Massachusetts brethren.

June 15, 1775, the first actual naval engagement of the Revolution was fought in Narragansett Bay between a colonial sloop commanded by Captain Abraham Whipple and a tender of the British frigate "Rose" the tender being chased on the Conimicut shore and captured, about a mile below where the charred wreck of the "Gaspee" marked the encounter Captain Whipple had had two years before.

That same month General Nathanael Greene of Potowamut County, R. I., was chosen Brigadier General and made Major General by the Congress, and throughout the Revolution he was Washington's closest and most trusted officer, ranking next to the great commander-in-chief. Also in that year, Nov. 5, 1775, the Congress appointed Esek Hopkins of Providence as the first commander-in-chief of the Continental fleet with the rank of Commodore.

General Washington visited Providence in April, 1778, and so aroused the patriotism of the people that on May 4, two months before the signing of the Declaration of Independence at Philadelphia, the Colonial General Assembly of Rhode Island formally renounced allegiance to Great Britain. That action made the old State House still standing on Benefit Street, a permanent shrine of Liberty.

To the east of the ancient while church known as the First Baptist Church, is the brick building occupied by the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, built in 1842 and successively used as the Providence High School, the State Normal School, Rhode Island College of Pharmacy and now as a court house.

Then, at the corner of Benefit and College Streets, is the Providence County Court House, erected in 1877, and considered one of the most elegant buildings in its architectural proportions, design and finish in New England. And opposite this is the Providence Athenæum, rich in possession of historic portraits and literature. A short distance along Benefit Street to the south, is the George L. Shepley Library which contains a collection of rare finds and exhibits.

Next the visitor should climb College Hill to inspect the grounds and buildings of Brown University. It was originally known as the Rhode Island College and was incorporated in 1764. The oldest building on the campus is University Hall, which the British Troops appropriated as barracks and where the French troops, under Count Rochambeau, were quartered. Opposite the University is the beautiful John Hay Library. Across the middle campus is the John Carter Brown Library.

There are a hundred and one reasons why the visitor ought to take a whole day off and stroll about the East Side and inspect many of the singularly beautiful strictly Colonial houses that are in perfect state of preservation—some of them palatial mansions erected by merchant princes who were owners of fleets of big vessels that plied between the Port of Providence and the leading ones of China, Russia and the East and West Indies, bringing home great cargoes that added immensely to the wealth already accumulated. In other houses more humble in aspect and surroundings, yet the homes of the well-to-do people of the 18th century are perfectly splendid examples of highly prized Colonial doorways.

But it is not alone on the East Side that the visitor will find points of interest, although that is the original section of the city. There is hardly any direction in which one may turn that he will fail to find something out of the ordinary and consequently interesting. At Market Square as the "Great Bridge" is called, and where there has been a bridge since before 1773, is the Chamber of Commerce building, originally the Town Hall and public market of Providence. It was erected in 1773 on funds obtained from an authorized lottery, which was a favorite way of financing public projects in Providence in colony days, and everybody willingly took a chance of winning the capital prize. The Great Bridge was obtained in that way and so was the First Baptist Meeting House, on North Main St.

An attempt to establish a market house on a lot at the east end of Weybosset bridge, as the Great Bridge officially came to be known, was begun in 1758, but from various causes it was not carried into successful effect until 1773, when the necessary preliminaries of discussion, various town votes, grants, and a lottery scheme, having been gone throughout the first stone of the structure was laid on the 11th day of June. The building was of brick, 40 feet wide by 80 feet long, and two stories high. The lower story was used as a market, while the second story was divided into offices for the various officers of the town. In 1797 the town granted permission to St. Johns Lodge No. 1 of Free Masons to erect a third story upon the building and this, arranged by the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island on St. John the Evangelists's Day, Dec. 27, 1797. This date is memorable as marking the dedication of the first Masonic Hall in Rhode Island. In this Hall St. Johns Commandery of Knights Templar was constituted in 1802. The building, with slight alterations on its eastern end still stands on its original site and is now occupied by the Providence Chamber of Commerce.

After an occupancy of about half a century the city, in accordance with the agreement entered into at the time that the permission was granted, acquired from the Masons their hall and devoted it to municipal purposes. The building was the centre of municipal activities until removal as made to the present edifice in November, 1878. The old "Market Building" was then leased to the Providence Board of Trade, now the Chamber of Commerce. The site of the present City Hall, at the west end of Exchange Pl., was purchased by the city on April 22, 1854, but it was not until March 26, 1874, that the city council appointed a committee to proceed with the erection of a new building. The corner-stone was laid June 24, 1875, and the dedication occurred Nov. 14, 1878. The building is of Westerly and New Hampshire granite and was originally three stories in height with basement and mansard roof. In 1814, the building having been out grown, extensive alterations were begun and a forth story added.

Across Washington St. from the new City Hall is the new Providence—Biltmore Hotel, where the sessions of the American Industrial Lenders Convention are to be held. To the north of this is the Union Station, completed in 1899 on site formerly occupied by the Cove Basin, a mile in circumference. It consists of a long, low series of buildings of plain but dignified architecture harmonizing admirably with their surroundings. It is regarded by railroad engineers as one of the best combinations of double terminal and through station in existence, and as one of the best operating stations in the country. The traveler approaching Providence by train arrives at the Union Station and proceeds outwards by either of the subways or by the main entrance. He finds himself facing south upon a great plaza in the very centre of the city. A noted Boston architect recently said: "Providence has taken advantage of an opportunity to create a beautiful Civic Centre such as any city in the world might envy, and it has been the first of the large cities to achieve results along the lines to which so much modern thought is being given." The city has set aside for itself land valued at more than $3,000,000 and has converted it into a fine square, making a railroad entrance unsurpassed in America.

This first realization of modern "Civic Centre" idea in America is a long rectangular plaza that formerly, like most of the present business district of Providence, was covered by tide water. It is adorned with a mall and around this area many of the notable public buildings are placed. In addition to the City Hall, Biltmore Hotel and Union Station, there are the Federal building, Central Fire Station, Butler's Exchange, Industrial Trust and Rhode Island Hospital Trust buildings.

But the Civic Centre of Providence has not yet been completed, as the plan contemplates equal improvements to the north of the Union Station. As soon as the freight yards have been moved away from the very dooryard of the Capitol, the city and State with the railroad, have in view great things in the way of transformation. The freight yards will, as soon as the new yards are completed far to the north of the present location, give way to public gardens.

Over beyond is the gentle eminence of Capitol Hill. The left stands the Rhode Island College of Education, formerly the State Normal, in a beautiful garden, where once were ugly foundries and the old State Prison. Almost on a line with the College of Education is the attractive library building of the Rhode Island Medical Society and above this is the group of dwellings that in a few months are to be razed to give place to the proposed new Masonic Temple and Auditorium to cost $1,5000,000.

On the opposite side of Francis St. the land has been swept clear of a motley collection of ramshackle rookeries and dilapidated tenement houses within a few years and the massive State House rears its classic marble portico and its great dome towards the sky. A happy harmonizing of dignified lines and exquisite detail is this building of the Commonwealth—one of the noble buildings of America and an everlasting joy to all who look upon it.

Above the plaza upon the east rises the varied sky line of Prospect Hill, with its rich Summer foliage obscuring all but the highest roofs and the gradeful spires of the "aristocratic section" and crowned by interesting buildings of the old university, while conspicuously silhouetted against the sky, high above the tree tops, is the ornate dome of the Christian Science Church.

Over on Meeting St. is to be seen the first free school erected in Providence in 1768. It is the oldest public school building in America, and it has been in continous use all these years. To its glory is added the distinction of being the first open-air school for tuberculosis children in America, its use for that purpose dating from 1908.

The visitor will probably be not a little surprised when informed that in the heart of the retail district of Providence is a business building unlike any erected in any other part of the country—the Arcade building built in 1828, in the form of an Ionic Greek temple. Its immense stone columns, three feet in diameter and 27 feet in length, the largest monoliths in America excepting those of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York, were each cut from solid granite taken from a quarry in North Providence and conveyed to this city on great slings mounted on tremendous wheels purposely constructed for the undertaking, the hubs of which were as large as flour barrels. Particular attention is called to the hanging stairways at either end of the Arcade. They are apparently without any support, yet each step is so locked into its fellow that the stairs are as rigid as though made in one piece of cast steel.

Providence is particularly proud of its new State House, the marble dome of which is the largest one made exclusively of that material in this country, and is surpassed in this respect only by the dome of St. Peter's at Rome. The city is also proud of its front gateway, the civic centre at Exchange Pl., for there is no other city in the world which has so large and so attractive a one as ours.

There may be among the visitors those who enjoy looking over State Armories. If so, it might not be amiss to say that the drill shed of our big Cranston St. armory is the largest similar hall in New England while the Mounted Commands have a fine building on N. Main Street just at the city line to Pawtucket. Some may be interested in institutional work, and to such there is recommended an inspection of the Dexter Asylum property in the heart of the finest residential section of Providence, on Hope street, and valued in excess of $1,000,000 which can never be used for any other purpose than that of affording shelter to the poor of the city whose forebears were real estate taxpayers and bona fide settled inhabitants of this community. When Ebenezeer Knight Dexter bequeathed this "stone Farm" to the city for poor house used it was "way out in the country," as was the Dexter Training Ground on the west side of the city, likewise a gift from him, which also has a value greater than $1,000,000 and must forever be held as a field for military manœuvres.

As a manufacturing centre, Rhode Island ranks among the foremost in the country; the manufacture of woolen, cotton, silk and other textile fabrics form the most extensive industry. The annual output of woolen and worsted goods under normal conditions represents in the aggregate of value approximately $75,000,000, requiring more than $40,000,000 of raw material and furnishing employment for more than 30,000 operatives. With establishment by Samuel Slater at Pawtucket in 1790 of the first successful cotton factory in America, Rhode Island immediately took front rank in this industry, and almost from its inception the State has been among the leading cotton manufacturing commonwealths, with extensive plants scattered throughout its length and breadth, and along the banks of the Pawtuxet and Blackstone rivers and their affluents are numerous villages where the cotton mill furnishes the principal support of the residents.

The total number of cotton spindles according to the reports of 1922 is more than 2,750,000, producing millions of yards of cotton goods, mostly of the finer grades, having an estimated valuation of $60,000,000 and consuming about $37,500,000 worth of raw material. There are upwards of 35,000 men, women and children in Rhode Island who receive employment from the more than 150 plants.

The jewelry industry is of the next importance, when considered as a State product, but a leader in the industrial life of Providence second to none. While handicraft or hand-wrought jewelry and silverware were produced in this country from the earliest days of the colonies, to Providence unquestionably belongs the credit for the establishment of the manufacturing jewelry industry along the lines that have developed it into the great factor it has become in the industrial life of the city.

In 1794, two brothers—Nehemiah and Seril Dodge—who had manufactured by hand, buckles, tableware, ornaments, etc., in gold and silver for a number of years, began manufacturing jewelry to be sold by others. They were located in a small building on North Main Street, near the corner of Steeple Street and not far below the spring where Roger Williams erected his original home in the colony.

From this humble beginning has developed the industry that is now the third largest in the city's diversified list, including upwards of 300 concerns, many of which own and occupy their own specially constructed and equipped factory buildings. To such an extent has the small beginnings of the Dodges expanded that Providence stands at the head of the Jewelry producing communities, not only of this country but of the world.

It is interesting to note that as the manufacturing jewelry industry grew, there became an increasing demand for cheaper grades, and to Thomas H. Lowe, of Providence, an Englishman, must be accorded the credit or originating rolled or "sweat" plate in its present form and method of manufacture in this country. This was in 1850 and the three-quarters of a century that has passed, although many improvements in machinery have been effected, the general method of manufacture has never been successfully deviated from.

In the jewelry factories of Providence and the Attleboros all classes of goods are produced, from the finest designs in platinum and gold embellished with diamonds and gems, to the cheapest lines of "shaded" goods that are made by the ton and retailed over the five and ten cent counters. While about 50 of the more than 300 concerns employ less than 25 hands, the remainder of the firms engaged in this industry employ from 25 to more than 1,000 persons, with a total average employment in normal seasons of approximately 20,000 males and females. These have an estimated average yearly wage of more than $900 for the entire industry. The individual diem working wage, although considerably higher than in any other industry, suffers through the medium of lost time that materially lessons the yearly total.

For a great many years the jewelry district of Providence, which had worked its way from the centre at N. Main and Steeple Streets to the west side of the river, was practically bounded by Weybosset, Dorrance, Ship and Chestnut Sts., in which section were a number of buildings of three, four and even five stories that were almost entirely occupied by manufacturing jewelry plants and coordinate business. One of the oldest of these, the Richardson-Hicks building, corner of Page and Friendship Sts., is still standing and generally occupied by jewelers. It was originally built about 1835 for other purposes but gradually became the home of jewelry concerns.

The first big jewelry building in this country to be built for the exclusive use as a manufacturing jewelry centre was the Fitz Gerald block on Eddy St., extending from Friendship to Clifford Sts., erected by the late Michael Fitz Gerald in 1879 and still occupied by jewelers. But the largest of all, anywhere, is that which was erected by the manufacturing jewelry concern of Kent & Stanley on Aborn, Sabin and Beverly Sts., The site selected for the enterprise was then thought to be so far removed from the jewelry centre that it did not appeal to the trade, and for a while was a failure, and Kent & Stanley went to the wall. But to-day as the Manufacturers' building it is a humming hive of the jewelry industry. Within the past decade a large number of jewelry buildings have been erected, the jewelry district has expanded into every section, south and west, and many concerns have erected buildings especially for their own business.

The silverware industry, which is closely identified and often co-ordinated with the manufacture of jewelry, is very important and contributes materially to the volume and value of the activities connected with the working of precious metals and their alloys. Here again great credit is due to a Providence man as a pioneer in laying the foundation of a great business factor, and the name of Jabez Gorham must always stand high on the roll of fame in everything that pertains to silversmithing in this country. In 1831 he began in this city the manufacture of silver spoons, thimbles and a few other articles in that line. Six years later, as business steadily increased, he took his son John into partnership with him, the style of the small but energetic firm becoming Jabez Gorham & Son. This was the birth of the present immense establishment, occupied in 1890, consisting of a fine group of buildings on a property in Elmwood embracing about thirty acres, the largest silverware concern in existence and known the world over—The Gorham Mfg. Co.

Besides working in silver, the Gorham Co. makes artistic bronze office and house furnishings and every variety of architectural bronze work. From its foundry have come many heroic-sized statues and groups erected in various parts of the country as war and other memorials. Many of the World War bronze tablets in town and municipal buildings, shops and industrial plants commemorating the service of citizens and of employes were made by this concern.

There are nearly a score of other firms, large and small, engaged in silversmithing, with upwards of 2,500 employes. Other allied or coördinate branches, including refining, engraving, chasing and engine-turning, enamelling and electroplating establishments, etc., increase the total number of persons dependent upon the jewelry industry as actual workers to approximately 25,000. The total capital invested in all the varied branches of this industry is $50,000,000 and the value of the products for the average normal year is estimated at about $60,000,000.

The story of the port of Providence reads like the unfolding of a romance, the first chapter of which was written as early as 1652, only sixteen years after Roger Williams settled here. Privateering was begun by Providence shipowners as early as 1649 and in 1652 John Smith established the exporting trade by sending tobacco, flour and peas to Newfoundland, the return cargo apparently consisting largely of liquor. As a natural sequence of this exportation and importation business, local ship building was inspired and for more than a century Providence maintained its preëminence as one of the leading maritime centres of America.

A person coming to Providence by water or making a trip up or down the beautiful Narragansett Bay is struck by the great number of big oil tanks and the coal pockets that dot its banks. These form the principal activities of the port, Providence for many years having been the principal coal distributing port of New England, and is now rapidly developing its oil distribution.

Some years ago the Standard Oil Company recognizing the possibilities of Narragansett Bay as a great oil distributing centre, obtained a footing on the east side about five miles south of the city and now owns several square miles of land, with a large group of buildings and is erecting others that will constitute an oil city that is rapidly becoming the first in importance on the Atlantic seaboard. It has already spent upwards of $10,000,000 in development work, building its ship terminals, pipe lines, refineries and chemical works in the Riverside section of East Providence where kerosene, vaseline, lubricants and by-products are being made on a huge scale.

In addition to the Standard Oil Co. the Mexical Petroleum Corporation, or the Mexpet Company, more familiarly called, the Texas and the Gulf Refining Company, all have extensive plants and are continually increasing them. During the year 1922 there were nearly 10,000,000 barrels of oil brought into this port by these four concerns. Last year there were more than 1,750,000 tons of coal landed in this port, notwithstanding the general embargo there was on this commodity. Within the last year this city has taken an active hand in the development of a lumber port and at present one concern is shipping lumber into Providence from Oregon, via the Panama Canal, at the rate of at least two cargoes a month that average nearly 1,500,000 feet per shipment. This will rapidly bring Providence to the forefront as a lumber port and materially increase its annual receipts which, during 1922, amounted to more than 13,813,000 square feet.

The Rhode Island School of Design began its existence in 1877 when the women comprising the Rhode Island committee of the Centennial Exposition voted to appropriate their surplus, amounting to $1,675 for the founding of the school. The main building on Waterman St. contains the Museum, administrative offices, library, rooms for the departments of drawing, decorative design and architecture, and a students' social room. Memorial Hall on Benefit St. contains rooms for the department of sculpture and other classrooms and a large hall seating 800 persons. The Mechanical building, off Market Square, is occupied by classrooms of the mechanical department and the machine shop. The Jesse Metcalf Memorial building, on North Main St., contains the department of textile design and laboratories of textile chemistry and dyeing. The Jewelry building, on North Main Street, at the entrance to the East Side tunnel is the latest addition to the group of buildings and contains the department of jewelry and silversmithing. It is of reinforced concrete, four stories high, with a total floor space of 19,700 square feet, most carefully designed in every way for the purpose for which it is intended. The machinery equipment was chosen for its practical value and presented by the New England Manufacturing Jewelers' and Silversmiths' Association. Then there is the Pendleton House, most unique institution in that it houses an unequalled collection of colonial furnishings in a colonial-type dwelling built especially for it. The school had approximately 1,100 students enrolled on its books last year to receive instruction.

This article would be incomplete without reference being made to that world-famed production of this glorious State—The Rhode Island Clambake—a magnet that has a potency none can deny, causing the steps of all who come within the portals of "Little Rhody" in the Summer time to turn toward the common goal. Some, to whom the succulent bivalve and its accessories are already familiar, press confidently on with poorly concealed eagerness. Others advance with the air of hesitation which proclaims the neophyte. But to visit Rhode Island and not partake of at least one clambake would be to fly in the face of all established customs, rules, regulations and traditions. During the stay of the delegates to the American Industrial Lenders Convention opportunity will be afforded for a close acquaintanceship with this epicurean triumph, this honored rival of Rhode Island's equally famous contribution to national dietetics, the Thanksgiving turkey, the relish for which seems to increase rather than to diminish as it becomes more familiar.

The history of the clambake has never yet been written. To unfold in fitting terms its mysteries, to describe the successive steps through which perfection has at least been reached, requires a pen of more than ordinary ability.

"Mya arenaria" is the scientific name of the common "long clam" of Narragansett Bay. The "Long clam," or, as it is sometimes called the "soft clam," must not be confused with the quahaug or "round clam." The distinguishing feature of the "Long clam," aside from its shape and texture of shell, is the "siphon"—the native New Englander calls it "snout." Those who have not penetrated the secrets of the truly wonderful mechanism of the clam are often greatly puzzled when they attempt to extract it from its hard elongated shell. Upon nearly all the shores of New England the clam is found in abundance. Several times in the history of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island colonies, the white settlers would have perished but for this lavish food supply which nature had provided for them.

From the Indians the English learned the way in which the clam should be cooked. The Englishman tasted and pronounced them good, and upon the shores of the Narragansett the "clambake" has gradually been brought to its state of perfection that now gives it a place among coveted feasts. The making of a "bake" is an "art" that calls for professional directors, and the method followed is interesting to the visitor.

In the first place a rude floor of stones is laid, upon which a pile of ordinary "cordwood" is thrown. This is allowed to burn until the stones beneath begin to crack with the heat. The ashes are then carefully brushed away and a thin layer of sea-weed—the ordinary "rock weed," indigenous to the New England shore—is thrown upon the heated stones, and upon this carpet are spread the clams in a layer of uniform thickness. On top of these are placed baskets and pans of dressing, lobsters, potatoes, ears of green corn, fish rolled in corn husks, sausage and other edibles, according to the desires of those who are preparing the "bake" and over all a thick blanket of "rock-weed" is placed. Then a huge piece of canvas is covered over the whole and fastened down at the corners and sides so as to keep in all the steam and the fragrant pile is left to itself for about 40 minutes. The steaming vapors from the clams permeate the whole mass and impregnate everything with their rich odor. Then the "bake" is opened and the repast begins, and thousands of men would, any day, willingly leave the well-appointed table of the best hotel or club in the country to partake of this royal feast.

Territorially the smallest State in the Union, it has the longest name, the official designation being "State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations." Until the new capitol was built in 1900 it also had two capital cities, Providence and Newport. But there was never any divided allegiance in the cause of loyalty or humanity and there is no divided allegiance in the expression of cordial welcome extended to the members and friends of the American Industrial Lenders Assn. Providence has thrown wide open its doors; the latch key has been cast away and the city will belong to the American Industrial Lenders of the country during their visit.

It remains for the lenders to avail themselves of the opportunity and partake of the feast of good things—social, industrial, historical and traditional. Down the long years of the development of the Union the watchword has been "Westward Ho!" But the lure is in the East and Providence is the magic lodestone.

TO EXECUTIVES

Just as the need for financial assistance arises in your own business so it occurs in the affairs of individuals—your own employees for instance.

You instinctively turn to your bank but not so your employees. The amount required is too small and there may be nothing to offer as collateral but personal property and a reputation for honesty and integrity.

We want executives to know that the individual members of this Association are organized to meet the needs of your employees requiring financial assistance in sums from $10 to $300. Every transaction is handled on a straightforward business basis by men of high standing in their community.

The entire business is under the supervision of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Illinois.

Get acquainted with one or more of the members of this Association so that employees requesting financial help can be directed to the one most conveniently located.

YOUR EMPLOYEES

—cannot possibly be as efficient when confronted with financial worries.

It frequently happens that $100 will satisfy all tradesmen pressing their claims.

But where to go for the $100 and not pay an exorbitant rate of interest has been a problem with many individuals.

They are in no position to go to a bank. That is why members of this association were organized—to meet this very need.

The great number of transactions we handle to the complete satisfaction of the borrowers testify to the urgent need of the business and its value to employers and business men in general.

We make it possible in time of emergencies for the individual to consolidate his obligations—and then make it easy for him to pay.

The business of each member is conducted by men of high standing in their respective communities and under the supervision of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Illinois.

Get acquainted with one or more of our members. The next time any of your employees ask you for money in any amount up to $300 you will know exactly what to do.

CREDITS AND COLLECTIONS

If you will take one moment and consider those two words, credits and collections, you will at once realize the enormous place they take in the commercial world to-day. There are about five billion dollars in actual circulation, yet it is estimated that seven hundred billion dollars worth of business is transacted in a year. This shows us in a concrete way the place that credits and collections take in our financial system.

To get down to our own business, we find it is wholly a business of credits and collections. It is the extension of credit in the form of new loans that expands our business and it is the efficiency in collections that keep our accounts good and this in turn produces the ultimate aim of any business namely profit.

For a moment, let us direct our attention to the credit side of this subject. We are daily passing upon applications and granting credit. What is it in each applicant that we try to learn, that we might grant him the credit he desires? I am convinced that regardless of the method of procedure with an application, we try to learn as much of a man's chaacter as possible, and it is what we learn of his character that prompts us to grant him credit or refuse it. A man may have all kinds of personal property he may even have a comfortable income, but if his reputation is that of a poor pay, or even further than that, if his character is undesirable, we are not going to grant him credit. These following facts will be found to be helpful in determining a man's character. If he commands the respect of his fellows, he invariably has a good measure of self-respect. If he has a good job and is a steady worker, he usually has an ambition to forge ahead. If he is a good provider for his family and gives them the necessities and luries of life according to his income, he is generally found to be honest and reliable.

If in looking up an application we find these characteristics in an applicant, we can be positive that his is a man of character and a good credit risk.

The general reputation of parties to a transaction is also an important element of credit. If a seeker of credit has a poor reputation for paying his bills, or has the reputation of dissipating, or of neglecting his home or business, he is generally one of low moral character and thus a poor credit risk. Circumstances may cause a man to have a poor reputation temporarily, but actually be a man of good character. On the other hand that small percentage of deliberate dead beats generally manage to work up a temporary good reputation and have practically no character. So we might sum up all that has been said in these words ‘Character is the basis of all Credit.”

After granting credit, it is our duty to our customers as well as to ourselves, to be efficient in collections. It has been found that the public can be educated to follow various different paths and ideas and it is our task to educate our customers to prompt pay from the start. I believe that this can best be accomplished from the very first payment not paid on the day due. They should be politely but forcibly reminded that they are overdue and advised that their payment is due on a certain date and encouraged to meet their next payment on the date due. This will impress on them the fact that being a few days overdue is not satisfactory and will help produce prompt payments. With the very closest possible attention to overdue accounts we cannot hope to have all accounts up to date. Slow accounts will creep in even after the best possible look up. I believe that form letters on accounts only a short time overdue are satisfactory, but where these do not bring results, more thought has to be given to the wording of each letter that it might fit the conditions in the case. Make a personal case of each slow account. First, ask yourselves the question, “What makes us pay our bills?” There are probably three answers; our honesty, our pride, our desire to keep our credit good. If this is true, what about the other fellow? Get a personal knowledge of his conditions and then handle him in such a way that if you were in his peace, it would make us pay. A careful study of accounts in this way brings them into line again.

A reliable survey of the books of thousands of merchants throughout the country, shows that 99.44% of the people are honest. To analyze the P. & L. accounts of the country you will find that it is not the dead beat that causes the largest percentage of P. & L. accounts. It is the man or woman who have allowed themselves to get so far into debt that they loose hope of getting out. Domestic trouble, divorce, sickness and loss of positions are all factors in making uncollectable accounts.

COOPERATION

In view of the fact that the subject assigned me “Coöperation” has been covered so thoroughly and from such a broad angle in a previous writing of my friend of your city, Mr. J. Stanford Edge. I have elected to confine this article to suggestions on Why and How “Coöperate,” with possibly a little constructive criticism here and there.

It is the very nature of man to “Coöperate.” God made man in the plural in order that he might help one another “the act of coöperation,” the result of which is the many marvelous things that man is doing to-day. Let us think what it would mean to be alone in this big world of ours as it is to-day. I can imagine I had rather be dead. Then, if being alone could produce this extreme punishment isn't it to be reasoned that we were created to be of help to our fellow man and isn't it true that the greatest happiness we have is making some one else happy. We have chosen, for our part in making this world great, the Small Loan Business. Other of our brethren have chosen other lines, and but for the coöperation we extend each other none could exist.

My idea of coöperation can best be explained by comparing man with the tooth of a great cog-wheel by which the machinery of the business world is driven. Just as long as every tooth in the wheel remains normal and does its individual part, the machine operates perfectly, but when any one tooth becomes worn or in any way refuses to function perfectly, then the whole machine is impaired. The others may be perfect and try their utmost, but it is impossible for them to run the machine smooth, there will be a jerk and a noise every time the wheel gets around to this obstructing tooth.

Is every tooth in the wheel of this Association functioning perfectly? Pulling its part of the load? If not we should not be surprised if our Association fails to run smooth.

It has been said “Every man owes some of his time to the uplifting of the profession to which he belongs.” This being true, we have a right to ask every man, firm or corporation in the Loan Business in our State to give us of their time as our Association was the agency that lifted the business to its present standing, and by which we expect, (with the coöperation of all members), to continue the upward trend until we assume a point equal with, if not above other lines of business. This, Fellow Lenders, will require perfect coöperation of every member and systematic advertising, which if I may be permitted to suggest, must be done by the Individual Members through contact with the different Commercial Organizations of their respective cities.

I am prone to believe that we are all to dilatory in our consideration of the importance of a membership in and regular attendance of the meetings of these organizations. I have only recently realized that by association with those organizations which are, because of their misunderstanding, prejudiced against our business we gain the opportunity to present our case in our own way and by continued effort, overcome the opposition and make a friend for our cause. I know of no better way to advance our cause than by association with and attendance of these bodies.

According to Mr. Webster, Coöperation means working jointly together, then to be able to coöperate it is necessary that we get together and, I am inclined to believe that the lack of coöperation is caused more by failure to get together than any other one thing. For instance, you will find in this and all other organizations, men who sit by and allow business of importance transacted without a word of opposition. Yet, if it doesn't go just to their notion, they are up in arms with those who were instrumental in getting it through. Gentlemen, this is your association and you should no more allow any thing done in its meetings which according to your ideas is not right, than you would in your home. It is your duty to insist on things being done right.

I believe we have the clearing-house system in all the cities, now, and my writing would not be complete if I failed to include a few suggestions concerning this branch of the business.

There is no place that the members of each city can help each other and the business in general more than through the clearing house. A few minutes time to explain each case to the company inquiring if honestly done, will save much time and possibly money. The motto for this branch should be “Do unto others as you would have others do unto you.” Ordinarily, there is business enough for all and by coöperating properly, we can reduce expenses for each other.

We have had in our association members who for the sake of appearing great or in other words who wanted their customers and those applying to think they were the God of the Business, would resort to unfair methods, such as accusing the other companies in their city of being crooks, and charging too much interest, of being of no consequence because only just a small company, etc. I want to say that this is the most dangerous thing that could be done. Each applicant has, regardless of how poor or how much we may think of him of no consequence, friends that have influence with the legislation of his district and when you abuse your neighbor company, you are molding public sentiment against them and the business in general, by the law of majority rule. In my opinion, this is our strongest opposition to-day. With public sentiment against us (the result of our own activities), and the personal desire of the legislator to get even with us or refusing to make some of his supporters a loan or forcing collection of a long overdue account against him, we have before us a proposition, “self inflicted,” which will require the perfect coöperation of every member.

My suggestion for the improvement of the opinion thus formed would be to answer all questions asked concerning another company by stating we are all members of the same association and that, furthermore, our company doesn't allow us to discuss other peoples' affairs.

“There is so much good in the worst of us and so much bad in the best of us, it hardly becomes any of us to speak ill of the rest of us.”

NATIONAL BANKS EARN 29.38 PER CENT IN 1924

Philadelphia Institutions' Deposits Increased $74,070,270—Average Book Value of Stock was $365

Philadelphia national banks had fairly prosperous business last year, despite the fact that for eight months there was a plethora of lendable funds, which caused bankers generally to keep close watch on all interestbearing commercial accounts and at times resulted in scaling down the interest rates on such accounts.

For 1924 the thirty-two national banks in this city earned 29.38 per cent on their consolidated capitals of $28,980,000. This compares with 31.65 per cent earned by thirty-one national banks, with consolidated capital of $26,680,000 in 1923. The percentage earned on the book value of their shares, however, was only 8.05 per cent. In 1923 it was 8.78 per cent.

AVERAGE BOOK VALUE $365

Earnings for 1924 were $8,515,185, as compared with $8,912,577 in 1923. As of December 31, 1924, a compilation by the Investment Registry of America, Inc., shows the thirty-two nationally chartered institutions had surplus and undivided profits of $75,786,233, as against $73,319,169 at the close of 1923. In 1924 the the banks charged off or reserved for depreciation, etc., $318.850, which figure compares with $258,236 in 1923.

The average book value of the reporting banks, December 31, 1924, was $365 per share, as against a par of $100, and an average quotation of $344. On December 31, 1923, the average book value was $356 per share and the average quotation $362.

The highest book value of the reporting banks is that of the National Security Bank, at $910 a share, which compares with a last reported sale of $771. Nine of the other institutions have book values exceeding $400 per share.

COMMUNICATIONS

January 9, 1925.

Mr. O. W. Inman, Mgr.
c|o Peoria Loan Co.,
205 Lehman Bldg.,
Peoria, Illinois.

Dear Inman:

In to-day's mail I received your code of ethics and after reading them I cannot find anything in there that is not already being done by the loan companies in Peoria.

Being in as close a touch as I am with the loan companies in Peoria I know that they are regarded by the business men as a fair and legitimate business. The opposition which existed years ago has through the efficiency and standard of the managers raised this business to the place it should have, and opposition that may exist in other cities is caused by the lack of knowledge of the loan companies business and can be easily corrected by education.

Our experience in Peoria has taught us that the loan companies are a very valuable asset to the retail business houses in helping them collect slow, delinquent and unsatisfactory accounts, a great many of these accounts are caused by the account getting away from the creditor and are not called to the credit managers attention until the amount has exceeded the customers limit.

If all credit managers of business houses had the knowledge and could give the attention to their accounts as the manager of a loan company there would be very few slow and delinquent accounts on their books. H. F. SEHMER.

Manager-Secretary Peoria Merchants' Association.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 5, 1924.

I beg to acknowledge receipt of the "Code of Ethics" of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association. I have glanced over this and congratulate the Association on having such a splendid Code of Ethics, and also wish to thank you for sending it to me.

Ottinger Gets Order Against Buffalo Concern Under Martin Act

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Charging violation of the Martin Blue Sky Law, Attorney General Ottinger to-day obtained from Supreme Court Justice Staley an injunction against the Edwards Personel Finance Corporation of Buffalo, a money lender. Edward E. Diegler, president, and other officers of the corporation are ordered to appear on Feb. 4 for examination. In his petition the Attorney General said:

"In most cases the debtor, after nearly repaying the amount borrowed, discovers that he has signed a subscription agreement for shares of the preferred stock of the company at $25 per share, equal in face value to the amount of his loan, also a promissory note for the amount of the money borrowed; an assignment of his wages, a chattel mortgage on his furniture and a pledge of the stock to be issued to him, all in a total of twice the amount of the loan."—*N. GEORGIA

Regular meeting of the Georgia Industrial Lenders' Association was held in the office of Chairman Madison 212 Healy Building, at 2 P. M., on the afternoon of Tuesday, January 13th, 1925. Meeting was called to order by Chairman Madison, at 2:30. By order of the chair roll call was omitted, also reading of the minutes of last meeting.

The treasurer made his report of amount of money in treasury, with all bills to January 1, 1925, paid.

The chairman brought to the attention of the membership the increasing of membership dues of several members of the Association. This increase was agreed to by all of those present.

The secretary read correspondence from Mr. R. F. Hartz, National Publicity Chairman, relevant to mailing out pamphlet "Making Credit Available or All," along with letter in connection with these pamphlets sent out by F. E. Tyson, of the Fidelity Loan Company, Danville, Ill. It was thought a very good idea by the majority of members to send this pamphlet to mailing list of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. We figured that the cost would be about $75.00. After much discussion it was properly moved and seconded that the matter be laid on the table.

Mr. Steimle, reporting for the Publicity Committee, stated that advertising on back of the City Builder was still in effect and appeared once each month; also that "Code of Ethics" had been sent to some forty or fifty judges, justices and other prominent men of Atlanta and that several acknowledgements had been received congratulating the Association upon this 'Code of Ethics."

The "Code of Ethics," adopted in convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association, September 26, 1924, was adopted by the Georgia Industrial Lenders' Association, with the exception of paragraph five of Article three, which conflicts with the Small Loan Act of the State of Georgia. This "Code of Ethics" was adopted upon the motion of Mr. Snyder, properly seconded by Mr. Davis, and unanimously carried.

The Annual Meeting and Banquet of the Georgia Industrial Lenders' Association was next discussed. Upon motion of Mr. Zachary, seconded by Mr. Herbert and unanimously carried, it was decided to hold the meeting at the Biltmore on the evening of Tuesday, January 27, 1925, at 7 p. m., the cost of the dinner not to exceed $3.00 per plate. A committe consisting of Mr. Madison, Mr. Zachary and Mr. Lassiter was appointed to arrange details in connection with hotel and orchestra. Mr. Steimle was appointed as a committee of one to arrange details in connection with speakers (Hon. R. B. Russell, Chief Justice Supreme Court of Georgia, and Hon. G. H. Howard, Judge Superior Court Fulton County, Georgia), and other prominent guests; also details in connection with programs, dance cards, and the singing end of the entertainment.

The dinner and speaking it was decided to have over by nine o'clock, and balance of the evening, from nine to twelve, to be devoted to dancing. It was also decided that as many friends as desired be invited to the dance, free of cost.

During the meeting Chairman Madison received a telephone call that through the negligence of one of the employees of a certain garage where his car had been placed, and during the process of washing the car, it was totally destroyed through fire. The sympathy of the members was extended to Mr. Madison.

There being no further business, meeting adjourned at 4:30.

EDWIN M. STEWART, Secretary.

NOTE: Arrangements for Annual Meeting and Banquet could not be made at the Biltmore. It will be held at the Capital City Club on Thursday, January 29, 1925. Warner's Seven Aces, noted orchestra, has been obtained for the occasion.

At this time the Chair extended a most cordial welcome to Messrs. Aufderheide, Zumpfe, Dyer, Hartz, Woll, of the Executive Committee of the American Industrial Lenders Association.

"To the officers and members of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association—it gives me great pleasure to report to you at this time as Chairman of your organization.

"The results accomplished during the past year are very gratifying to me. It seems the greatest asset this organization has is its good will and fellowship.

"We have in the past year increased that asset beyond human expectation, especially with the Banking Commissioner and his Deputies.

"During the past year our association has coöperated with the Department in prosecutions of illegal lending.

"We have been instrumental directly in urging a number of non-licensed lenders to become licensees, especially in the City of Philadelphia.

"We have assisted in the regulation of so-called salary buyers, and having them come into the fold of real Industrial Lenders.

"We have held several regional meetings all of which were a marked success, more detailed report of same will be given by the chairmen of the various committees.

"The good fellowship of our organization has advanced by leaps and bounds. It seems to me that this is one large family all pulling together for one common cause rendering a real personal loan service to the necessitous borrower.

"The committees of this association deserve the utmost of commendation.

"I want to thank each and every chairman for the able manner in which he has conducted his committee work and I also want to thank every member of this association for their undivided support during my administration.

"Now gentlemen, in conclusion there is only one thing I wish to bring to your attention—that is; Coöperation brings Success and Success is inscribed all over our 1924 Banner. Let us keep it there forever. (Signed) W. S. Herron,

Annual Report of Executive Committee, P. I. L. A.

As Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, for 1924, I herewith submit the following report for your approval and acceptance.

Your committee held seven meetings during the year 1924 to dispose of the various matters brought to its attention. The average attendance was about 60 per cent of the members of this Committee.

The first meeting held February 13, 1924 was for the purpose of deciding what action the Association was to take in the matter of the unlicensed lenders operating in Philadelphia. This condition was gone into in a very thorough manner and it was the consensus of opinion of the committee that the Association coöperate to the fullest extent with the State Banking Department in their efforts to abolish this type of lender. Counsel was retained by the Association and through the united efforts of all concerned many of the unlicensed lenders were finally forced to seek licenses. Those that persisted in not doing so were given some legal attention and suits brought by the Banking Department against them, the results of this action have not been fully reached as yet although several of the offenders we understand have been fined by the Courts.

Another important matter taken up by your committee was the attitude of some of our members resorting to Magistrates Courts to collect accounts. The danger attached to this practice was clearly shown and upon recommendation of the Committee, we believe this practice has been eliminated entirely.

At the meeting held March 28th and April 28th, 1924, the attention of the committee was called to the "Salary Purchasers" operating in Pittsburgh. No definite action was taken in this matter at this time, but it was laid over until the next meeting of the Committee to be considered in the meantime and some plan to be discussed at that time as to what, if any, action was to be taken by the Association.

The Banking Commissioner objecting to the phrases used by many lenders in the loan advertising, as well as their stock selling prospectuses, came to the attention of the committee and suggestions were asked for the purpose of meeting the wishes of the Banking Commissioner. A number were submitted which met with the approval of the Commissioner and these were sent to the various members of the Association for their use hereafter.

The special meeting of April 28, 1924, was for the purpose of adjusting the differences between one of our members whose objections to the admittance of a certain new member were presented to the Committee. Both parties interested appeared before the committee, and as is always the case where those with differences come together and openly discuss them, the matter was adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned and all misunderstanding wiped out.

At the meeting on May 22, 1924, which was especially called for the purpose of definitely deciding the course of action against the "Salary Purchasers" in Pittsburgh, it was finally decided that the Association assist and coöperate in every way possible, with the Banking Department and the City officials as well as the representatives of the railroads in that city, to eliminate this type of lender. A committee from Pittsburgh was appointed to follow this matter through and make further report to the Executive Committee.

The Kehr-Carroll controversy in Harrisburg, was also discussed by the Committee at this meeting, but owing to the divided opinion nothing definite was suggested at this time.

On July 1, 1924 a regular meeting was held and report of the progress made in the action against the "Salary Purchasers" in Pittsburgh made by Mr. Fahringer and Mr. Reeves, the committee in charge of this matter in Pittsburgh. They reported that reputable counsel had been retained and that with the Banking Department's counsel, the case was being worked up and final action would be taken in a short time.

The business of the meeting held October 7, 1924, consisted mainly of discussing the statements of some local lenders, made in their prospectuses relative to earning, etc., in the small loan business. A committee consisting of Messrs. Watts and Herron, was appointed to contact the members involved and make an effort to have these statements modified somewhat. A report of their success in the matter to be made at the next meeting of the Committee.

On November 21, 1924, a regular meeting was held and a favorable report made by the Committee instructed to go into the stock prospectus matter. This condition will be modified by the lender in question. A suggestion from Mr. Harbison relating to improving contacts with the State Examining Officials was read, however as the relations of all officers and members of the Pennsylvania Association with the Banking Department officials are very satisfactory, it was decided that no action be taken in this detail at this time.

This about concludes the work of your committee for the past year. In closing this report I want to thank each member who attended the meetings for giving their time and splendid coöperation in all matters relating to the business of the Association, and trust they will continue to manifest the same spirit of helpfulness under the new officers the coming year.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) Edw. B. Webster,
Chairman Executive Committee.

On motion of Mr. Kehr, seconded by Mr. Gill, report of the chairman of the Entertainment Committee was received, approved, vote of thanks extended and ordered spread on the minutes of this meeting.

Annual Report of the Entertainment Committee, 12-3-24

Four meetings were held during the year. The first at Hotel Cassey, Scranton, on Thursday, February 28th. Then the Philadelphia meeting, which was held at the City Club, on Thursday, May 1st. The summer meeting at Eagle's Mountain Home, Reading, July 10th, and our Western meeting at the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, Thursday, October 9th.

The Scranton members certainly did themselves proud by the manner in which they handled the February meeting. Several very instructive talks were given and an enjoyable luncheon served.

The event that we always look forward to during the summer is our meeting held in Reading and our expectations were more than justified this year. I am sure that every member of the Association who attended the summer meeting went away well pleased with his visit to Reading and the few hours spent in the cool of the mountains.

The meeting held at the William Penn Hotel Pittsburgh, was well attended and the Pittsburgh boys deserve a world of credit for the pains they took in arranging this affair. Following the luncheon a very interesting talk on the history of banking was given by a prominent banker of Pittsburgh. In the evening a banquet was served. Several able speakers addressed the members, after which dancing became the business of the evening.

Taken as a whole, the year's entertainment provided for the members of the Association, was certainly taken care of in good shape and the Entertainment Committee takes this opportunity of publicly expressing its sincere appreciation of the efforts of the members from Scranton, Reading and Pittsburgh, in the work they accomplished, not only by developing a spirit of good fellowship among the members, but by aiding in the uplifting and dignifying of the Small Loan Business.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) A. V. Hart,
Chairman of the Entertainment Committee

On motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Hubbell, report of the Vigilance Committee was received, approved, vote of thanks extended and ordered spread on the minutes of this meeting.

Report of Vigilance Committee 12-3-24

Mr. Chairman and Fellow Members of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association:

The Vigilance Committee is happy to report that its services during the past year were only called upon once and this was a false alarm.

On or about April 1, 1924, George I. Berkhart a clerk for the Reading Railway Company, residing at 2647 N. Garnet Street, Philadelphia, Pa., pleaded guilty of embezzling $9,000.00 from the Railroad Company, blaming his downfall on Loan Sharks. Immediately upon hearing this, we sent out a call to each and every member of the Pennsylvania Association, requesting them to write us if they were carrying an account with the above mentioned Berkhart. We received some fifteen letters, most of them stating that they never had Berkhart for a customer. Two or three of them advised us that they had had him and he was now paid up. After learning that this man did not have a loan with any reputable loan concern, operating under the Uniform Small Loan Law, the Committee felt sure that he must have been in the hands of Loan Sharks, who we tried to locate but were not successful. When one stops to consider the fact that out of the amount of business done, approximately $14,000,000.00 a year, and that there was not one case for the Vigilance Committee's attention, it speaks volumes for the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association. It shows, beyond a shadow of doubt, that the men engaged in the business to-day are interested in keeping it clean and bringing it to the highest standard possible.

But let me plead with you not to rest upon your laurels, because as soon as an organization of our kind has existed sufficiently long to have a history, then a great peril faces each and every individual in that organization. It is the peril of being satisfied with belonging. The peril of being content with reading the history of the organization and then saying, "I am a member of that and doing nothing about it to make its history glorious." To such a man should be said what a great teacher said to his students on graduation day last year, "For eight years you have been studying American history. The time has now come for you to go out and make American history." And that is what should be said to-day to every member of this Association. Do not rest upon your laurels. Get out and make more real history.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) William Young,
Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Burt, the annual report of the Publicity Committee Chairman was received, approved, vote of thanks extended and ordered spread on the minutes of this meeting.

Annual Report of the Publicity Committee for 1924

To the Officers and Members:

Publicity has been obtained in nearly every city and town in Pennsylvania during this year. This was brought about by organizing a Committee composed of lenders from every city and community throughout the state, where there is membership in the Association. Our policy was to prepare an advance news article covering each meeting of the Association, giving the date, place of meeting, program and the object of the Association and its policies, and forward to each member of the committee, who would immediately get the copy in the hands of the editor of the newspapers of their locality.

The personal contact of these members with their local newspapers, has brought about a more friendly association with the press and produced splendid results.

The first meeting of the Association was held in Scranton on February 28th. We obtained 825 lines of publicity. Here, I want to commend Messrs. Goldman and Allgaier of my Committee for their efficiency in handling the publicity covering this meeting, in their respective cities. Reporters were present and every newspaper in Scranton and Wilkes-Barre published items pertaining to this meeting, both before and after.

The second meeting of the Association was held in Philadelphia, May 1st. A news article was forwarded to all members and 520 lines obtained.

A third meeting of the Association was held in Reading, July 10th, when 672 lines were obtained.

The fourth meeting was held in Pittsburgh and 690 lines obtained.

Mr. H. F. Woods of the Ackerman Service, New York, has been engaged to assist the Committee in securing publicity pertaining to the annual meeting and convention. Three news articles have been sent out and copies forwarded to each member for publication in the local papers of their respective cities. Copies were mailed direct to newspapers in towns where there are no lenders who are members of the Association. In this way every newspaper in the State has been covered, 70 in all.

In addition to this, we decided to go into New Jersey. A copy of these articles was sent to members of the New Jersey Association in Camden, Trenton and Atlantic City, asking their coöperation. These were favorably received by the press, through the efforts of the New Jersey members, and clippings from the papers covering the meeting, were forwarded in due time.

The first news article covering the annual meeting of 375 words, was released November 13th. The second news article of 273 words, was released November 28th, and the third article, a summary of the first two, on December 2d. From our efforts to date, we have obtained 1,705 lines, covering the annual meeting.

An invitation has been extended to the city editor of each Philadelphia paper, to attend the meeting and banquet, as our guest. A special table has been provided and we are hopeful of getting some good press reports. Mr. Thomas D. Richter, Secretary of the Publicity Bureau of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, has accepted our invitation to be present as our guest.

A summary of the publicity obtained to date, of which we have received clippings, shows 4412 agate lines covering 18 cities, 39 newspapers. Clippings have been compiled and are here submitted for your inspection and in substantiation of this summary.

In addition to serving this Association, your chairman was asked to coöperate with the chairman of publicity of the American Industrial Lenders Association, in securing publicity in Pennsylvania. My Committee considered it a privilege to serve the National body and we released five new articles for them, covering the months of April, May, June, July and September.

In April we obtained 742 lines in 11 newspapers, in May we obtained 1,472 lines in 15 newspapers, in June we obtained 528 lines in 5 newspapers, in July we obtained 340 lines in 4 newspapers, in September we obtained 1,050 lines in 13 newspapers.

The article during September covered the Annual Convention. This makes a total of 4,132 agate lines of publicity obtained and clippings forwarded to the National Publicity Chairman, Mr. Hartz. In his annual report given at the Convention in Baltimore, his summary shows that Pennsylvania obtained more publicity for the National body than any other state association.

In dealing with the press, your Committee has endeavored to submit facts and give truthful information about the growth and development of the small loan business, covering the progress of uplift that is being made through the organized coöperative efforts of the Association.

Your Committee congratulates the Association on its effort to gather statistics showing the volume of the small loan business done in Pennsylvania annually. These figures have been helpful in obtaining publicity. Your committee recommends that some effort be made by the Association to obtain the total number of borrowers in the State, who are householders and what percentage have no banking connection. Information of this character is of real news value and will do much to make the public recognize the value of the industrial lender and the service he renders.

Your Chairman realizes it has not always been easy for the members to get the support of the press in their locality and recognizes it was only through personal contact on the part of the member, that results have been obtained. I desire to extend my sincere thanks and appreciation to each member of the Committee for their loyal support and coöperation throughout the year.

Respectfully submiited by,
(Signed) E. F. MOORE,
Chairman of the Publicity Commitee.

On motion of Mr. Bachofer, seconded by Mr. Lewis, the annual report of the Membership Committee Chairman was read by Mr. Knapp, received, approved, vote of thanks extended, and ordered spread on the minutes of this meeting.

12-3-24

Notwithstanding the fact that this is the close of the third consecutive term in which your Membership Committee has been in charge, and out of this experience ought to have rendered an increased degree of efficient service, it has failed utterly.

Just as the success of any Institution is usually measured by the length and breadth of the shadow of one man, by the same token your Membership Committee has failed to function to the same degree of success, all of us interested in the Pennsylvania Association's progress, would like.

The multiplicity of duties incumbent upon the Chairman of your Membership Committee during the past year, has necessarily placed a limitation on his activities. This limitation however, ought not to have influenced or effected the activities of the respective regional field captains appointed a year ago. It was plainly the duty of the Membership Committee Chairman, to see that the Membership Committee, with its aides, function properly. Any neglect or failure to do so is clearly assigned to the chairman, who accepts the responsibility therefore and leans on your gracious charity.

Fortunately however, out of the humble efforts of your Membership Committee, supplemented by the splendid, loyal coöperation of the officers and members of the Association, the Pennsylvania Association Membership was increased by the addition of twelve members during the present year. There are still several applications for Membership pending which will increase this dozen.

There is an added blessing in the fact that every member has remained a member during the present year. Not one member resigned or was suspended in that period. This offers conclusive proof in our opinion, (if any were necessary), that the virtues and benefits of Association membership are verily and genuine. Association members, being keen business men hold fast to that which proves a valuable business asset.

During the past year, your Membership Committee has been quite cognizant there is a very increasing number of applications for licenses granted by the Pennsylvania Banking Department. At the time of writing this report there are 263 licensed lenders in the State of Pennsylvania, an increase of 58 licensees during this year, representing an increase of 22%. The Pennsylvania Association had a membership of 100 at the beginning of the year, to which has been added twelve members during 1924, or an increase of only 12%. There is much room for improvement in the Membership Committee's activities.

A review of the total licensees in Pennsylvania by our worthy secretary, denotes there are approximately 100 licensed lenders in this State who may be eligible for membership in our Association. At least this number ought to be thoroughly canvassed and a record made of the standing and policy of each licensee approached.

In conclusion, may I offer the above as a heritage for the next Membership Committee, and in addition, may I make so bold as to offer the suggestion that the succeeding Membership Committee will immediately enlarge its group so that the canvass for membership here suggested can be successfully effectuated? It is with an expression of keen regret your retiring Committee has been unable to do this work. It is also with a pride of high duty, obligation and interest in the future progress of the Pennsylvania Association, that the next Membership Committee will prosecute more energetically the duties of that important office.

Possessed of the fine sense of appreciation for the splendid coöperation received during the year by your Committee, an expression of thanks is extended to all who have helped. Out of the lessons gained by experience, it is to be hoped the Membership of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association will greatly mutiply in numbers, usefulness and influence, emerging with greater richness in the days that follow.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) CHARLES G. MUELLER,
Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Wick, the annual report of the Legislative Committee Chairman was received, approved, vote of thanks extended and ordered spread on the minutes of this meeting. Carried.

The freedom of the floor was extended to Mr. Hartz, Chairman of the Publicity Committee of the American Industrial Lenders Association at this time, and he in no uncertain terms reminded each member of the importance and necessity of extending every coöperation to the State Association Publicity Committee, in order that there may be no weak link in the chain of carrying to the non-informed non-borrowing public, the dignity and equitableness with which this necessary business is conducted.

On motion of Mr. Tunis, seconded by Mr. Kehr, $100 was appropriated as a contribution to Save the Penn Charter Campaign, now being conducted by the Philadelphia Public Ledger newspaper.

Mr. Wick of the Retail Merchants Bureau Committee of the American Industrial Lenders Association was granted the freedom of the floor and urged members to contact members of local credit bureaus in order that business men might become better acquainted with the credit information available from the experiences of our members and that he wished a member of his Committee appointed by the Chair in each city in this Commonwealth.

The paper read by Mr. Harry D. Holloway, of Philadelphia, "A New Path Across an Old Field," was received with much enjoyment and on motion of Mr. Dobyns, seconded by Mr. Allgaier, a vote of thainks was extended to Mr. Halloway and this paper ordered presented to the LENDERS NEWS for early publication.

The paper prepared by Mr. A. G. Zimmerman, "Industrial Loan Business as a Vocation," by Mr. J. C. Lewis on the subject "If You Want Service, Give Service," and by Mr. W. F. Buck entitled "Where Lies the Success of an Office," because of lack of time were not read or discussed, but a vote of thanks was extended to these gentlemen for their coöperation. These papers were ordered placed in the hands of the Editor of the LENDERS NEWS for early publication.

There appearing no further business to transact, the meeting was adjourned.

Respectfully submitted,
C. H. WATTS,
Secretary.

MAINE

The quarterly meeting of the Maine Industrial Lenders' Association was held at the DeWitt Hotel, Lewiston, at seven p. m., Thursday, January 8, 1925.

After a banquet held in the private dining room the meeting was called to order by Chairman Wesley M. Snow.

Upon reading of the roll call ten members were present.

Mr. Thomas Fitzgibbons of the Personal Finance Co., of Portland, was elected a member of the association.

The chairman announced the nomination and election of five (5) men who will constitute the executive committee to serve with the chairman, vice-chairman, secretary and treasurer.

Thomas Fitzgibbons, elected for one year; E. E. Waterman, elected for two years; Geo. D. Nevens, elected for three years; Edwin E. Small, elected for four years; Geo. A. Currier elected for five years.

Treasurer reported balance on hand of $50.06.

Discussion in regard to the Maine Association assisting the Rhode Island Association in financing the National Convention—it was voted that the matter be laid on the table until the next meeting.

The secretary read a letter from Mr. Fred F. Lawrence, Bank Commissioner of the State of Maine, expressing his appreciation for the invitation to be present at our meeting, and regretting his inability to be present owing to very important state business.

Mr. Alonzo Nutter, Deputy Bank Commissioner was present and made some very interesting remarks especially in regard to the Banking Departments' coöperation with the Maine Lenders.

The association had the honor of having the Hon. Louis J. Brann, Mayor of Lewiston present with us, who welcomed the members to Lewiston. His remarks were very interesting and enjoyed by all.

The members of the Maine Association were especially fortunate in having with them Mr. A. G. Zimmerman, of New York City. He brought us a wonderful message, assuring the Maine Association of the willingness of the National Association to Coöperate with us in all of our efforts to put the business on a higher plain.

A rising vote of thanks was given to the Mayor and Mr. Zimmerman for their interesting remarks.

A request from the Maine Automotive Dealers Association asking for endorsement of the Industrial Lenders Association to a petition for the passage of a bill at the legislature this winter giving the Automotive Dealers a protection in case of bills for parts or repairs contracted prior to the issuance of a lien against an automobile was rejected. It was argued that the mortgage should be protected first. That it was up to the repairmen or automobile dealer to take the same precaution to protect themselves as taken by the mortgagee.

There being no further business to transact, the meeting was adjourned.

HENRI S. CROSBY, Secretary.

OHIO

The Annual Mid-Winter meeting of The Ohio Loan Association was held at The Chittenden Hotel in Columbus, Ohio, on Wednesday, January 28, 1925, and was largely attended.

The members from various parts of the State arrived early in order to get a look in on the General Assembly which is now in session. No bills affecting the small loan business have thus far been introduced and from present indications, it is not probable that any such will be present at this session.

The report of the Association shows that it is in a most prosperous condition financially and otherwise.

Three new members were received and elected into membership, viz: The Bilmar Loan Company, 407 Keith Bld., Dayton, Ohio; Columbus Finance Company, 404 Hi Long Bldg., Columbus, Ohio, and The Stark Finance Company, 433 West Tuscarawas St., Canton, Ohio.

The afternoon session was in charge of Col. D. H. Pond, Vice Chairman of the Association, who presided in his usual good style and the discussion of the afternoon centered around questions of a legal as well as a practical nature affecting the small loan business.

The Ohio Association, through its legal counsel, has been busily engaged for the past five months in the preparation of a survey of the law of Ohio as it applies to our business, and there was presented at this meeting a book of over one hundred pages, citing decisions of the courts, opinions of leading text writers and code provisions as well as suggestions and advice upon the preparation of papers and the conduct of business from a legal standpoint.

This book will be reproduced in a loose leaf binder form so that as new decisions appear from time to time they may be digested and explained and added thereto under the appropriate division so that the book will be very much like the income tax service.

The spacious and attractive dining room of the Chittenden Hotel was entirely filled for the banquet. Most excellent music was furnished by Heber Brothers Orchestra during the serving.

Mr. James H. Maurer, Secretary of the Federation of Labor of the State of Pennsylvania was the principal speaker of the evening and presented many phases of social questions that gave to the loan man a keener insight into the every day problems and perplexities of his customer as well as many timely suggestions as to how he could be of service to him.

Mr. Maurer is a broad minded man, keenly alive to the fact that the small loan business is rendering a service to society and that only through organizations such as ours and yours can the small loan business be and remain a real source of economic helpfulness to the small borrower.

Mr. Thomas J. Doneley, Secretary of the Ohio Federation also spoke and impressed upon us the responsible position we hold and the great opportunity before us to help others to build and maintain character.

The following attended the banquet:

INDUSTRIAL LEADERS MEET IN LEWISTON

Organized to Put the "Loan Shark" Out of Business

Organized to put the "loan shark" out of business by fostering legitimate, state licensed, lending business the Industrial Lenders Association of Maine, met at the DeWitt Hotel, Thursday evening for its quarterly session. Dinner was served to the 16 members and their ladies at 7 o'clock in one of the private dining rooms after which Wesley M. Snow of Portland, presided over a short business meeting, followed by instructive talks and an hour or so of general discussion.

The Maine Association is a member of the National Association which includes all of the different states that have passed laws governing licensed lending business, the idea being to have all states pass uniform laws as 18 or 20 already have done.

In Maine every person engaging in the loan business must have a license from the State Banking Department and is directly under the supervision of that department.

Following dinner at which Mrs. George D. Nevens, of Lewiston; Mrs Henri S. Crosby, of Auburn and Mrs. Wesley M. Snow, of Portland; Mayor Brann, of Lewiston; A. G. Zimmerman, of Newark, N. J.; and Alonzo D. Nutter, Deputy Bank Commissioner of Maine, were guests, the meeting was called to order by Mr. Snow, chairman.

Election of Board

Reports of the last meeting read by Mr. Crosby who is secretary were read and approved, followed by reading of the roll call which revealed the presence of every member in Maine but Mr. Bernstein of Bangor. Thomas Fitzgiven of the Personal Finance Co., Portland, was admitted to membership and the following elected to the executive board: Mr. Fitzgiven; E. E. Waterman, Portland; George D. Nevens, Lewiston; Edward M. Small, Lewiston; George A. Currier, Portland. They will serve from one to five years in the order named.

Mayor Brann made a lasting impression with the members who had never enjoyed the pleasure of meeting him before, though he insisted that the pleasure was all his in "meeting representative men from the State of Maine and her sister states."

"I think I prefer to extend a welcome to this association more than any other one I ever addressed," he said, "because you have money and you are willing to lend it. However, I don't say that I will 'touch' anyone to-night.

"It is proverbial that Lewiston people are the most hospitable people in the work," he said and then went on to tell about our new Armory which has a seating capacity of about 5,000 people which is open to everyone. As an instance of Lewiston's hospitality he cited the pilgrimage of some 2,000 Canadians to Lewiston next month to watch the snowshoe clubs of the Dominion sport at Lewiston.

A State Event

"It is an event in the State of Maine," he said, "as Canada has always been considered the winter sports country of the world, though I have often wondered if people went to Canada for winter sports or for something else. Now take the state of Maine; it is the wonderful natural resources alone that attracts the Canadian people here."

He said that advertising this event would precipitate in announcing to all the country the fact that Maine is the great winter sport place of this country. Lauding the local lenders and labeling them as representing "the best there is in Lewiston and Auburn" Mayor Brann urged the association to meet here as often as the quarterly sessions allow.

Mr. Nutter, Deputy Bank Commissioner from Augusta, representing Fred F. Lawrence, Bank Commissioner who was unable to be present because of the inauguration, announced that the Banking Department would coöperate in every way possible with the association. Mr. Nutter had to leave early to return to the Capitol.

As a representative of the American Industrial Lenders Association which is the national organization composed of the state members like the Industrial Lenders Association of Maine and is also a member of the United States Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Zimmerman gave the members the fruits of the mother organization's experiences.

Maine has the baby organization and Mr. Zimmerman said that judging by present indications it was turning out to be a thriving, active group. He said he liked the people here "very, very much." He spoke of the convention held recently in the grand ballroom of the Bellevue Stratford Hotel in New York with nearly 600 present.

Becoming Dignified

"Our business is becoming very dignified," Mr. Zimmerman said, "and is recognized as such by the state banking departments. I want you members to get your friends to understand your work which is the extending of service to people of good character."

Speaking rapidly from one topic to another, Mr. Zimmerman declared that "the greatest help you can give a foreigner is to give him financial help when he needs it and that the exchange bureau as operated in New York was an excellent service for leaders. It discouraged patrons from borrowing of three or four lenders, and becoming a greater risk than if they patronized only one lender. He went on record as declaring it to be good business to allow a borrower to pay back a loan as rapidly as possible, even on the same day that it was taken out if desired, because it established a credit which in future dealings would react for the mutual benefit of both lender and borrower.

His discussion was extremely helpful.

Others giving little talks were Mr. Bernstein, Mr. Fitzgiven, Mr. Nevens and Mrs. Snow. Mr. Nevens went on record as believing that the public should be educated as to the real status of lenders in order to dispel the idea many have of the few hard-hearted, money grabbing lenders who in the past have brought discredit upon their fellow members who are conducting legitimately licensed business. The meeting went on record as desiring advertising and publicity to offset this nasty conception on the part of the public.

Those present: Edward N. Small, George D. Nevens, J. M. Johnson, of Lewiston; E. J. Miller and Henri S. Crosby, of Auburn; George A. Currier, E. E. Waterman, Wesley M. Snow, Mark M. Bernstein, M. A. Sulkowitch and Thomas Fitzgiven, of Portland; Charles J. Bernstein, Bangor, and the guests of the evening.—Lewiston, Me., Evening Journal, January 9, 1925.

TAX PENALTY IS UPHELD

Interest Payment Can Be Enforced, Supreme Court Rules

Washington, November 25.—The government can enforce the payment of interest at the rate of 1 per cent a month on deferred tax payments, the United States Supreme Court held yesterday in a case against the trustee of the J. Menist Company, of New York. The lower federal courts refused to allow a higher rate of interest than 6 per cent a year, taking the position that 1 per cent a month was an illegal penalty.

A bankrupt who obtains loans from a bank on false representations is not entitled to discharge from bankruptcy, the Supreme Court held to-day in the case brought by the trustees of Abraham Lustgarten of New York.

The court announced that the loans having been obtained by Lustgarten from a bank on false statements concerning his financial conditions, he was not entitled to discharge from bankruptcy. It reversed the lower court and ordered the case back to the district court for a new trial.—Indianapolis News, Nov. 25, 1924.

PROVIDENCE AS IT IS SEEN BY OTHERS

Under the Heading "Peregrinations about Providence," Newton Fuessle rites interestingly in "The Outlook" of ome of the More Notable Historical, Business and Manufacturing Features of he City Founded by Roger Williams. n a chatty way the author gives in ondensed form information, while not ew to those of the manner born, is aluable to newcomers.

In charming and refreshing form The Outlook in a recent number presented a abloid story of Providence—what is it nd what it has that is worth while. The article from the pen of Newton Fuessle, is enjoyable because of its crisp, traight-from-the-shoulder composition. Reading it is like sitting behind a door nd surreptitiously listening to the good hings said about us.

Mr. Fuessle says, "Cities often assume personality, a symbolic outgrowth of heir deeds. One pictures Chicago as a aw mid-western giant, cultivating a arden of sky-scrapers in a bed of sand, laughtering swine by day and cheering pera singers by night; driving railways lines into every conceivable direcon and tying their ends into an normous local knot, and at length growng articulate in words, as well as deeds. Pittsburgh stands night and day at its last furnaces like a grimy Titan. Detroit ushes into public view on a raging torent of motor cars, Akron on a vast illow of gutta-percha, and Hollywood n the saddle of a cinematic cyclone."

The older cities, which had their beinnings long before these civic children f the West, are less easily definable in uch obvious terms. Their patterns are more complex and their motives intermingled. Some have grown so old that they re content to sit by the fire and ruminate ver the history they have ground out of he hopper of time. Some have grown ld and yet have managed to remain ingularly young. Such a city is Provience, Rhode Island. It is an amazing municipal mosaic of the old and the new. t contains a church the First Baptist, hat has stood longer than the Declaraon of Independence. Both the church nd the city were founded by Roger Williams, the Welch dissenter, to whom he site of Providence was deeded in 639—from which it may be gathered hat centennial celebrations have grown o be almost a chestnut in Providence.

When it comes to the art of merchanising, other cities are mere adolescents ompared with Providence, which has the ldest department store in America—Gladding's, which has been a going instiution ever since 1766. Its sign of the Bunch of Grapes has moved with it from abitation to habitation, and still hangs antalizingly over the door, reminding the thirst of the vanished days of heady ead and pewter mugs. Gladding's has ince been surpassed but only in size, by he Outlet Company, which took the town y storm 20 years ago and has built up he largest department store in Provience.

Ever since its earliest day Providence as been both a civic and industrial ioneer. The first long-distance telehone line was from Providence to Wauregan. The first wireless telegraph n practical operation was between Provience and Block Island. Providence provided the American Navy with its first admiral—Esek Hopkins. Providence had its brass foundries as early as 1762; General Nathanael Greene forged anchors as a boy in its iron works; and Daniel Anthony's 32-spindle spring frame, probably the first in America, was set up and operated there in 1787.

Painless taxation is not as impossible as it sounds. Public funds can be raised in a way that will not necessarily make the populace whimper or dodge. The way to do it is to glorify taxation into a festive pastime, something to stir the sportsman's blood and to thrill the civic dullard. It can be done. Raising public funds can even be made synonymous with the rowdy phrase "Ain't we got fun." Providence discovered how as early as 1761. In that remote year Providence decided to quit slopping through the mud and to have some paved streets. It needed $30,000, and the money was raised in a flash—by means of a lottery.

The Puritan mind was a delightful affair. It sanctioned lotteries, but ran strolling companies of actors out of town. But it seems that the sheriff, who was to punish and enforce the act prohibiting theatrical performances, was himself a theatregoer, and before doing his official duty it is said that he attended the performance that was kicking up all the rumpus, and did not put the law into effect until after the final curtain.

Providence no longer frowns upon drama. It now has 31 theatres and does not lag far behind Boston in gayety. If you doubt this, drop in some night at the "Acadia," where the gay ones dance to the seductive, jazzy measures of the Vincent Lopez Band.

And Providence no longer frowns on jewelry. The Gorham Company's remarkable plant, with its skilled workers in gold and silversmithing and its sculptural bronze workers, is located in the Elmwood section of Providence. The imitation pearls of the Karpeles Company are turned out in quantities that would have shocked the souls of the city's stern Puritanical founders. Ostby & Barton keep more than a thousand workers making wedding rings alone.

Providence is noted for buying its metal by the ton and selling it again in the form of products so remarkable that their weight no longer counts.

About 90 ears ago a modest silversmith and cutler, David Brown by name, with his son, Joseph R. Brown, founded a shop for repairing watches and making clocks. Thus began the present world-renowned Brown & Sharpe Manufacturing Company, one of the largest concerns in Providence, makers of amazingly ingenious machines for milling, grinding, automatic gear cutting and screw making, and of a great variety of instruments of precision. The products of this company have made possible the exact duplication of parts in the mass production of automobiles, typewriters, electrical equipment, telephone instruments, and guns. It is said that if a mechanic has ever worked for this company he can get a mechanical job anywhere.

Wherever in the world there is anything to be filed or rasped, the products of the Nicholson File Company are likewise known. This concern, together with the world-known American Screw Company, is headed by Colonel Samuel M. Nicholson.

South Main Street is sometimes called the Wall Street of Providence. One hears its "grand old traditions" reverently spoken of. The building that originally housed them is still intact; but its modernized methods now direct some of the institutions in the state and many large outside of it.

The original Brown and Ives building has been enlarged to accommodate numerous firms. Yet the newest edition is as ancient as the original walls. The architect dug up identical formula by which the building's first bricks were made and provided exact replicas of the original shutters. This old and honorable building wears an inscrutable air; men of immense wealth drive to its doors every day. It is the source of many donations to the philanthropic, public spirited, and cultural institutions of Rhode Island.

South Water Street is still lined with the shipping headquarters of more than a hundred years ago, when Providence played second fiddle to no other American port. Providence is determined to get back its lost eminence as a port. Its Chamber of Commerce claims that it is the nearest, easiest, and cheapest New England port to reach from southern waters; that it is the most centrally located harbor with respect to the greater population of New England; that it is nearer than either Baltimore or New Orleans to all of the principal eastern ports of South America; and two days nearer than San Francisco to the Panama Canal.

The Standard Oil Company has recently spent something like $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 in development work, building its ship terminals, pipe lines, refineries, and chemical works at Providence. Kerosene, vaseline, lubricants, and by-products are made on a huge scale.

Did you know that until 1900 Rhode Island had two State Capitals? One was in Providence and one in Newport; alternating sessions of the Legislature were held in each city. And did you know that you have got to be a property owner if you want to qualify in Providence to vote for candidates for Common Council or the Board of Alderman? But this obstacle is not insuperable—you can get by if you own $134 worth of property.

As for local politics, it makes no difference in Providence what party you belong to. Joseph H. Gainer, though a Democrat, is so well liked that the Republicans and Democrats get together every two years and reëlect him mayor.

New York has its Bankers' Club, tucked against the sky on the top floor of the Equitable Building, Chicago has its Cliff Dwellers, but Providence has a club that rivals both of these. It is the Turk's Head. It balances itself adroitly on the 16th floor of the tallest building in the State. Turk's Head sounds more grotesque than this club really is. All the big business men in Providence seem to belong to it and to go there for luncheon.

But it hasn't nearly as long or formidable a waiting list as the quaint little Art Club. Among corporation heads there are many in whom the soul of an artist is being stifled in the breast of a man of affairs. In Providence, men of this stamp all sooner or later become lay members of the Art Club. It has a charm and flavor that the Salmagundi Club of New York or the Savage Club of London might envy. An artist can get in almost any time, but lay candidates are kept waiting for years; it is the most exclusive club in the state. When winter comes, this club has enough open fireplaces to rebuff the hardest New England blasts. A perennial controversy rages—Shall the accumulated soot of about a century be removed from the Colonial ceilings, or shall it be allowed to remain? It is needless to add what side the artist members take in the wrangle or that the lay members are always compelled to lie down.

The Art Club has a Narragansett Indian as a chef; his pumpkin pies are worth travelling far to sample. It was over some of his pie that I had the good fortune to meet Dr. Mead to whom America's epicureans owe a decided debt. This genial professor, head of the department of biology at Brown University, is familiarly known as the "lobster king." He lives a good share of the time on his house-boat, studying shell fish and contributing conspicuously to the prolongation of the life and numbers of that desirable race. His department is probably the most famous one at Brown, although one hears that in electrical engineering it has forged so sharply forward that the General Electric Company gives preference in employing engineers to graduates of Brown.

Brown University alone would have put any city west of the Alleghanies everlastingly on the map. It is headed by President William H. P. Faunce. It has graduated statesmen like John Hay and Charles T. Hughes. Its football team last year gave Chicago, and Yale a hard tussel and beat Harvard.

It was also at the art club that I learned much about Providence from G. Richmond Parsons, President of the Crompton Company, manufacturers of corduroy and velveteen and inventors of the popular "All Weather" corduroy. Mr. Parsons, though master of 1,200 looms, has the soul of an æsthete, and is typical of the lay membership of the club.

New England, and particularly within a few miles of providence, offers unlimited places of amusement and ideal places to spend a healthful and happy vacation.

Florida at this time of the year draws a goodly quota of its winter population from Rhode Island but we, who are envious now of the ones who have gone there, may draw a measure of comfort from remembering that in the summer time the shoe is on the other foot. Rhode Island draws a generous quota from Florida then—probably fifty-fifty, which is fair enough.

The members of the American Lenders Association, who will assemble next September in Providence for the 11th annual convention, will find that the nature-made beauties of New England resorts is all that is said of it and those who visit its shores will well profit by the acquaintanceship. SENATOR W. S. WILKIN INTRODUCES BILL TO PROTECT W. VA. FROM LOAN SHARKS

Would Place Limitations Upon Designing Companies

Brooke County Senator Introduces Bill No. 291, called "Wilkin Bill"

WOULD PLACE COMPANIES UNDER JURISDICTION OF STATE BANKING COMMISSIONER

BY CALVERT L. ESTILL

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 4.—Adequate protection of the poor from the clutches of loan sharks is provided in senate bill No. 291, introduced at the initial session of the legislature by Senator W. S. Wilkin of Brooke County, First district. The northern part of the state has had sad experiences with the evils which this measure would correct and the bill will undoubtedly be pushed by the junior senator from the Panhandle.

Under the term of the Wilkin bill no person, co-partnership or corporation engaged in the business of making loans of money, credit, goods or things in action, in the amount of three hundred dollars or less, would be allowed to charge contract for or receive a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent without first obtaining a license from the state banking commissioner.

When one properly licensed the person or firm would be allowed to charge not more than 3½ per cent on sums less than three hundred dollars and 6 per cent on loans above that amount. If there should be any legal or official fees specified by law an extra charge could be made for them; but no other charge could be made for loaning money.

LAW HAS REAL TEETH

While the Wilkin measure has specific penalty provisions, such as heavy fines and imprisonments, it also states that "if interest or charges in excess of those permitted by this act shall be charged, contracted for or received, the contract of loan shall be void and the licensee (lender) shall have no right to collect or receive any principal, interest or charges whatsoever."

Borrowers would have to pay interest only on the money they actually owed. "Interest shall not be payable in advance or compounded," says the bill, "and shall be computed on unpaid balance only." Furthermore, as added protection to the borrower, the law would require that certain sections of the bill be printed in plain English on a statement furnished the borrower by the lender showing the amount of the loan, dates affecting it, rates of interest, terms or payment and other similar details.

The lender, according to the proposed act, would be required to give to the borrower "a plain and complete receipt for any and all payments made on account of any loan at the time such payments are made," and the loan would be payable in part or as a whole prior to maturity at the will of the borrower. Sharks would not be able to take advantage of the unwary by holding out for later, illegal use, papers signed by the borrower because the law provides that "upon repayment of the loan in full, the licensee shall mark indelibly every paper signed by the borrower with the word "paid" or "cancelled" and shall release any mortgage, or deed of trust, restore any pledge, cancel and return any note, and cancel and return any assignment given by the borrower as security."

ALMOST ANYTHING A LOAN

According to the measure proposed by Senator Wilkin, almost anything of value given in exchange for something else of value—except in case of a sale—may be regarded as a loan and would come within the application of the act. This is shown in the following provision:

"The payment of three hundred dollars or less in money, credit, goods or things in action as a consideration for any sale, assignment or order for the payment of wages, salary, commissions or other compensation for services, whether earned or to be earned shall be deemed a loan.

In order to determine whether or not too much interest has been charged, the borrower would have to deduct the amount of the loan from the amount of the assignment; the difference would be the interest. Says the bill: "The amount to which such assigned compensation exceeds such payment shall be deemed interest upon such loan from the date of such payment to the date such compensation is payable."

PROTECTING THE LENDER

Assignment for the payment of wages, salary or commissions which are given to secure loans would not be valid unless the full amount of the loan were paid to the borrower at the time the assignments were made. Such assignments, chattel mortgages and liens on household goods must be signed in person by the borrower, and if the borrower is married, both husband and wife must sign the order.

The law, however, strikes not only at loan sharks but also makes provision for the protection of honest loan companies. If a borrower refuses to pay up, the lender ,can collect from his employer to the amount of ten per cent of the wages, salary or commission due. The section on this subject states:

"Under an such assignment or order for the payment of future salary, wages, commissions or other compensation for service, given as security for any loan made under this act, a sum equal to ten per centum of the borrower's salary, wages, commissions or other compensation for services, shall be collectible from the employer of the borrower by the licensee at the time of each payment of salary, etc." The lender would have to supply the employer with a verified copy of the assignment and a statement of the amount remaining unpaid on the loan.

BANKING COMMISSIONER IN CHARGE

Loan companies, if the Wilkin bill should become law, would be brought under the supervision of the state banking commissioner, and he would be given full power and authority to examine them just as he examines banks and other financial institutions. Application for licenses would have to post with him a bond of one thousand dollars, to guarantee their compliance with the law.

While one company might be doing business at a number of different places, a license and bond would be required for each place or agent. The bond would be so conditioned that the money lender would "conform to and abide by each and every provision of this act" and pay to the state "and to any such persons or persons any and all moneys that may become due or owing to the state or such persons" by the lender under the terms of the statute.

If the state banking commissioner has reason to believe that the lender has violated the law in any particular he may revoke his license. If a lender should be guilty of twice breaking the law, his license would be revoked and could not again be issued to him, nor to his wife, nor to any firm, partnership or corporation of which he might be a member or officer.

PROVIDES FOR EXAMINATIONS

"The licensing official (state banking commissioner), for the purpose of discovering violations of this act," says the Wilkin's bill, "may personally or by any person designated by him, at any time and as often as he may desire, investigate the loans and business of every licensee; .....and for that purpose shall have free access to the office or place or business, books, papers, records, safes and vaults of all" loan companies.

The companies are required to keep such books and records as the commissioner may deem necessary for a proper examination of the business, and every company is compelled to keep the records of final entry, including cards if a card system is used, for a period of two years after the making of a loan.

Notorious cases are on record in which loan sharks by means of cleverly worded advertisements and circulars have drawn into their net needy persons who thought they would get a square deal. The Wilkin bill specifically provides that:

"No licensee or other person, co-partnership or corporation, shall print, publish or distribute, or cause to be printed, published or distributed in any manner whatsoever any written or printed statement with regard to the rates, terms or conditions for the lending of money, credit, goods or things in action in amounts of three hundred dollars or less, which is false or calculated to deceive."

Banks under state or federal supervision and licensed pawn shops are excepted from the provisions of the act. Penalties for violations of its terms may be as much as five hundred dollars fine and six months' imprisonment, or both, in the discretion of the court. If the Wilkin bill becomes law, and there is every reason to believe it will, borrowers and lenders both will receive in West Virginia that protection to which they are fully entitled; and loan sharks will be driven to more congenial shores.—The Wheeling Intelligencer, Feb. 9, 1925.

BENEFITS OF SMALL LOAN LAW EXPLAINED

Rotary Club Members Hear Address on How Business Is Regulated in Many States

Need of Similar Act in Kentucky

SAGE FOUNDATION CREDITED WITH ENACTING BILL IN 20 COMMONWEALTHS

Benefits of the uniform small loan law now in effect in twenty states in the Union were explained by Joseph Pierson, manager of the Kenton Loan Co., in an address Tuesday before the members of the Covington Rotary Club. Tribute to the Russell Sage Foundation was paid by the speaker, who declared that the Foundation drafted this law and, in consequence, the "story of the loan shark in these twenty states is now past history, and those who brought about this change have nothing but praise for the men responsible for the conduct of the small loan business as it is to-day." Pierson said that the small loan business is filling an important part in human affairs. He urged the passage in Kentucky of a law similar to measures enacted in twenty other states that will eliminate the loan shark.

Pierson said that money is borrowed by people who cannot anticipate reverses. "Ninety per cent of the people who borrow money are as proud and as upstanding as any man in this room, and have very legitimate reasons for needing money frequently, and would scorn a charity rôle, or to accept the money on any other than a strictly business basis," said Pierson.

The speaker said the banks are not equipped to handle the sort of business that the small loan field covers. He said the cost of handling small loan patrons in volume is prohibitive to the banker at the price he is allowed to charge. "The banker deals very largely in liquidable securities of fixed value in large amounts," said Pierson.

"Our business," said Pierson, "is a retail money business with the same proportionate overhead as any other small retail business, and is conducted largely on the same basis except that we do not have losses on necessary cut price sales and unsalable goods. We are obliged to turn our money over twelve times a year in order to make a gross return of 42 per cent once a year. What is the average gross per cent on each turnover of a retail mercantile establishment? It is variously estimated from 25 per cent upward and the turnover is from three to as high as twelve times a year.

"As to the necessity for our business. There is very little less than one million dollars loaned out in greater Cincinnati to-day, there are seven or eight large concerns operating in Cincinnati, and just one of them has upwards of $150,000 loaned out.

"In 1923 statistics were shown at our National Convention at Louisville that there were $60,000,000 loaned in the United States to 2,000,000 customers, and that the annual turnover reached $150,000,000. Do not such figures indicate proof positive that there is a demand and a necessity for our business? And understand, that covers only the northeastern part of the United States where the uniform small loan law is in effect." —Cincinnati Times-Star, March 4, 1925.

NEW JERSEY

Will you kindly insert the following publicity in the INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS, regarding the Fourth Annual Banquet of the New Jersey Industrial Lenders' Association?

"Fourth Annual Banquet of the New Jersey Industrial Lenders' Association will be held at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, N. J., on Thursday evening, March 19, 1925. This is the anniversary date of the enactment of the Egan small loan bill. It will be an all-day session with business meeting in the morning at 10 o'clock. The afternoon will be devoted to the reading and discussion of papers on live topics of vital importance to every lender, and the evening will be given over to the annual banquet and addresses by several prominent speakers. Charles H. Watts, of New York, has accepted the toastmastership. A varied and interesting program of entertainment has been provided."

GET 20 CENTS ON DOLLAR

Stockholders of Hawkins Subsidiary Advised to Drop Suit

Ft. Wayne, Ind., February 5.—Preferred stockholders of the Welfare Loan Company of Ft. Wayne, a subsidiary of the Hawkins Mortgage Company, will get 20 cents on the dollar, according to the report of the receiver, Clinton R. Willson, filed in the superior court here yesterday. Holders of the common stock will get nothing, the report revealed, but an additional distribution of several cents on the dollar to holders of preferred stock will be made when the affairs of the company are settled finally.

The receiver recommended that a suit he brought against Morton S. Hawkins, president of the Hawkins Mortgage Company, the mortgage company and other officials be dropped, pointing out that Hawkins is now at liberty on bond, that the company is in the hands of a receiver, and the other officials have been convicted by a federal jury for using the mails to defraud. The Ft. Wayne concern sought to collect $110,000 from the parent company, alleging unlawful transfer of money. The receiver's report said that it would be "only a waste of money" to push the litigation.

The receiver said the affairs of the company will be settled within a few weeks.—Indianapolis News, Feb. 5, 1925.

VIRGINIA

At the annual meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association, held in Norfolk, Virginia, on February 18th, Mr. R. L. Northey, of the Atlantic Small Loan Company in that city, was elected vice-president of the Association. It would seem that the attitude of the Norfolk credit men in electing a small loan man as an officer in the organization would be invaluable steps of approval that could be extended to the small loan business, and shows a thorough appreciation of the efforts of the small loan men to coöperate in every possible way.

It will probably be of interest to our readers to know that only last April the small loan concerns were admitted to membership in the Norfolk Credit Association—and then by a far from unanimous vote. As most of the publicity which the small loan business received is through the reports of judgments, etc., and it is very difficult to really give a good explanation of the small loan business to the public at large, it is hoped that the various lenders will endeavor to coöperate with the credit associations in their respective cities, and, if possible, join them, as in this way an opportunity is given to explain the working of the small loan business in a way that could not otherwise be accomplished.

The Norfolk lenders are finding that membership in the Retail Merchants' Association is an invaluable assistance both as to credit information and also as above explained in "telling the story" to a friendly audience.

MAINE

Your letter received, also the printed matter. I wish to thank you for your attention in regard to the matter. With respect to the reduced rate bill, the Judiciary Committee voted unanimously "ought not to pass."

Walter S. Hilborn, Esq., of New York, was present and made a very favorable impression with the committee.

The source from where the bill originated was not from where I was first informed and came from unreliable parties.

We were represented by able and leading attorneys and the mayors of the two largest cities in the state spoke for our Association.

Through education the public is beginning to realize the business is helpful and that we play a very vital part in the economic life of the community.

Very truly yours,
HENRI S. CROSBY, Secretary.

GEORGIA

The Fourth Annual Banquet of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association was held in the ballroom of the Capital City Club on the evening of Thursday, January 29, 1925. At about 6:30 the guests began to arrive and at 7:30 we assembled in the ballroom, which had been transformed into a banquet hall, for our banquet. Immediately after all were seated grace was said by Colonel Napier, one of the honor guests of the occasion. The tables were beautifully decorated, each table containing a silver basket with a beautiful arrangement of cut flowers. At each plate was placed a program, very artistic in its makeup, and also a favor of some description. A song sheet of parodies of popular airs was also placed beside each plate. Balloons and horns added to the hilarity and enjoyment of the occasion.

There were 76 seated at the banquet tables, including the guests of honor, who were: Judge Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice Supreme Court of Georgia; George N. Napier, Attorney General, State of Georgia; G. N. Howard, Judge Superior Court of Fulton County; Mr. B. S. Barker, Executive Secretary Atlanta Chamber of Commerce; Mr. E. A. Thompson, Assistant Superintendent of Banks, and also a number of other prominent guests.

Immediately after grace was said we were invited to sing the first song on the song sheet, and between each course of the dinner a song was sung. These songs were particularly written for the occasion and had to do a great deal with our line of business. After the dinner we were entertained by two very fine singers, Mr. Paul Crutchfield, tenor, and Mr. Fred L. Brigman, bass, whose contributions added much to our pleasure and enjoyment. Following this feature of the program, Col. Tillou Von Nunes, toastmaster, introduced Mr. A. B. Madison, chairman of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, who made a short but very hearty address of welcome. This was followed by a beautiful and touching "Toast to the ladies," by Judge Russell, which, in part, was as follows:

"Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen, I had hoped that I would have one occasion with my many friends of the industrial lenders when I would not have to listen to my own eloquence, in such charming surroundings as this. I see that I am to make a 'toast to the ladies.' I tell you what is a fact: I do not mind talking about the ladies, though I had rather talk to them. In my opinion they are the sweetest things that God ever made. The Lord made Adam first, and then He made Eve, and since that time man cannot get along with woman and he cannot get along without her. The Lord made men and women. He never made any ladies. I'll tell you what a lady is. She is the wife of a titled man, a lord or an earl. God made woman; He made her as a helpmeet to man. If we look back into history, into the lives of the great women that have lived in the world, we find among them very few 'ladies.' Woman was fashioned superior to man: so gracious in her manner, so magnanimous in her characteristics, so sweet, so tender, so wonderful—a woman is the greatest thing that was ever created. You know it has been well said that 'The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world.' The corner stone of all civil authority is the family. It is the keystone that binds well the arch of human civilization. There would be no civilization if it were not for the influence of the mothers. They rule our lives, and upon how they rule depends the character and quality of our civilization. Woman, her loyalty, her truthfulness, her gentleness, her tenderness, her sympathy, makes the only recompense in this world of toil and worry, sorrows and disappointments, creditors and duns and death. She is the only recompense, and to bask in the lovelight of her eyes, to feel the tender touch of her hand, to know that she loves us, either as son, as brother, as husband, or as sweetheart, gives us a touch of heaven that may perhaps be the only heaven that some of us will ever know. God bless the women. God bless their labors. God grant us their love and enable us to share and bear their burdens and to contribute to the lightening of their labors and to add to their happiness."

After Judge Russell's tribute to the ladies, Judge G. H. Howard was introduced. He made a short but very entertaining speech, more or less humorous, his "Remarks" covering a broad range of territory, and in part as follows:

"Mr. Toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen, I note my friends have put my name on the program, with just the word 'Remarks.' These friends of mine evidently know that what success I have attained in life is due to the fact that I have observed silence. You know, if you do not say much people imagine that you know something; sometimes, if you say a great deal they find out that you do not know as much as they thought you did. Early in our married life my wife and I had an agreement which I would recommend to this lovely bride by my side and her husband, and to all you young men, that I would settle all the important things that came up in our lives and she would settle the unimportant things. (Just imagine a man having an agreement of that kind with his wife.) I was to settle the important matters; she was to settle the unimportant matters. I'll tell you how I got by with it: There has nothing important happened yet. Don't ever let an important matter come up in your family. It was not expected that I would make a speech. How could you expect me to make an entertaining speech with such a grand old man, such a wonderful orator, as the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and one of Georgia's most magnificent orators, the distinguished attorney-general, to entertain you? My friends who put my name on the program knew I could not. I am glad they put it down just as 'Remarks.' I could never hope to be a banquet speaker. It is delightful to be here, but do you know I am almost in awe to stand here in the presence of men who have enough money to lend? A distinguished Georgian once said that he never had understood how a man ever got enough liquor to sell or enough money to lend. Evidently these men not only have money to lend, but they have some to furnish their wives. One reason I was invited here was that I could make the acquaintance of these retail credit men and money lenders. Brother Von Nunes knew I had to make the acquaintance of such men—every man who passes through a political campaign must do that. It is a great and wonderful privilege to stand here and look into the faces of so many beautiful and charming women and so many distinguished men who really have accumulated enough money to lend out."

Following Judge Howard's remarks, Attorney-General George N. Napier was introduced. He made a most interesting and highly entertaining talk, his subject being "Pleasantries," and after relating several humorous stories, pertaining mostly to southern life, he concluded with these remarks:

"These men who are in a position to lend money to others perform a great service. But there are loans, and loans; perhaps the finest loan is the loan of friendship, if indeed it is not exceeded by the loan of love. These loans bear interest. Interest must be paid; interest can be paid freely and beautifully. These loans, especially the loans of love, can be immortalized: that is, they cannot be paid back, but in this great thing of the loan of love we at least must pay interest in time given, in service rendered. There is no hardship, no deprivation in paying interest on that kind of loan. I wish to felicitate you in effecting this great good you do the community, and I want to say to you, my friends, that you really are benefactors of the people. Loans should be made for accommodation, and accommodations for worthy purposes. I felicitate you, and I beg to say to you that I greatly appreciate the privilege of spending the evening with you."

The dinner and speaking were over at 9:30, and from this time on until one o'clock we danced to music furnished by the South's most famous orchestra, Warner's Seven Aces. During the dance horns, various kinds of noise-makers and paper caps of different hues were passed among the crowd. Special invitations to the dance had been sent out and at the peak of the dance there were at least 125 couples on the floor. The throwing of gayly colored serpentine streamers among the dancers made a most attractive spectacle, and the ten gallons of fruit punch served during the evening made everyone happy and feel that the evening was well spent.

At one o'clock the dance was over and the guests departed with many expressions of a most delightful and enjoyable evening.

WATTS GOES TO NEW YORK

Charles H. Watts, who has been the chief executive officer in the East of a large chain organization operating the Peoples Finance Service Co. and the Household Finance Service Co., has accepted the position as the chief officer of the Beneficial Operating Bureau, 135 Broadway, New York, and may be communicated with at the new address from now on. This change in official positions will in no way affect Mr. Watts' activities in Association work for the present, as he will continue to hold his position as a member of the Executive Committee of the A. I. L. A. as the Chairman on Legislation, and will continue his services as Secretary of the Pennsylvania Association, for the time being.

Mr. Watts has had notable success in the industrial loan field, starting years ago at the very bottom, and rising to-day while yet a young man, at the top of the largest organization of its kind in the world. His experience and ability and enthusiasm will no doubt be the means of making the organization over which he shall now preside, as efficient as it is big. We congratulate the interests which has obtained his services, and wish Mr. Watts the best of luck in the new environment.

SMALL LOANS AND INVESTMENTS

Report of the Committee on Small Loans and Investments of the National Association of Legal Aid Organizations Approved by the Convention at Minneapolis, September 25 and 26, 1924.

Since the Cleveland Convention of the National Association of Legal Aid Organizations, the Committee on Small Loans and Investments has conducted a careful national survey of the situation in the various states relative to small loan legislation. This survey indicates that in ten states the uniform law is effective providing for 3½% interest per month on small loans. This uniform law has the support of the Russell Sage Foundation, organizations representing the lenders in the states where it is in force, and welfare organizations. The law has been enacted in the following states:

Arizona, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Maryland, Maine, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Virginia.

In ten other states there is now in force a law similar to the uniform small loan law:

Colorado, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Utah.

In order that the committee might work effectively, contact was established with the Russell Sage Foundation, the American Industrial Lenders Association, the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, and various welfare and social service bureaus and societies throughout the country.

In December, 1923, the committee was represented by its chairman at a national conference under the auspices of the Russell Sage Foundation in its office in New York City. At this meeting, the situation as to the extension of the Uniform Small Loan Law in the United States was considered carefully. It was decided that an effort be made to pass a law in the state of Kentucky when the Legislature convened in 1924. The committee coöperated with the Legal Aid Society of Louisville and a vigorous campaign was conducted in the Legislature in behalf of the uniform law. The proposed law failed of passage, but the effort brought together the most formidable array of organizations that has been mustered on behalf of the legislation in that state.

The last state in which the 3½% law was enacted was Rhode Island, where it was passed in 1923, becoming effective January 1st of this year. In three other states, West Virginia, Minnesota and Missouri, an attempt was made to pass the Uniform Law, but in each of these states it was defeated. In 1923, however, an amendment to the law in the state of New York, providing for a 3½% interest rate was defeated in the Legislature.

This Committee recommends that the National Association of Legal Aid Organizations concentrate on two purposes:

1.—To coöperate with the Russell Sage Foundation and the American Industrial Lenders Association toward effecting the passage of the uniform law in states where, as a result of conferences, it is deemed advisable to make a fight for the passage of such legislation.

2.—That in all states in which the Uniform Small Loan Law, or a similar law, is not now on the statute books, the Legal Aid Organizations shall, by forceful publicity and intelligent propaganda, direct public attention to abuses practiced by unscrupulous money lenders and that the Legal Aid Organizations also compile statistical data as to the evils arising from these usurious practices.

All the states and the United States Congress, excepting Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi and Virginia, will meet in legislative session during the ensuing winter. Some of the states in which the law has not been enacted, and where it might be considered advisable to conduct a campaign for its passage, are New York, Tennessee, Texas and West Virginia. As to whether or not a program so extensive and important should be undertaken in a single year ought to be decided by the Russell Sage Foundation, the American Industrial Lenders Association, the National Association of Legal Aid Organizations and other agencies interested in the motion for this legislation.

One other important subject has been considered by the committee—the salary purchasing business which originated in Atlanta, Georgia, and which has also been introduced in Baltimore, Maryland. This business is conducted in the following manner:

The salary purchaser approaches an employe who has earned money, for example, between the 15th and 30th of any given month, and who will not receive it until the 10th or 15th of the following month. The employe, desirous of obtaining money in advance of the date when he will receive it from his employer, makes application to the salary purchasing concern. An employe who would receive $25.00 for two weeks' work will very probably obtain from the concern the sum of $22.00 in cash. If he received his money on the 5th of the month, his salary would be paid on the 10th and he would be charged $3.00 for the use of the $22.00 for a period of five days. Following the receipt of the salary from the employer, the employe goes to the salary purchasing office and again may be accomodated with another sum of $22.00 until the next pay day two weeks thereafter.

It is the contention of the salary purchasing companies that the money which an employe obtains from an employer belongs to the borrower and that the employe can sell it as he would any other material thing which he owns.

The business of salary purchasing has support throughout many of the southern states and it is believed by those familiar with the Uniform Small Loan legislation that efforts might be made on behalf of the salary purchasing companies to prevent the enactment of a uniform small loan law.

This practice is one that would seriously affect poor persons. The legal aid organizations are representatives of the poor in difficulties arising out of such business transactions. It becomes the duty, therefore, of the National Association of Legal Aid Organizations to study carefully this new trend in the small loan business in order that the association may voice its position authoritatively and effectively with respect to the extension of this business.

It is the recommendation of the committee, therefore, that during the ensuing year a thorough investigation be made with respect to salary purchasing in every state where it is now practiced.

It is the further recommendation of the committee that it coöperate with the Russell Sage Foundation and other organizations toward the enactment of the Uniform Small Loan Law in states where this law does not now appear on the statute books.

Respectfully submitted,
ROMAIN C. HASSRICK, Chairman.

INFORMATION SERVICE

New York, March 22d—The tidy sum of $3,845,077,000,000 000,000 to-day would be to the credit of the heirs or assigns of William the Conqueror had he celebrated his victory at Hastings by investing one dollar at 5 per cent compound interest. The computation is made by W. Irving Bullard, vice-president of the Merchants National Bank of Boston, whose more modest estimate is that if Columbus had celebrated similarly in 1492 his dollar by now would have multiplied into $1,842,679,000.

The enormous cumulative power of compound interest illustrated by these striking instances is cited in a bulletin issued to-day by The American Industrial Lenders Association as an impelling reason for nation-wide reform in methods of financing small borrowers. Any system other than a fair rate of simple interest on small loans, says the bulletin, is inequitable and uneconomic.

Under State supervision of industrial lending where the Uniform Small Loan Law is in effect interest in a small loan may be charged only on the unpaid balance, that is only on the actual balance due for the actual number of days the money has been used and the rate is fixed by law.

This law is in effect, however, in less than a score of states. Elsewhere small loans are made, not only at extortionate rates, but the rate is on the whole amount of the loan, no matter how much has been deducted at the outset for premium or advance interest, or how much has been repaid in installments. In addition, by a system of fines, fees and premium charges for renewals of loans, and other practices known as "pyramiding," the borrower is made to pay at a rate which dwarfs compound interest by comparison.

These abuses in industrial lending have been eliminated by scientific legislation, the extension of which to every state in the Union is advocated by the bulletin.

CREDIT MEN TOLD OF LOAN CONCERNS' VALUE TO INDUSTRY

"Of thirty-five million borrowers in the United States approximately one million are served by legitimate industrial loan companies,' stated A. B. Madison, chairman of the Industrial Lenders' Association of Georgia, who delivered the principal address at the opening session of the two-day conference of the southern division of the Retail Credit Men's Association Tuesday morning at the Henry Grady hotel.

Mr. Madison spoke as substitute for D. J. Woodlock, secretary of the national association, who was unable to be present at the convention. H. G. Schiff, president of the local association, opened the conference with a brief address, and was followed by the invocation which was delivered by the Rev. L. O. Bricker. Mayor Walter A. Sims gave the address of welcome.

In speaking of the advantage of an efficiently functioning industrial lending system, Mr. Madison stated that it was of social, personal and commercial value to the community. "It takes care of the small loans without security, which the banks cannot handle, it will rid the public of the nuisance of those who borrow from friends, and will increase the buying power of the individual which is a considerable asset to the retail merchant." Mr. Madison stated: "Georgia is the only southeastern state which has the Russell Sage small loan law, and which has indorsed this system of lending money."

FURTHERANCE OF LAW

At the close of the discussions which followed Mr. Madison's address, and which were participated in by delegates from all the southeastern states represented at the conference, a resolution was unanimously adopted that efforts should be bent toward having this law placed on the statutes of the different states.

A committee was appointed by Mr. Schiff to formulate plans for making the southern division of the national association a permanent organization with executive officers and to make the conference an annual affair. The committee, which was to make its report at the afternoon session, included Olin Berry, Knoxville, Tenn., chairman; G. W. Wallace, Chattanooga, Tenn.; J. M. Holloway, Montgomery, Ala.; I. B. Morse, Nashville Tenn., and E. B. Irwing, Birmingham, Ala.

If the committee returns a favorable report it was announced that officers would be elected during the afternoon session.

DINNER PLANNED IN EVENING

The morning sessions closed with an address by J. R. Byington, of J. P. Allen Company, Atlanta, who spoke on "Laws Affecting Conditional Sales Contracts in the South."

They were to meet in the afternoon at 2 o'clock for addresses by Austin Carey of Memphis, and Dewey W. George, of Knoxville, Tennessee.

Tuesday night an elaborate banquet will be given at 6:30 o'clock at the Grady hotel, and will be followed by a ball. The entertainment features of the banquet will include Warren Kimsey, leading community singing; several song numbers by Floyd Jennings, well-known local vocalist; interpretative dances by Miss Laura Virginia Condrey, popular Atlanta dancer, and a number of musical selections by Ernest Rogers and Lambdin Kay, of WSB, The Journal's radio broadcasting station.

The visiting ladies will be entertained at a matinee party followed by tea at the Atlanta Woman's Club Tuesday afternoon. With the closing of the business session Wednesday at noon, plans have been made to take the visiting delegates on a sight-seeing tour.—Atlanta Journal March 10, 1925.

FINANCING THE BANKLESS BORROWER

By J. H. Aufderheide, National Chairman, American Industrial Lenders' Association

It is doubtful if there is a thorough understanding by the average business man of the question of industrial lending, the only form of credit available to about 95 per cent of the nation's adult population. The activity of organized lenders in the last several years in promoting legislation intended to put their business under state regulation, and the assistance offered by their national body in a nation-wide fight on extortionate lending, have made pertinent some facts which should contribute to a better understanding of their business by the public.

Economists, sociologists, students of social welfare, many bankers and some business men have this understanding of it, based on their knowledge of social and economic conditions that make it a necessary business. But the average man has not this knowledge or understanding, and it is the average man in the mass who decides questions. Each year the report of the increase in the savings accounts of the population, totalling billions of dollars, feeds our national complacency. Yet a very high percentage of those thrifty persons in an emergency could not be accommodated by the banks.

This, of course, is not the fault of the banks. The money they lend is that of their depositors, and obviously they cannot risk it in credit extended without the security that commercial banks must require. Nor at the interest rate they are permitted to charge on loans can they afford to handle the multiplicity of small transactions entailed in the business of making small loans. These facts explain the necessity for a fiscal system which shall provide credit for the vast numbers for whom no other provision is made. At the same time they explain the essential difference between banking and money lending, and the reason for the difference in the legal rates of interest on loans charged by each.

FOUNDED TEN YEARS AGO

It was to bring about a general understanding by the public of the small loan business that licensed money lenders some ten years ago organized the American Industrial Lenders' Association. The membership in the organization is limited rigidly to those lender corporations and individuals who conduct their business under state supervision in the states where the business of money lending is legalized and licensed, where the interest rates are fixed by law, and where the lender is held to as strict accountability by the state as are the banks under the same supervision. In this sense, the association is an exclusive body, but because one of its prime aims is to bring money lending under the same strict supervision in every state in the Union thereby protecting borrowers from rapacity, greed, and extortion, it is above all inclusive. And it may be said to be unique in that it is perhaps the only business on record that has organized primarily to bring about state regulation of its business and is clamoring for it.

Some elemental facts about the business are a necessary precedent to an understanding of it and the reasons for the association's campaign for supervision by the State. A small loan, in the meaning of the law, is one not in excess of $300, the legal interest rate for which is higher than that permitted on the loans of commercial banks, and repayment of which is made in installments. This higher interest rate is allowed in recognition of the facts that small loans are made from the capital of the lender, on no security or security of a non-liquid or precarious character, that the business involves expenses of recording the information on the prospective borrower's loan application, investigating the statements made, searching the title to the security offered, if any, and the bookkeeping necessary to record periodic installment repayments on the loan, as well as maintaining records required by law.

It is estimated that between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000 capital is employed in the small loan business, and that the loans total about $150,000,000 annually in a total of about 2,500,000 transactions, affecting approximately 1,000,000 families. Loans of this character are made to wage and small salary earners forming the great mass of those to whom bank credit is not available. The reasons for the loans run the scale of human necessities, from sickness and death to unemployment; in fact, all of these emergencies which constitute the crises in the lives of those with little money and many responsibilities.

EAGER FOR STATE SUPERVISION

It may be asked why legitimate lenders are eager for state supervision of their business. They seek it because with supervision comes legal recognition of their business as a necessary and legitimate financial enterprise, the rates they may charge for loans are exactly fixed, and the business is established on terms of fairness to lender and borrower alike, so that the age-old evils to which a business of this sort is peculiarly susceptible may no longer exist to attract to it men who are without conscience or scruples. The new order of money lending has attracted to it a class of men who would be content to engage in it only in a lawful way, and to apply to it approved business methods. They do not regard money lending under humane and equitable conditions as a charity, but as much of a necessity as commerical banking. And while viewing it strictly as a business, they are actuated in its conduct by business principles and ideals of service as high as those actuating men in any other line of legitimate business. For this reason they are desirous of widening the area wherein legitimate money lending may be possible, for they realize that a capital of even $100,000,000 employed in some score of states is but a very thin spreading of credit to meet the needs of the large number of necessitous who in crises must have money, if not on fair terms, then on whatever terms, however extortionate, they can obtain it.

If this fact of the necessity for a loan on whatever terms were borne in mind by all, the speedy solution of the problem would be demanded by an aroused public opinion in every state. For it is a matter that directly touches the public conscience when once understood. All lenders have a keen realization of the fact; so, too, have most economists and sociologists, and many earnest students of public questions, but the average man, when he thinks of it at all, too often believes that the needs of necessitous borrowers who are in so desperate a financial strait that they will, if they must, submit to extortion to obtain a loan, should be met by charity. But charity is not meeting these needs, cannot possibly do so, should not do so, and in the cases of most of the really deserving borrowers, is not called upon to do so. Charity as a solution of the question was long ago eliminated by students. As a solution it is first of all unscientific; it is, besides, inadequate, uneconomic and anti-social.

Former Solutions Unsound

Leaders in the new order of money lending long ago realized that all solutions formulated and tried by well-meaning theorists for the cure of a business that almost was co-existent with civilization, had failed because they were basically unsound. They knew full well that their business was bound to be enduring because of the necessity of it, but they knew quite as well that it could not endure with a full measure of the real helpfulness that should characterize it unless some scientific principle could be arrived at to govern its operations.

It was to the Russell Sage Foundation that they turned, and the Foundation named a commission of experts who made the first survey ever made of money lending in the United States. This survey resulted in the drafting of what is known as the Uniform Small Loans Law, the vital principles of which were the licensing of lenders under bond, regulation of their business by the State, and the fixing of the maximum interest rate on unpaid balances of loans at 3 1-2 per cent a month.

This law has been adopted either in its entirety or in principle in about a score of the states. Wherever adopted it has won its way to the favor of the officials administering it, and to that of the public generally. It has never been repealed in any state adopting it. It has proved the wisdom of its framers as a practical remedy for the cure of extortion, for wherever it is in operation, the loan shark has been eliminated. Its terms of exact justice as between lender and borrower have attracted the capital of men who are content to do business only on such terms, and the competition they offer has been too much for the extortionate lender.

Organized lenders are convinced that in this law they have at least found the principle that must govern the orderly and equitable conduct of their business. It is for this reason that they have been seeking, and are constantly seeking, to make the operations of the law nation-wide, for until that is done, extortionate lending will not have been utterly extirpated, a great proportion of the body of necessitous borrowers will still be without credit on fair terms, and the possibilities of legitimate lending will remain cramped and confined.

Why a 3 1-2 Per Cent Rate?

But there are still many who cannot understand why a rate of 3 1-2 per cent a month is justified. The stumblingblock to their understanding is that their comparison of this rate is invariably with the legal rate that commercial banks may charge on loans. The conditions under which the two classes of loans are made are not comparable. In the first place, banks are not lending their own capital, but mainly the capital of their depositors. It is for this reason that, even though they may charge no more than 6 per cent on loans, many of them are able to declare dividends of from 10 to 30 per cent on their capital stock, a rate that no lending company that I know of can or does declare. The best evidence of the truth of the assertion that small loans cannot profitably be made at the lower interest rate is in the fact that banks do not make them.

Their Own Capital

On the other hand, the loans made by industrial lenders are their own capital; they have no deposits available for this purpose. Very frequently their money is extended on the sole security of good character and earning ability of the borrower. Where security is offered, it is non-liquid and adequate only in the sense that the borrower usually will make every effort to repay his loan rather than risk his property to legal proceedings. It is a necessary accompaniment of the small loan business that it entails the keeping of many records and much bookkeeping. This is inevitable, because of the investigations required of applicants for loans, their security when and if offered, the entries necessitated by many borrowers repaying loans in frequent periodic installments, the tracing of delinquent borrowers, making of reports, and the innumerable details inseparable from the conduct of a business under strict supervision, and with so many varying conditions and characters of borrowers.

It has been demonstated that the present rate is the only one at which legitimate lenders can operate at a fair profit, no more, no less. At the same time, it is conceivable that at some time, under new and improved conditions of the business, it may be possible to make small loans profitably at a rate lower than this. But it is quite certain that a necessary precedent to this must be a more general extension of equitable laws permitting of the entry into the money lending field of the class of lenders who are earnestly desirous of putting the business on a legitimate plain. Indeed, as the business and the necessity for it become better understood by the public, and attains a greater degree of stability than it has at present, new devices, the evolution of business practices by the licensed lenders, and the inevitable competition that will ensue, undoubtedly will result in a lower interest rate for necessitous borrowers.

No one is more eager to hasten that day than the licensed lender, for the present maximum rate, which is the minimum under which he can profitably carry on, is irksome to him in the general lack of popular understanding as to its necessity, and he has besides, the merchant's instinct for reaching out for business on terms most attractive to those he serves.

MARYLAND

The March business meeting of the Maryland Association was held at 7:30 p. m., on the 10th of March in the Board Room of the M. & M. building, 22 Light Street, Baltimore.

The following gentlemen were present: R. T. Baseman, Peoples Loan Society; H. C. Moore, Peoples Finance Service Company; H. T. Mattingly, R. L. Long and Clifford Smith, Master Loan Service, Inc.; C. Howard Hood, Industrial Loan Company, of Baltimore; A. E. Potter, Household Finance Service Company; E. E. Houghan, Atlas Loan Society and Community Finance Service, Inc.; J. E. O'Neill, Beneficial Loan Society; H. P. Gatter, Supervisor Household Finance Service Company and Peoples Finance Service Company, and A. L. Rivkin, Classified Advertising Manager Baltimore Post.

The members enjoyed a twenty-minute talk by A. L. Rivkin, on advertising, especially so on results the advertisers obtain in patronizing the Scripps-Howard Newspapers. The news is condensed and to the point and the average business man can, within a few minutes' time, read all the local news of importance. This makes a tabuloid newspaper popular. The Post has been published for about three years and has a circulation of 85,000 at present, sixty to sixty-five thousand of this circulation are distributed in the home. Several members substantiated Mr. Rivkin's talk by expressing the results they were obtaining by using the Post as an advertising medium.

H. P. Gatter, of Philadelphia, an Exchange enthusiast, recited as to how successfully the Philadelphia exchange was being operated, special stress being laid upon the number of inquiries that were exchanged daily and the accuracy with which the exchange furnishes this information. There are twenty-six members in this exchange and all reports are made no later than 10 a. m. With this information before us, a general discussion took place by several of the Baltimore Exchange members as to our Exchange service may be improved, for instance reports covering inquiries are returned by messenger between the hours of 11 and 1. If reports could be furnished by telephone to each company by 9:30 or 10 a. m., a better loan service could be rendered. With this thought in mind Chairman Mattingly appointed Mr. Hougham a committee of one to contact the exchange with the thought of giving this improved service.

No further business to contract, the meeting adjourned until 7:30 p. m., April 14th.

H. C. Moore,
Secretary.

Yours very respectfully,
R. F. Hartz,

Chairman of Publicity, American Industrial Lenders Association.

Dear Mr. Hartz:

The first southeastern division of the Retail Credit Mens' Association met at the Henry Grady Hotel, Atlanta, Ga., Tuesday-Wednesday, the 10th-11th, of March. There were about one hundred thirty-five delegates present from Tenn., North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Miss. and Fla.

After the Address of Welcome by Mayor Sims, Atlanta. Mr. A. B. Madison, Chairman of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association was called upon to deliver the address entitled "Industrial Lending a Community Asset." Originally, Mr. Woodlock, National Secretary, was to have had this place on the program. Mr. Madison, however, was introduced as taking the place of Mr. Woodlock. The address, as you know, is quite lengthy, and during the address I made it a point to study those present and found that every one appeared to be very interested.

After the address the quiz committee began firing questions and called upon every one present to take part, and believe me they did. They brought up stuff that a loan man would hardly think of. At the beginning of this quiz we had in our favor about 25% of those present and after the various phases of our business were discussed and they became more enlightened as to the value regarding the business of the Industrial Lenders as a Community Asset we had 100% for us.

All the greater part of the morning session was devoted to our subject and they thought so much of the business of Industrial Lending that they passed a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, that in every state where the Russell Sage Small Loan Law was not in effect, that every effort be made to place this law on the statute books of the respective state.

Mr. Madison and myself stayed through this whole convention up to the time of adjournment. It was the greatest opportunity we have had for educational work, and believe me, we took advantage of every opportunity. There were many requests from both Mr. Madison and myself for the Georgia Small Loan Act. We sent to the capitol and secured fifty pamphlets of this act, we inserted this with the code of ethics—"Making Credit Available For All" and Dr. Muellers speech, and two other addresses in pamphlet form, titles of which I do not recall at this time, placed them in a large envelope and had the president of the Credit Men announce of what we had done and requested that those who were interested might come to the speakers table and help themselves. To show how completely we put this matter over, every one of these envelopes with their enclosures were taken and there was almost a scramble for them.

In due respect to the value of our publicity campaign in the City Builder, newspapers and mailing out of the various educational addresses etc., this personal contact with the Credit Men and their convention has done more good I know, than all other publicity educational work in the various mediums used in the southern states.

We regretted very much that Mr. Woodlock, due to illness could not be present. Knowing that Mr. Woodlock is heartily in favor of our business and advocates close coöperation with the Retail Credit Men and felt that had he been present he would have been very generous in our behalf, nevertheless, we won the Credit Men's most favorable recognition.

Permit me to suggest that if negotiations with Mr. Woodlock are not already under way regarding representation of the American Industrial Lenders Association at the national convention of the Retail Credit Men to be held in Minneapolis in June, please do so at once.

I am enclosing herewith clipping from the Atlanta Journal which I believe speaks for itself and will verify what I have stated above.

If you have any other addresses similar to Industrial Lending a Community Asset, let me have them and both Mr. Madison and myself will endeavor at every opportunity to put this message across.

Personally I have always been in favor of this sort of educational work and if you remember in my report at our Baltimore convention, wherein I advocated personal contact as the best means of favorable recognition, understanding and educational work.

Yours very truly,
GA. INDUSTRIAL LENDERS
ASSOCIATION,
Edward M. Steimle,

LOAN SHARK BILL PASSED BY HOUSE BY VOTE OF 64-29

Provisions of the Weiss-Wilkin Measure Attacked by Number of Delegates but Action Is Forced by Sponsors

Charge of Usury Is Made in Opposition

The Weiss-Wilkin loan shark bill, designated in the house of delegates as house bill 443, was passed by the house yesterday by a vote of 64 to 29 after the measure had been attacked by a number of delegates from the floor.

The bill provides that not more than three and one-half per cent per month be charged for loans of $300 or less.

Delegate Septimius Hall, of Wetzel County, who on Monday had supported the bill on the amendment stage, opened the attack on its provisions when it came before the house on its passage. He declared several abuses might grow out of passage of the bill.

Delegate Weiss, of Ohio County, and Robinson, of Harrison, spoke in favor of the bill, declaring that the law was not an experiment, that it has been tried out in twenty states and has accomplished the purpose for which it was designed. Doctor Robinson read a letter from the Indiana banking department favorable to the bill and declaring it was fair both to the borrower and to the lender.

No Limit to Interest

"There is no limit to the amount the loan sharks can charge under the present law," he asserted.

Delegate Street interposed by saying that he had known loan sharks to charge as high as 33 per cent for small loans.

Delegate King, of Nicholas, led the opposition to the bill. He said the present law protects the borrower against usury, pointing out that the borrower could go into court and recover any excess of six per cent paid for the loan of money.

"If you pass this bill, you open the way to usury," Mr. King declared.

In reply, Delegate Bayer, of Berkeley County, asserted that relief could only be obtained by instituting a civil suit and the small borrower is not inclined to take such steps.

Measure Is Passed

All discussion was stopped when Doctor Robinson demanded the previous question and the bill was passed. Those voting against passage were Delegates Ball, Bishop, DeLawder, Dye, Engle, Hall of Wetzel, Harvey, Hays, Hill, Hundley, King, Lockhart, McPherson, Morgan, Morris, Pence, Radabaugh, Roberts, Smith of Jackson, Sydenstricker and Van Sickle.—Charleston Gazette, March 25, 1925.

LOAN SHARK BILL UP IN THE SENATE

Interest Over 3½ Per Cent to be Prohibited by a State Law

Charleston, W. Va., March 30.—The so-called loan shark bill providing for interest not to exceed 3½ per cent per month on certain classes of small loans, which caused a fight in the house of delegates withstood an attack when it came up today in the senate. The first move was by Senator Herold, who proposed an amendment to reduce the maximum limit of such loans to $100 in place of the $300 in the original bill, but this went down to defeat. Then Senator Byrer took up the attack and moved that the enacting clause be stricken out, such an amendment being equivalent to killing the bill. In behalf of his move he objected to the state giving its approval to an interest rate which would amount to 42 per cent per year, but Senator Johnson declared the bill was a protection to borrowers of small sums, who were often forced to pay even higher interest rates, and Senator Wilkin told the senate the bill was the same as laws now operating in a large number of states and was prepared by the Russell Sage foundation.

The bill which had already passed the house, providing for 3½ per cent interest per month on loans of $300 or less, was passed by the senate after a debate in which Senator Baker opposed the bill and Senators Willis, Johnson and Cannon defended it as the best means of protecting borrowers of small sums needed to meet distressing emergencies. The bill was passed by a vote of 19 to 5, those voting against it being Senators Baker, Henshaw, Herold, Highland and Kidd.—Parkersburg News, March 31, 1925.

NOTICE OF MEETING

Pontiac Mich.,
March 17, 1925.

Dear Mr. Loan Man:

The Michigan Industrial Lenders Association's next Meeting will be held on Thursday April 16, 1925, in Flint, Michigan, at the Beautiful Durant Hotel.

Everything is all Set—All arrangements have been perfected to make this the one big successful meeting of the Michigan Organization. Funds have been provided—the Committee has been on the job—and everything is in readiness to give you the best time of your life.

Business First—The regular business session will be held in the parlors of the Durant Hotel, beginning at 10:30 A. M. and continues until 5:30 P. M. We will have with us Speakers from other States, and there will be interesting discussions covering every feature of the loan business. Have you seen by the Detroit papers how the Michigan Central Railroad Officials, and the Prosecuting Attorney of Wayne County are getting after the loan sharks in Detroit? Do you know that a bill has already been introduced in the State Legislature which will materially change the law under which we are now operating? These matters will all be discussed at the Flint meeting. A law may be put through the Legislature which will make it impossible for us to operate our business at all in this State. This is going to be a very important meeting—if you value your business—come to the meeting, and come early, we are going to have a busy day.

Banquet, Speakers, Music, Singing, Ladies, Dancing—Your committee has engaged the large, beautiful, ball room of the Durant Hotel, where at 6:30 P. M. a Banquet will be served to the members, their wives, sweethearts and guests. We are going to have some real eats, Boys—the best the Chefs of the Durant can provide.

The Flint Chamber of Commerce have assigned their Directing Manager, the Hon. Bill Otto, to give an address of welcome to the members and their guests. You perhaps don't know Bill—but your Committee does—"Nuff said."

Mr. J. F. Aufderheide, President of the American Industrial Lenders Association is coming from Indianapolis to address us, and others of State and Local fame will respond to toasts.

Bill Mill's Jazz Orchestra will make things lively during the Banquet and we are going to have some pretty girls sing to us—yes we said Pretty—leave it to the Committee.

Promptly at 9:00 P. M., Bill Mill's Orchestra will ascend the rostrum and the President of our State Association, the Hon. Harry Firth, and his wife, will lead us in a Grand March, followed by dancing to continue until the wee hours of the morning. There will be no wall flowers—each licensed loan man will be expected to dance at least once with each lady present.

You are invited—You don't have to be a member of the State Association in order to attend this Convention; if you are a licensed loan man, you are invited, and we want you to bring your wife, your sweetheart, your stenographer, and office assistants—the more the merrier.

Bridge and Mah Jong for the Ladies in the afternoon—Your Committee has engaged a parlor of the Hotel for the use of the Ladies while the afternoon business session is in progress, and games will be provided for their entertainment.

Dancing and Entertainment Free—Banquet Tickets, $2.50 per plate—Tickets for the Banquet must be obtained at once from the Committee. We must advise

INFORMATION SERVICE

New York, March 30.—The tidy sum of $3,845,077,000,000,000,000 to-day would be to the credit of the heirs or assigns of William the Conqueror had he celebrated his victory at Hastings by investing one dollar at 5 per cent compound interest. The computation is made by W. Irving Bullard, vice-president of the Merchants National Bank of Boston, whose more modest estimate is that if Columbus had celebrated similarly in 1492 his dollar by now would have multiplied into $1,842,679,000.

The enormous cumulative power of compound interest illustrated by these striking instances is cited in a bulletin issued to-day by The American Industrial Lenders Association as an impelling reason for nation-wide reform in methods of financing small borrowers. Any system other than a fair rate of simple interest on small loans, says the bulletin, is inequitable and uneconomic.

Under state supervision of industrial lending where the Uniform Small Loan Law is in effect interest on a small loan may be charged only on the unpaid balance, that is only on the actual balance due for the actual number of days the money has been used, and the rate is fixed by law.

This law is in effect, however, in less than a score of states. Elsewhere small loans are made, not only at extortionate rates, but the rate is on the whole amount of the loan, no matter how much has been deducted at the outset for premium or advance interest, or how much has been repaid in installments. In addition, by a system of fines, fees and premium charges for renewals of loans, and other practices known as "pyramiding," the borrower is made to pay at a rate which dwarfs compound interest by comparison.

These abuses in industrial lending have been eliminated by scientific legislation, the extension of which to every state in the Union is advocated by the bulletin.

RHODE ISLAND

The regular meeting of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Providence Biltmore Hotel, Providence, R. I., Thursday, February 19, 1925, at 7:15 p. m.

REPORT OF OFFICERS

The Financial Service Company of Pawtucket and the New England Equity Corporation of Providence were elected to membership.

Mr. Wood has proposed for general adoption by all members the principles of business promulgated by the United States Chamber of Commerce and the code of ethics adopted by the American Industrial Lenders Association. These principles and the code of ethics to be neatly printed and framed and placed in the lobby of each office.

He also proposed starting an educational campaign to educate the public as to the nature of our business and suggested that the members should get together and issue propaganda that would help the business. The members were heartily in favor of this and agreed to appropriate $10.00 each month to defray the advertising expense.

Mr. Wick, of Philadelphia, was in favor of some plan whereby our business could be put forth to the general public through newspapers and other mediums.

Mr. Lovegrove advocated that we educate the public through the offer made by Mr. Grinnell of the Better Business Bureau.

On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Lovegrove, it was agreed that we should run an article each week in the Evening Bulletin. Mr. Wood was appointed to write the articles and attend to the printing of same.

Mr. Wick made motion, seconded by Mr. Moran, that the secretary write the secretary of the Illinois Association to get advertising propaganda used in that state.

Mr. Wood made motion that Mr. LaGueux be appointed for the unfinished term pending Mr. Wickstrom's resignation. He also made motion that Mr. Wickstrom be given a rising vote of thanks for his efforts in behalf of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association during the past seven years.

Mr. Wick, who is chairman of the Retail Merchants Bureau, asked for a man in each city to coöperate with him to carry on the work attached to this department. The following were appointed: Mr. Wood, Providence, R. I.; Mr. Kennon, Pawtucket, R. I.; Mr. Lewis, Newport, R. I.

There being no further business to transact the meeting adjourned.

Respectfully submitted,
J. H. WICKSTROM, Secretary.

COMMUNICATIONS

ATLANTA, GA., March 28, 1925.

MR. ARTHUR L. WICK,
Chrm. Retail Merchants
Bureau Committee,
1011 Chestnut St.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: At our regular Association meeting held yesterday we had with us Mr. Gilbert, president of the Credit Service Exchange and secretary of the Associated Retail Credit Men of Atlanta, which is affiliated with the Retail Credit Men's National Association.

Since Mr. Madison and myself attended their Southern Convention and made such a good impression, in so far as value of industrial lending as a community asset is concerned, the Associated Retail Credit Men at their meeting held at the Henry Grady Hotel, Thursday, March 26th, discussed and decided that it would be to the mutual advantage of both the Retail Credit Men and the Industrial Lenders to get together and work in harmony, as our problems were more or less alike, that they needed us and we needed them.

Mr. Gilbert stated that they never realized until Mr. Madison and myself met with them more than a year ago and at their last meeting, the fundamentals and exact nature of our business. Mr. Gilbert was shown by one of the smaller lenders here with actual cancelled checks that more than $40,000 had been paid to the various businesses in Atlanta with whom the Retail Credit Men were connected.

After Mr. Gilbert extended the invitation for us to become members of both the Associated Retail Credit Men and Retail Credit Men's National Association at a cost of $12.00 per year, every member of the Georgia Association, with the exception of two—the Seaboard Security Company and the Southern Security Company, accepted and signed the application. These two companies stated that they no doubt would become members, but wanted to think the matter over.

The affiliation with the Retail Credit Men and meeting with them twice each month will present opportunities for educational work. There is no doubt that we have convinced them of the distinction between the legitimate lenders and the high rate lender, that they believe in our business, and in case of adverse legislation we can get the backing of this organization. It also should bring us all considerable business, as these Credit Men will be glad to recommend members of the Georgia Association to their customers, in order to liquidate some of their frozen accounts. We are gradually through our publicity campaign and personal contact campaign, educating the very men who come in contact with the public generally and who will pass the word along. This affiliation not only brings us in contact with the Retail Credit Men of large institutions but also with the proprietors of these businesses. In addition to that we become personally acquainted with these men and call upon them for information and they call upon us and at their meetings we will gain the benefit of their experiences with various customers and they ours, if only from an educational point of view, it is worth in my opinion five times the cost—$12.00 per year.

If the Seaboard and the Southern Security become members, which I believe they will, the Atlanta members of the Georgia Association, which is eleven out of thirteen, will mean 100% membership in Atlanta, and eleven men certainly can do a lot of publicity work.

Yours respectfully,
Georgia Industrial
Lenders Association,

Edward M. Steimle, Sec. and Treas.

Atlanta, Ga., March 25, 1925.

Mr. G. W. Kehr,
204 Chestnut St.,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir: I am enclosing herewith copy of letter just received from the Banking Department. Each member of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association located in Atlanta received this same letter.

It is going to help us to obtain a 100% membership in our Exchange Bureau. I have sent the original to Mr. Wick and suggested that he get a similar letter from the department under which Pennsylvania lenders operate.

Did I call your attention to the fact that Judge Russell's address delivered at Baltimore was published in part in the City Builder of March issue?

With best personal wishes, I am
Yours very truly,

STATE CAPITOL
Department of Banking
State of Georgia

Atlanta, March 24, 1925.

Mr. Edw. M. Steimle, Mgr.,
Citizens Loan Company,
301 Peters Building,
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Sir: We have learned that the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association now have in operation an Exchange Bureau.

If we understand the operation of this bureau, its purpose is in line with the spirit of the law under which members of your Association are conducting business.

From the standpoint of your customers, as well as your own interests, it is desirable that the total loans incurred by any one customer be kept within bounds, although this possibly is not in violation of the letter of the law.

This Department certainly does not desire to offer any suggestions as to the conduct of your business or interfere with it in any way, but understanding the situation as we do, it is believed that you will appreciate knowing that we approve of this bureau as we understand its purpose, and would be glad to render any coöperation to you or to the bureau at any time we may.

Yours very truly,
Luther Roberts,
Special Counsel.

After luncheon, the meeting was opened at 2:15 by Edgar P. East, who presided at the request of Chairman Lovegrove.

W. G. Wood, of Providence, former Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders Association, and the R. I. Lenders Association, gave one of his interesting talks on advertising. This talk was very instructive, and gave everyone an entirely new viewpoint in advertising and State Associations.

The following is a paragraph which indicates that his talk was prepared in the usual careful manner.

The next question is, what is advertising, and what do we want to advertise? Not what thing but which thing? Which particular thing? Which specific thing? Tin plates at 5c means nothing if a person can't use them. Plaid shawls have no utility for men nor ice boxes for Eskimos. Neither is there much sense in advertising $20.00 to $300.00—3½% on unpaid balances—Confidential—No deductions, etc., etc., and then some, because, these silly and obsolete remainders of mediocre or scant ability and responsibility, carry no conviction to any mind which still believes that the whole institution of industrial lending is fundamentally wrong. So we must stop again before launching any advertising propaganda and prepare for its reception by going back, and finding the answer to, the second question: What is advertising, and what do we want to advertise? If it is money, why should people borrow from anyone and pay freight? Why not earn or save it and keep the costs? If it is service, what service? If it is merit, what merits faith, confidence, and finally, patronage?

On motion of Mr. Lovegrove a standing vote of thanks was given Mr. Wood.

Mr. Hodson moved that a copy of Mr. Wood's address be forwarded the National Secretary so that all could have the benefit of reading it.

Charles H. Watts, of Philadelphia, Secretary of the Pennsylvania Association and Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the American Industrial Lenders Association, gave a very interesting, as well as spirited address on "Living Up to the Ideals of the Association—the Spirit and Letter of the Law." His address was received with tremendous applause.

A general discussion on this talk was taken part in by A. G. Zimmerman, W. G. Wood, S. Flauman, T. C. O'Brien, L. Silver and others.

On the subject of exchanges in the different cities, A. G. Zimmerman, of the Beneficial Loan Society, spoke of their great need, and offered his services in connection with seeing that they were properly conducted and managed.

The following were appointed chairmen on exchanges in their respective cities, with power to appoint others in assisting them: F. H. Lovegrove, Bridgeport; Joseph Brennan, Hartford; T. C. O'Brien, New Haven; M. J. Conner, Waterbury.

A copy of the booklet entitled, "Code of Ethics," as adopted by the American Industrial Lenders Association, at the convention in Baltimore, September, 1924, was passed to each person present, and contents thoroughly discussed, and on motion of Mr. Bitting, they were unanimously accepted as the standard of this Association.

E. P. East advised the meeting of a conference he had with the Bank Commissioner on the subject of legislation and coöperation. He stated that the commissioner questioned him about certain licensees advertising about making loans on real estate and guaranteed notes, and expressed very emphatically that he disapproved of such advertising. The Commissioner further expressed his disapproval of such advertising, that would encourage unnecesasry borrowing at different seasons of the year.

There was a thorough discussion of the subject, and by unanimous vote the secretary was instructed to prepare a suitable letter to the Banking Commissioner, together with resolutions adopted at this meeting as going on record disapproving such advertising.

It was brought to the attention of the meeting that certain persons, firms or corporations were making loans on real estate, and on motion of Mr. Lovegrove, the Association went on record as opposed to loans of this character.

Mr. Silver, of New Haven, stated that a number of people were making loans in his city, who were not licensed, and he promised to give such names to Mr. Bitting, who agreed to serve as chairman of a vigilance committee. A report to be made to him, in writing, by the members each month.

George Hodson spoke on the bills introduced in the present legislature affecting the present law, and stated that three of them were due to the way certain licensees had conducted their business.

Mr. Padace, of Norwich, stated that some people were making loans in his city, who were charging 20% bonuses in addition to the interest, and promised to give names to the Association.

For increasing membership, on motion of George Hodson, it was voted that a chairman be appointed, and he to appoint his committee for all cities in the state on special club offer.

As a result of Mr. Wood's interesting talk on advertising, a committee was appointed to look after advertising in the following cities: Bridgeport, F. H. Lovegrove; Hartford, E. Sanderson; New Haven, R. L. Bitting; Waterbury, M. L. Connor.

At this time the chairman introduced George Hodson, Vice-President of the Beneficial Loan Society, to talk on Legislation—Past and Present. His talk was most interesting. He discussed how the law was enacted, and its benefits to borrowers under state supervision. He reported that bills were pending at the present time that would change the laws, which he hoped would be defeated. He asked the coöperation of each and every member present to make known to the personal and business friends the purposed and high ideals of the Connecticut Industrial Lenders Association and the American Industrial Lenders Association.

At this time Mr. East turned the meeting over to Chairman Lovegrove, who expressed his appreciation of the large number present.

On motion, duly seconded, it was voted to hold the Association meetings every two months, instead of quarterly as heretofore.

On motion of E. P. East, a vote of thanks was given the committee for luncheon provided.

Meeting adjourned 5:30 p. m.

PUBLICITY

In last month's issue of the LENDERS NEWS, nine columns of publicity were reproduced.

Is your state receiving its proportionate share?

As you probably know, the American Association, under the direction of the Publicity Chairman, has employed a publicity expert to prepare articles. This service is offered to you in your respective city by the Chairman of Publicity of your state. It is your fault if you do not use this service. It is our fault if the service is not prepared for you.

Get in touch with your State Chairman or write me direct. This service is offered you for the asking.

THE CLIQUE.

What is the clique? 'Tis those who attend all the meetings, on whom we depend. They never are absent unless they are sick. Those are the ones the grouch calls the "Clique." The ones who are never behind with their dues, who come to the meetings and have their own views. They will serve on committees and never say "die." The "Clique" are the ones that always "get by."

IOWA

This is an account of the meeting of the Iowa Industrial Lenders Association, held at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on March 5, 1925, at the Montrose Hotel.

In the absence of our chairman, T. J. Harrison, W. J. Scheib of Cedar Rapids, acted as chairman pro tem.

W. J. Scheib, address of welcome.

Representatives of the following organizations were in attendance: Burlington Security Co., John F. Miller, Burlington; Beneficial Loan Society, W. J. Scheib, Cedar Rapids Loan Co., W. L. Glessner, Cedar Rapids; Commonwealth Loan Co., H. H. Hunt, Clinton; Iowa Loan Company, Jay Cherniack, Council Bluffs; Commonwealth Loan Co., V. Fiderlein, Guaranty Loan Co., C. H. Aliber & Co., M. Aliber, State Loan Co., E. L. Levitt, Des Moines; Beneficial Loan Society, C. L. McCauley, Dubuque; Ft. Madison Security Co., F. R. O'Malley, Heitzman Land & Loan Co., O. B. Frederick, State Loan Co., T. J. Harrison, Waterloo.

Other men interested in the loan business that were present: D. R. Reynolds, Indianapolis, Ind.; C. G. Liggett, New York City; W. S. Steely, Waterloo, Iowa.

E. L. Levitt, of Des Moines, gave a short talk on State and National Publicity. C. G. Liggett, of New York, volunteered to appear before any civic club or organization for the purpose to further the cause of our publicity campaign.

A motion was made and seconded that the secretary shall have authority to select a certain city and have the coöperation of a local member for the purpose of arranging for a speaker, to appear before a contemplated Civic Meeting, in order to explain the advantageous effect of the small loan business. The following men have been assigned as prospects to carry out this work: T. J. Harrison, Waterloo, Iowa; D. R. Reynolds, Indianapolis, Ind.; C. G. Liggett, New York City; A. R. Dana, Chicago, Ill.; B. E. Henderson, Chicago, Ill.

Motion made and seconded that we adopt the resolution to have Code of Ethics arranged in condensed form in order to frame and hang in the offices.

Motion made and seconded that the secretary appoint a member in each city for the purpose of distributing to the different organizations and civic bodies, pamphlets known as Code of Ethics, cost incurred in this particular instance to be defrayed by each individual office.

C. G. Liggett gave a short talk urging a one hundred per cent membership in the national organization. D. R. Reynolds corroborated his statement explaining the benefits to be derived from affiliation with the National Association.

Morning session adjourned.

After lunch an invitation was extended by the Cedar Rapids lenders to visit the local offices.

Meeting called to order at 2 p. m. The acting chairman reported that T. J. Harrison wired that he would be present to still take advantage of the afternoon session.

The chairman appointed the following members to solicit membership for the State and National Associations: Chas. M. Dehnert, Chairman, Des Moines, Iowa; J. H. Kelso, Sioux City, Iowa; W. J. Scheib, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

New members added to the National Association: Des Moines Loan Co., Des Moines, Iowa; Globe Loan Co., Des Moines, Iowa; Guaranty Loan Co., Davenport, Iowa.

New members added to the State Association: Guaranty Loan Co., Davenport, Iowa; Capital Loan Co., Des Moines, Iowa; Black Hawk Loan Co., Waterloo, Iowa; Liberty Loan Co., Ottumwa, Iowa.

T. J. Harrison, our chairman, arrived to take charge of the afternoon session. The acting chairman cordially welcomed Mr. Harrison and withdrew from the chair.

Continuing with the afternoon program the question box was then introduced and every one present was urged to participate. Considerable discussion followed which proved to be very interesting and an asset to those present.

T. J. Harrison delivered a very effective and interesting talk on coöperation, pointing out the value of being affiliated with both National and State Associations. Anything of real value is generally covered by insurance, so why would it not be just as imperative to protect one's business by organization.

Afternoon session closed with the regular annual election of the officers of the Iowa Industrial Lenders Association.

T. J. Harrison, reëlected Chairman, Waterloo, Iowa; W. L. Glessner, Vice-Chairman, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; V. V. Boehm, Secretary, Des Moines, Iowa; Wm. De Beaulieu, reëlected Treasurer, Des Moines, Iowa.

Membership Committee: Chas. M. Dehnert, Des Moines, Iowa; W. J. Scheib, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; J. H. Kelso, Sioux City, Iowa.

Motion made and seconded that the meeting adjourn to partake of the evening banquet and smoker. Considerable credit is due to the Cedar Rapids members for the efficient and coöperative manner in which the State meeting was handled.

J. I. Levitt, of Sioux City, and H. Davidson, of Des Moines, were given a rising vote of thanks for the splendid evening program.

VIRGINIA

The regular meeting of the Virginia Lenders Association was held at the Southland Hotel, Norfolk, Va., March 19, 1925.

The business meeting was called to order by Chairman East at 2 p. m.

By order of the chair the minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

The secretary called the roll and the following members were present: Citizens Loan Society, Empire Company, Norfolk Loan Society, Norfolk Security Co., National Small Loan Society, Atlantic Small Loan Co., Beneficial Loan Society, of Norfolk; Portsmouth Security Co., Beneficial Loan Society, of Portsmouth; Citizens Loan Society, United Small Loan Corp., Personal Small Loan Corp., Virginia Small Loan Corp., Beneficial Loan Society, Home Guarantee Co., of Richmond; Federal Security Co., of Lynchburg.

We also had with us V. D. Moss, of Philadelphia; Lee Pumphrey, of Baltimore, and A. C. Christensen, of Wilmington, Del.

Secretary.—Secretary Bray reported that he had received notice of resignations from four offices for the members to pass upon at this meeting, and this would bring down the membership to 23 members. He also brought up the matter of the $10.00 monthly assessment for each office, and stated that a few members were delinquent, and therefore we had not got the amount we were supposed to get, namely, $200.00 a month.

Treasurer.—Treasurer Bradshaw reported that we had cash on hand $144.78.

Publicity.—C. S. Phillips, chairman, said he had made arrangements to get a good write-up in the newspapers covering this meeting.

Legislature.—V. D. Moss, chairman, spoke briefly on the arrangements made with our attorney in Richmond, and was satisfied that we had the right man to protect our interests, and the small assessment we had to pay monthly was good insurance.

Executive.—L. E. Pope, chairman, told what he had done regarding uniform papers. He had received a set of papers from each office, but had not made any decision yet. He had consulted an attorney, Virgil R. Goode, of Richmond, and he had agreed to draw up a set of papers for $275. After some discussion this was left over until our next meeting.

Communications.—The secretary read letters from M. E. Bristow, Chief Banking Examiner; C. H. Watts, Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the National Association, and W. G. Wood, of Providence, R. I. He also read a letter from the William I. Marsh Co., Inc., of Chicago, in which they stated they were mailing each member a portfolio of forms which would be of interest to the members.

At the invitation of the members Captain Chadwick, who has charge of the Retail Merchants Credit Exchange at Norfolk, invited the Norfolk members to join their Exchange, and he thoroughly explained their system of handling credit reports. Three of our members had already joined and others thought favorably of it and would consider it.

Resignations.—The secretary read a letter under date of January 31, 1925, from the Universal Small Loan Corp., tendering their resignation for their offices located in Norfolk, Suffold and Richmond. Their resignations were accepted, but on account of them being in arrears with their dues, the secretary was instructed to notify them and send them a bill for the amount due.

The resignation of the Tidewater Small Loan Corp. of Norfolk, which was held over from last meeting, was passed upon and accepted.

New Business.—Mr. Bray brought up the subject of holding our meetings every ninety days, instead of sixty days as we do at present, as he thought the expense of attending these meetings would bring down the attendance if we held them so often. Mr. East, our chairman, spoke strongly against going back to the ninety-day meetings. After considerable discussion it was decided to hold our meetings as we were doing, every sixty days.

The secretary brought up the subject of financing these banquets and explained the Association besides what it collected from the members had to pay from the Association funds $223 at the Richmond meeting. Mr. McMurtrie moved that we assess each member of the Association $10 to cover this deficit. Mr. Pumphrey seconded the motion, and it was carried. The secretary was instructed to bill each member for $10 to take care of this deficit.

Mr. Bradshaw recommended that the members close their office on the following holidays: New Year's Day, General Lee's Birthday (one-half day), Washington's Birthday, Decoration Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Armistice Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas day. A large majority was in favor of this.

It was decided that our next meeting be held at Lynchburg, Va., Thursday, May 21st.

The chair appointed J. A. Hillsman and A. Long of Lynchburg to act as the Entertainment Committee.

There being no further business the meeting adjourned at 5:15 p. m.

Banquet.—We met in the Banquet Hall at 6:30 p. m., and we all enjoyed a splendid dinner and heard some splendid speeches from prominent men in Norfolk.

Our guests and speakers were Hon. William H. Sargeant, Judge of No. 1 Corporation Court; William R. Brookman, representative of the Norfolk Chamber of Commerce; J. McBride Webb, attorney-at-law; Rev. Howard I. Stewart, pastor of the First Baptist Church; Ralph Gould, Secretary of Norfolk Chamber of Commerce, and William L. Prieur, Clerk of the Corporation Court.

After the speech making was over, the members and the ladies enjoyed themselves dancing. Music was furnished by the Jones Orchestra.

FRANK BRAY, Secretary.

LINK v. COMMONWEALTH

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Oct. 17, 17, 1924. Rehearing Denied Dec. 5, 1924.)

1. Statutes Key 141 (2)—Constitutional provision as to amendments held not to apply to acts not purporting to amend another act.

Const. § 51, has no application to acts that do not purport to revise, amend, or extend another act, and Ky. St. § 4263—4, was not invalid for not setting out provision of section 4224, notwithstanding any subsequent act of compiler of statutes.

2. Licenses Key 7 (3)—Statute imposing license tax on loan business not invalid as discriminatory.

Acts 1920, c. 158, imposing license tax on those doing business as loan company, is not invalid because banks, trust companies, and building and loan associations are expressly excluded, classification being reasonable.

3. Licenses Key 7 (2) Reasonable classification for purpose of occupational tax valid.

Reasonable classification for purpose of taxation, and especially occupational taxation, is valid exercise of legislative power.

4. Licenses Key 7 (2)—Classification for purpose of taxation must be based upon reasonable distinction.

Classification for purpose of taxation, including occupational taxation, must be based upon reasonable distinction, and must not be purely arbitrary.

5. Statutes Key 109—Title need not contain provision for repeal of inconsistent laws.

Title of act need not contain provision for repeal of inconsistent laws, though body of act contains such provision, under Const. § 51.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

Proceedings by the Commonwealth, through its Revenue Agent, against A. M. Link, doing business in the name of the Louisville Loan Company. Judgment for the Commonwealth, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fred Starck and Doolan & Doolan, all of Louisville, for appellant.

D. O. Myatt, of Louisville, for the Commonwealth.

THOMAS, J. The General Assembly at its 1920 session enacted chapter 158, p. 678, of the published acts of that session, which was a wholly independent act, and imposed an annual license tax on certain named avocations and professions including those "of doing business as a loan company," the amount of the annual tax on such a business being fixed at $250. Appellant, A. M. Link, prior and subsequent to that time was and has been individually engaged in that business in the city of Louisville, and he declined to pay the tax for two of the years since taking effect of the act, and this proceeding was instituted against him in Jefferson County by the Commonwealth through its revenue agent, as is provided by section 4263—4 of the 1922 Carroll's Edition of Kentucky Statutes. Payment of the taxes, including the imposed penalty for such refusal was resisted by appellant upon the ground that the 1920 act was unconstitutional because (1) it was in violation of the provisions of section 51 of that instrument, and (2) that banks, trust companies, and building loan associations were expressly excluded from the operation of the act and that exclusion worked, as contended, an unlawful classification and rendered the act inoperative as to appellant. The court ruled against him and rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the license fees for the two delinquent years with a 20% penalty thereon, and complaining of that judgment he prosecutes this appeal.

[1] It is urged in support of ground (1) that by an act of 1906, which was subsequently incorporated in the Kentucky Statutes as section 4224 as a part of the statutes on revenue and taxation, the same occupations covered by the 1920 act were annually taxed at named rates, and that the effect of the latter act was to amend the then section of the Kentucky Statutes, which was the 1906 act, and that it was therefore necessary, under the provisions of section 51 of the Constitution, to set out in the 1920 act the entire 1906 act as amended by the later act; all of which would be true if the 1920 act had purported on its face, either in its title or in its body, to amend the 1906 act or any other existing statute, as this court has held in an unbroken line of decisions, two of the latest of which are Board of Penitentiary Commissioners v. Spencer, 159 Ky. 255, 166 S. W. 1017, and South v. Fish, 181 Ky. 349, 205 S. W. 329. There are many other intervening ones. But in the Spencer Case, the contention here made was expressly decided against appellant in these words found in the opinion on page 263 (166 S. W. 1021):

"This part of the section [51] has of course no application to acts that do not purport to revise, amend, or extend another act or law. When the Legislature comes to enact new laws under appropriate titles, its power is not in any manner limited by this provision, and it may act entirely independent of and without reference to it. Of course many laws that are enacted by the Legislature touch in some way existing laws either by amending, extending, or repealing them; but notwithstanding this, the Legislature, by a new act that does not purport in its title or body to amend, revise, or extend an existing law, may in fact revise, amend, or extend it, free from the control of section 51, and this has been often done."

All of our other opinions dealing with this phase of the application of section 51 of the Constitution have steadfastly followed the construction announced in the Spencer opinion, and which conforms to the general law as applied by other courts, as will be seen from the text in 25 R. C. L. 874. There is nothing in the 1920 act to exclude it from the rule announced in the Spencer Case and in the referred-to text, and this objection to its constitutionality, in so far as it relates to the occupations therein named, cannot be sustained, although its effect was to modify, alter, or amend by implication the 1906 act relating to the same occupations. The reason underlying such an interpretation need not herein be repeated further than to add that the purpose in requiring that the amendatory act should set out the completed statute as amended, and the mischief sought to be remedied by such requirement, does not exist in the enactment of a new and independent act. That purpose was to prevent the members of the Legislature from being misled and deceived by the failure of the amendatory act to set out in full the act as finally amended. No such misleading or deception could occur in the enactment of an entirely independent act, which by implication would substitute or take the place of a prior act dealing with the same subject matter or matters, and which, by reason of being inconsistent with the prior act, would repeal it by implication. Neither are we authorized to consider, in the determination of the question, the fact that the compiler of the last edition of the Kentuck Statutes inserted the 1920 act, as to the occupations to which it related, in lieu of the same provisions in reference to the same occupations in the 1906 act, since the act of the compiler in so doing was but carrying out his policy of convenient arrangement, and which act on his part forms no step in the established legislative provisions in this commonwealth. The court was therefore not in error in overruling this ground.

[2-4] Neither do we think ground (2) is tenable. The right of reasonable classification for the purpose of taxation and especially occupational taxation has long since been adhered to in this commonwealth, and the authority and power of the Legislature to do so has been recognized by this court in numerous cases. It is true that such classifications must be based upon a reasonable distinction and must not be purely arbitrary; but it is easy for us to observe not only a reasonable but a wide distinction between what may be termed ordinary loan companies and banks, trust companies, and building loan associations. Our statutes provide for a different method of assessment and taxation of such companies and corporations and for a regulatory supervision of them, which is at least a legislative recognition that their business is quite distinct from that of the ordinary money lender, who follows such a business as a regular avocation. One prominent and, as we think, sufficient distinction, justifying the classification, is that banks, trust companies, and building loan associations do not merely lend their own money, but in addition thereto they are made, by the very nature of their business, the custodian of the money of others, and for which, as well as the proper handling of which in some of them, they are responsible to their patrons. The ordinary money lender handles no one's cash but that of his own and is responsible for no deposits made with him or investments made by him of the accumulated fund arising from paid-in capital on stock which belongs to the paying stockholder, and that distinction alone is sufficient, as we conclude, to place such institutions in a different class for the purposes of taxation from others engaged in the business of lending their own money only. A case sustaining the classification here involved is that of City of Newport v. Frankel, 192 Ky. 408, 233 S. W. 884, in which others are referred to.

[5] Another argument made in briefs is that the title of the 1920 act contains no provision for the repeal of other inconsistent laws, while the body of the act contains such a provision. But under similar constitutional provisions as to the requirement of the title of an act as are contained in section 51, it is held that the inclusion of an express repealing clause of other inconsistent acts in the body of the statute will not affect its validity because no such repealing reference is made in the title. In all such cases the repealing clause, in the body of the act is germane to its subject, as stated in the title, because if the last act is inconsistent with a prior one, it is repealed by implication, and the express repealing clause in the later act neither adds to nor detracts from its effect; and that rule of interpretation was adopted by us in the case of Burton v. Bryant, 199 Ky. 447, 251 S. W. 192.

We therefore conclude that the judgment was proper, and it is accordingly affirmed.—Southwestern Reporter, Dec. 24, 1924.

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 7, 1924. Motion for Reargument Overruled July 1, 1924.)

Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 8, §§ 11-17, is remedial in character, designed to protect wage earners, assigning their wages, from greed and rapacity of unscrupulous persons, who might exploit their necessities and misfortunes for profit, which purpose is within the police power of the state to regulate.

2. Assignments Key 3—Constitutional law Key 296 (1)—Pawnbrokers and money lenders Key 2—Statute regulating assignments of wages held valid.

Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 8, §§ 11-17, requiring certain formalities in assignments of wages, held not to violate "due process of law," even if the business of unrestrained buying of wages at a discount could be considered property.

3. Constitutional law Key 81—Right to pursue any lawful occupation is "property," but subject to state regulation, if injuriously affecting public.

While the right to pursue any lawful occupation or calling is generally recognized as "property," within the "due process" clause of the Federal Constitution, the state may regulate it, under its police power, when its unregulated operation may injuriously affect the welfare of others.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Property.]

The business of money lending and buying assignments of wages is in its nature appropriate for state regulation under its police power.

5. Constitutional law Key 81—State may regulate and limit right of contract under police power.

While, as a general rule, all competent persons are free to make any contracts they please, not contrary to public policy or positive law, the state may, in exercise of its police power, regulate and limit that right.

6. Constitutional law Key 296 (1)—Requirements of statute regulating assignment of wages held not unreasonable.

Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art, 8, §§ 11-17, requiring that assignments of wages be acknowledged by assignor and his wife and entered on books of justice of the peace, that copy be served on the employer, that proof of service be by employer's admission indorsed on certificate, and that assignor make oath that he has not and will not pay more than 6 per cent interest, held not unreasonable as respects due process; other proof of service in lieu of employer's admission not being excluded.

7. Constitutional law Key 296 (1)—No distinction between assignment of earned and unearned wages as bearing on reasonableness of statute.

On question of reasonableness of statute regulating assignments of wages, no logical distinction can be drawn between earned and unearned wages, because the right to earn money is as much "property," and within Const. U. S. Amend. 14, requiring "due process," as earned wages.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Edward L. Wright and another trading as Baltimore Finance Company, against Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before Pattison, Urner, Adkins and Offutt, JJ.

Allan H. Fisher and Joseph C. France, both of Baltimore (Jerome Sloman and Fisher & Fisher, all of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellants.

Duncan K. Brent and David G. McIntosh, Jr., both of Baltimore (Allen S. Bowie, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees.

Offutt, J. The single question presented by this appeal is whether chapter 399 of the Acts of 1906, codified as sections 11 to 17, inclusive, of article 8 of the Code of P. G. L. of Md., conflicts with any provision of the State or Federal Constitution, and that question arises in this way:

On July 30, 1923, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company owed Wm. L. Miller, one of its employes, $21.50 in earned wages, and on that day Miller offered to sell and assign his claim for that amount to the appellants in this case for $20. They accepted his offer, and he accordingly assigned the claim to them, and they paid the $20 to him, and notified the railroad company, which at that time owed Miller an amount equal to the claim of $21.50 of the assignment; but that company refused to recognize it, and informed the appellants that it would pay Miller the whole amount due him as though it had not been made. The appellants thereupon filed in the circuit court of Baltimore city a bill of complaint against both Miller and the railroad company, in which they set out the facts referred to, with other facts not material to the question before us, and which need not be further referred to here, and in that bill they asked for the following relief:

"(a) Discovery as to the said defendants and each of them, and that they be required to discover the entire earnings of the said defendant Miller in the capacity of brakeman for the month of July, 1923.

"(b) That the said court may assume jurisdiction over said fund and determine the rights of the parties hereto.

"(c) That the plaintiffs may have a decree in personam against each of said defendants for said sum of $21.50."

The defendants answered the bill severally, and in their answers, among other things, they averred that the assignment upon which the appellants relied was not made in accordance with the requirements of sections 11 to 17, of article 8, C. P. G. L. of Md., and was consequently void. There were other allegations of fact in the answer, which under the pleadings are not material to this inquiry, and are not before us, and will not therefore be considered.

The complainants demurred to so much of the answer as relied upon the statute referred to, on the ground that it violated both the State and Federal Constitutions and was void, and as to the remaining averments of fact in said answer they joined issue. So that the whole case finally turns upon the constitutionality of that statute, since it conclusively appears that the assignment does not comply with its terms and that, if the act is valid, the assignment is for that reason invalid.

That fact added eight new sections to the eighth article of the C. P. G. L. of Maryland, entitled "Assignment of Choses in Action," numbered 11 to 17. Sections 11, 12, and 13 read as follows:

Section 11: "No assignment of wages or salary shall be valid so as to vest in the assignee any beneficial interest, either at law or in equity, unless such assignment be in writing, signed by the assignor and acknowledged in person by him or her before a justice of the peace in and for the city or county, as the case may be, in which the assignor resides, and entered on the same day by said justice of the peace upon his docket; and unless further, within three days from the execution and acknowledgment of said assignment a true and complete copy thereof, together with the certificates of its acknowledgment, be served upon the person, firm or corporation by whom said wages or salary are due or to become due, in the same manner that the summons in chancery is now required by law to be served: Provided, however, that no assignment of wages or salary by a married person shall be valid unless the same is also executed and acknowledged as above by the assignor's wife or husband, as the case may be."

Section 12: That "proof of said service, as provided for in the preceding section, shall be by an admission thereof in writing by the person, firm or corporation, his, their or its agent on the original assignment, which admission of service shall also be entered by said justice of the peace upon his docket within two days thereafter."

Section 13: That "in addition to said acknowledgment to be made by said assignor, he or she, as the case may be, shall make affidavit that he or she has not paid, and will not, directly or indirectly, pay more than the legal rate of six per centum per annum on any sum borrowed, or permit a deduction from said sum so loaned to him or her at the time of said loan, or any time thereafter, of more than a sum equivalent to six per centum per annum for the time said loan is made."

Section 14 defines the term "Assignment," section 15 deals with the effect of usury in connection with assignments under the act, section 16 refers to the assignment of future earnings, and section 17 prescribes and defines the consequences resulting from a violation of the act, as well as the remedies which may be pursued in such a case. We have said that the assignment was not executed in compliance with the terms of the act, and that conclusion is inevitable from a comparison of its terms with those of the act. The assignor signed and sealed an application, which in part read as follows:

"Application to Sell an Undivided Interest in My Account for Wages or Salary. * * * I hereby make application to sell to Baltimore Finance Company an undivided interest in an account due me by my employer for wages or salary already earned during the month of July, 1923, in the capacity of brakeman. * * * This transaction is an absolute and unconditional sale, and not a loan or advance of money, and is not a discount; I am not a debtor to the purchaser; this is an original transaction, and is not a renewal or extension of any kind. I agree to take $20 for said account, and hereby authorize the purchaser, in my name and stead, and as my attorney in fact, to sign any and all checks, vouchers, receipts, and acquittances necessary and proper to be signed in order to collect said account."

The "assignment," which is also under seal and signed by the assignor, but neither acknowledged nor sworn to, contains in part these statements:

"For value received, I hereby sell to Baltimore Finance Co., doing business in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, an undivided interest in my account for salary or wages, already by me earned during the month of July, 1923, said interest amounting to $21.50, and due me by Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., my employer. I hereby direct my said employer to pay to Baltimore Finance Co. said amount. * * * This is an absolute and unconditional sale of an undivided interest in said account, and is not a loan or advance of money, and is not a discount; I am not a debtor to the purchaser; this is an original transaction, and is not a renewal or extension of any kind. * * * I hereby authorize the purchaser of this account, in my name and stead, and as my attorney in fact, to sign any and all checks, vouchers, receipts, and acquittances necessary and proper to be signed in order to collect said account and to evidence the payment of the same."

These two documents appear to constitute a somewhat ingenious, very sincere, and needlessly elaborate effort to escape the provisions of the act in question. But, as the assignment is obviously within the scope of the act, the appellants' contention that it is valid rests necessarily upon the propositions:

(1) That the act itself is unconstitutional, and in support of that contention they say:

"So far as it deals with the claims for wages or salaries actually earned, it is clearly an unwarranted interference with the owner's liberty of contract and right of property, and is void under the 'due process' guaranty of our fundamental law."

(2) That the provisions of the act are impossible of performance, and (3) that it has been repealed by implication by the passage of the Petty Loans Act. 4 Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 58a.

[1] This act is remedial in character, and its apparent purpose is to throw around transactions such as that involved in this case such safeguards as will protect the wage earner, who may be a party to them, from the greed and the rapacity of unscrupulous persons, who might exploit his necessities and misfortunes to his loss and their profit. That purpose is certainly within the police power of the state, and the only question open is whether in its attempt to effect that purpose the Legislature has in this act violated any of the privileges secured to the citizen by the guaranties of the State or Federal Constitution. And in dealing with that question we cannot disregard the consideration that any act designed to accomplish such a purpose must be sufficiently definite and comprehensive in its selection of the means and methods designed to effect it to frustrate the energy and ingenuity of the class at whom it is aimed, who so often regard the privilege of exploiting the necessities of borrowers as a vested property right. And while there should be no paltering with any real assault upon the rights, privileges, and immunities guaranteed to the citizen by the Constitution of this state or of the United States, on the other hand there can be no justification for restoring to strained, forced, technical, or tenuous reasoning in the construction of those charters, in order to strike down an act of the Legislature passed in the ostensible exercise of the police power of the state and in the public interest.

[2] The first concrete objection to the act is that it deprives the appellants of their property without due process of law. But the force of that objection is not apparent. The act took from the appellants no property, unless the business of buying without regulation or restraint wages at a discount is property. And while, under the facts of this case, we know of no definition of "property" which could include that privilege, yet if that privilege could be considered property the appellants were not deprived of it without due process of law, whether we assume that the word "property" relates to the particular assignment involved in this case or to the privilege of buying such assignments generally as a business, because there is nothing in the act which purports to affect rights acquired in transactions prior to its passage, and all transactions after its passage were carried on with knowledge and notice of its existence and subject to its terms.

[3] These principles are in accord with the general trend of judicial authority and may be regarded as established; for while the right to pursue any lawful occupation or calling is generally, if not universally, recognized as property within the "due process" clause of the Federal Constitution, yet, on the other hand, the right of the state to regulate such a business, when its unregulated operation may injuriously affect the welfare of others is equally well settled. For as said in Schaake v. Dolley, 85 Kan. 598, 118 Pac. 80, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 877, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 254:

"The right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness includes the right to employ one's faculties and property in a gainful occupation of his own choosing. This right, however, has never been regarded as absolute by either the English or the American law. While it is properly spoken of as fundamental and inalienable, it is nevertheless qualified to the extent that the sovereign power may interfere with its enjoyment through regulations necessary or proper for the mutual good of all the members of the social whole. One of the highest ends of civil government is the protection of the individual in the enjoyment of the fundamental rights enumerated in the Bill of Rights. The idea of those rights should be pervasive in civil institutions or government is likely to become a nuisance and a scourge. But if the individual insist upon them to the detriment of other individuals possessing the same rights, or to the detriment of the security, good order, common good, and general welfare of the entire social body of which he is a member, he is likely to become a nuisance."

And whether the operation of a given business or occupation will have such an effect is, as stated in Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725, a question for the state to determine in the proper exercise of the police power. In that case the court, in stating that principle, said:

"Regulations respecting the pursuit of a lawful trade or business are of very frequent occurrence in the various cities of the country, and what such regulations shall be and to what particular trade, business, or occupation they shall apply, are questions for the state to determine, and their determination comes within the proper exercise of the police power by the state, and unless the regulations are so utterly unreasonable and extravagant in their nature and purpose that the property and personal rights of the citizen are unnecessarily, and in a manner wholly arbitrary, interfered with or destroyed without due process of law, they do not extend beyond the power of the state to pass, and they form no subject for Federal interference."

[5] The question finally comes, then, to the reasonableness of the regulations provided in the statute in question; but, before dealing with that question, we will advert for a moment to the objection that the regulations in the statute under consideration unreasonably restrain the freedom of contract, guaranteed to the appellants by the "due process" clause of the Federal Constitution. While it is true as a general rule that all competent persons are free to make any contracts they please which are not contrary to public policy or positive law, that rule is subject to the qualification that the state, in the exercise of its police power and in the interest of the public welfare, may regulate and limit that right. 12 C. J. 948. In Taylor on Due Process, 493, the author, after quoting this statement from Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 277, 52 L. Ed. 436, 13 Ann. Cas. 764:

"Such liberty and right embrace the right to make contracts for the purchase of the labor of others, and equally the right to make contracts for the sale of one's labor; each right, however, being subject to the fundamental condition that no contract, whatever its subject matter, can be sustained which the law, upon reasonable grounds, forbids as inconsistent with the public interests, or as hurtful to the public order, or as detrimental to the common good,"
—said:

"In the italicized portion of the opinion just quoted, the court has emphasized the fact that the rights of life, liberty, and property are all subject to certain sovereign powers of the state, such as the taxing power, the power of eminent domain, and the police power. Such rights are not therefore in any strict sense either absolute or 'unalienable.' No man is at liberty to carry on a business injurious to the public morals or health, or to enter into immoral contracts."

And in 6 R. C. L. 269 et seq., the same principle is stated in this way:

"The right to make contracts is not absolute, but is subject to certain limitations. Congress, for example, in the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the several states, may circumscribe the individual's liberty of contract, and the same power may be exercised by any state for the promotion of the health, safety, morals, and welfare of those subject to its jurisdiction. * * * The Legislature may deny the right to contract to those who are incapable of binding themselves thereby, or it may prohibit the making of contracts, when it becomes necessary to protect the rights of others. The power of the Legislature to regulate a business for the protection of the public carries with it the power to control and regulate the right to contract in relation to it. While, therefore, the right to contract may be subject to limitations growing out of the duties which the individual owes to society, the public, or the government, the power of the Legislature to limit such right must rest on some reasonable basis, and cannot be arbitrarily exercised."

And so in respect to this objection also the ultimate inquiry is not whether the Legislature had the power to regulate the making of such contracts as that involved here, for that we regard as settled, but whether the manner in which it regulated them is reasonable.

[6] This statute does not prohibit assignments of earned wages, but it does make certain formalities incident to their execution essential to their validity—that is to say, it requires (1) that they be acknowledged before a justice of the peace in and for the county or city where the assignor resides, and entered on the books of said justice; (2) that within three days from the execution of such an assignment a copy thereof, with certificate of acknowledgment, shall be served upon the employer in the same manner as process is served in "chancery"; (3) that, if the assignor be married, it be also acknowleded by the husband or wife as the case may be; (4) that proof of service shall be by the admission thereof by the employer indorsed on the original assignment; and (5) that the assignor make oath that he has not paid and will not pay more than 6 per cent per annum interest on the sum borrowed.

Assuming that any regulation is permissible, we see nothing unreasonable in the first, second, third, and fifth of these requirements, when we remember the evil the Legislature was trying to remedy.

They do give to the transaction a certain publicity, but they impose no conditions which the parties to any bona fide assignment could not readily perform. If the fourth condition, relating to proof of service, were to be construed literally, it would give to the employer the power to nullify an assignment by refusing to admit service of the copies required to be served upon him, and would be unreasonable and void; but that provision was obviously only designed to afford an alternative mode of service, and not to exclude other proof of service, such as that provided in section 11, or the testimony of any one making actual service on the employer. These conclusions are, we think, supported by sound reason and the weight of authority, although there is some conflict in the decisions dealing with the question.

In Shaffer v. Union Mining Co., 55 Md. 74, this court said, in referring to a contention made in that case that the statute there involved prevented any assignment:

"To accord to this law the construction contended for by the appellee, and which was given it by the learned judge who decided this case below, would be doing unwarranted violence to the rights of the employees over the fruits of their own labor. It would be preventing their use of their wages, which might have been accumulating in the employer's hands, in the purchase of property, real or personal, and taking conveyance therefor. If the employer should be slothful in payment, it would prevent his employee, however straitened for the want of it, using his overdue wages by transfer as other people do their choses in action."

But we do not regard that case as in point, because there the court was dealing with an absolute prohibition of an assignment, while we are dealing with the regulation of the manner in which an assignment must be made.

[7] Before referring to the cases dealing with statutes regulating the assignments of wages, we will consider a distinction drawn in some of the cases between statutes which deal with earned and those which relate to unearned wages. But in our opinion there is no logical reason for such a distinction, because the right to earn wages is just as much property, and just as much within the protection of the "due process" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution, as earned wages. And if that distinction is not recognized the case of Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 222 U. S. 225, 32 Sup. Ct. 74, 56 L. Ed. 175, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 529, so far as the objection that the act violates the "due process" clause of the Federal Constitution is concerned, is controlling, and in that case it was held that a statute somewhat similar in the general character of its regulatory provisions to that involved in this age, but referring only to unearned wages was sustained. And in that case the court made this very significant and pertinent statement:

"There are other grounds upon which the statute may be sustained than those expressed by the Supreme Judicial Court of the state. As we have seen, it does not prohibit assignments of wages to be earned. It prescribes conditions to the validity of such assignments, and in this it has many examples in legislation. It has the same general foundation that laws have which prescribe the evidence of transactions and the manner of the execution and authentication of legal documents. The laws of the states exhibit in their diversities the power of the Legislature over property, its devolution, and transfer. It is rather late in the day to question that power."

The leading case cited by the appellants in support of their contention is Massie v. Cessna, 239 Ill. 352, 88 N. E. 152, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1108, 130 Am. St. Rep. 234; but as interpreted by the court in People v. Stokes, 281 Ill. 159, 118 N. E. 91, that case is not necessarily in conflict with the cases cited, except in so far as it treats the regulation of assignments of "salaries," as distinguished from assignments of "wages," as unreasonable. Referring to that case the court, in People v. Stokes, supra, said:

"The case of Massie v. Cessna, 239 Ill. 352, 88 N. E. 152, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1108, 130 Am. St. Rep. 234, is not in conflict with the above view. In that case an act of the Legislature which rendered invalid an assignment of wages or salary, unless it was in writing and signed by the assignor, and duly acknowledged before a justice of the peace, and entered upon his docket, and notice thereof served upon the employer, was held unconstitutional, on the ground it applied, not only to the wages of artisans, mechanics, laborers, and others employed in various manual occupations, but also to salaries and compensation for personal services of highly salaried officers of corporations and public officers, who were not in need of the protection of laws of that kind. * * * It was, however, there pointed out that wage earners were the proper objects of legislation which would tend to protect them from the evils which this statute was designed to prevent, and that such an act would not be rendered invalid because it placed reasonable limitations upon the right to assign such wages as security for an indebtedness, and prescribed a reasonable method to be pursued in making such an assignment effective."

That distinction between salaries and wages, however, is in our opinion too refined and delicate to justify us in recognizing it, and it does not appear to have been followed elsewhere. Cleveland R. R. Co. v. Marshall, supra; Fay v. Bankers, supra.

Without further prolonging this opinion, it is sufficient to say that, after a careful examination of the cases, we have found nothing in this statute in conflict with any provisions of either the State or Federal Constitution. From what has been said it follows that we do not regard the requirements of the act as impossible of performance, nor do we find any support for the proposition that it has been repealed by subsequent legislation.

For the reasons stated, therefore, the decree appealed from will be affirmed.

CODE OF ETHICS

All members have been sent their supplies of "Code of Ethics" to which they were entitled under the resolution adopted at the Baltimore National Convention. It was the desire of the convention that all members would put the "Code" into practice and would distribute their supply in their respective communities where they are likely to be most appreciated and advance our educational work.

In order to prevent duplication, we suggest that each member consult with other local "A.A." members for the purpose of circularizing such organizations as Chambers of Commerce, Kiwanis, Lions, Civitans, Exchange Credit Men, judges and other public officials and welfare organizations.

We note with interest that many of the state associations are reprinting the "Code" in convenient form for framing to be hung in each member's office.

NEW JERSEY

The tenth annual session of the New Jersey Industrial Lenders Association was called to order on March 19, 1925, at the Robert Treat Hotel in Newark, N. J., with Vice-Chairman Stephan K. Sturr presiding.

The convention was called to order by Mr. Sturr in a few well chosen remarks in which he welcomed the members and visitors on behalf of the association. After the customary roll call and reports of the nomination offices being read the convention proceeded on the management and Mr. Charles Watts who was to be our toastmaster was seriously ill with ptomaine poisoning and would be unable to attend and it was regularly moved and seconded that a bouquet of flowers be sent to Mr. Watts at the expense of the association. Mr. Young of Philadelphia stated that on his return to Philadelphia he would attend to this matter.

A new plan of advertising which created considerable interest among the members was outlined by Mr. Zimmerman of the Beneficial Loan Society, who stated that the plan besides being of vital interest to the business would be the means of obtaining many new members for the organization. The chair then appointed a committee to study the proposition more fully with a view of later presenting it to the members throughout the state.

Mr. Whitstone of Newark was called upon by the chair on behalf of an appointed committee, which had conferred with the various county clerks in the future with the hope in view of having an amendment passed to the chattel mortgage act permitting the filing of mortgages instead of recording them. Mr. Whitstone stated that he had not been very successful in getting the county clerks association to endorse the proposition but he felt that if the subject was properly presented to the legislature the point would be embodied in the chattel mortgage act.

A lengthy discussion took place which was participated in by many of the members as to the validity of a non-recorded chattel mortgage. Mr. Kaplan of the Equitable Loan Society granted the privilege of the floor discussing the subject and the Secretary then read a section of the old chattel mortgage act (not the Eagan Act) whereunder some doubt was cast as to the validity even between parties. It was finally voted that the Executive Committee be empowered to obtain an opinion from a reputable law firm as to the present status of chattel mortgages on household goods that had not been recorded.

At one o'clock the members were served with a very delightful luncheon on the balcony and at 1:45 the afternoon session was called to order.

Nominating committee being ready to report, they placed the following names in nomination for members of the Executive Committee: A. J. Simonson, P. L. Alberse, J. V. Long, C. H. Watts, A. G. Zimmerman, William Young, J. C. Van Horn, S. K. Sturr and William P. Hansche.

Upon motion report of the nominating committee was received and the committee discharged with thanks by the members. Thereupon the chair called for additional nominations and none being heard, it was moved that the nominations be closed which was duly carried.

At this point a letter was read from Mr. Sol H. Vogel who is now enjoying life in sunny California, in which he expressed his disappointment for not being present at this convention and wishes the association continued success in their various efforts. Upon motion it was ordered that a telegram be sent to Mr. Vogel expressing the thanks and appreciation of the association for the services rendered by him during his years of chairmanship.

Mr. Young, as chairman of the membership committee presented his report showing that there were 42 members at the beginning of the year, 11 new members admitted during the year making the present membership 53. Upon motion the report of the committee was received.

Report of the special committee in connection with advertising, appointed at the morning session thereupon made their report and outlined a plan of joint advertising in different states. The plan carries with it an expenditure of $12.50 per office in a moderate size city. Mr. Zimmerman suggested that this work be done in conjunction with the membership committee as it covers not only the subject of advertising but membership as well. This led to a long discussion as to the advisability of adopting an open door policy in taking in new members. Mr. Young and several others favored this plan. Thereupon it was voted that all licensed lenders in the state who are not under charges nor suspected of illegal practices be admitted to membership by majority of vote. Thereupon it was also voted that in issuing future certificates, the secretary obtain the consent in writing of the new member to return to the association the certificate upon his conviction of a violation of the law; and return of the certificate be entered into the application blanks to be signed by all future applying licensees.

Thereupon Mr. Zimmerman on behalf of the advertising plan obtained consent of a number of members present representing different cities who would act as Chairmen in their respective municipalities for the purpose of putting the advertising plan in execution, Mr. Zimmerman to communicate details directly with these committee chairmen.

The applications of the Commonwealth Loan Co. of W. Hoboken, and the Franklin Loan Co. of Newark, were read and upon motion were admitted to membership with the association.

During the afternoon session the following papers were read which were classed by the association as being the best papers ever presented to a session. They were all well prepared, snappy and to the point: "Good Advertising and Ways of Using It" by Robert S. Kreps, Jersey City; "What a Manager Requires as a Look-up on a Loan" by Fred C. Blatt, Elizabeth; "The Impression to Make on a Borrower When Making a Loan"; "Can Detail Go Too Far?" by Donald H. Cameron, Newark; "Ways and Means of Locating a Hard Skip" by Edward H. Lambert, Camden; "Ways and Means of Curing the Slow Account" by Taylor C. Warden, Atlantic City; "What Progress will Loan Companies Make in the Next Five Years?" by David Armm, Paterson; "Past, Present and Future of Industrial Lending" by John W. Whitstone, Newark.

The New Jersey Association upon motion by Mr. Hansche of Newark adopted a code of ethics as adopted, by the American Industrial Lenders Association at Baltimore, Maryland, September 26, 1924.

The association received telegrams of felicitations and good wishes from the Kiwanis Club of Newark, welcoming the convention to the city and a telegram from the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association at session in Norfolk, Virginia. These telegrams were very much appreciated by the members and the secretary was ordered to acknowledge and extend thanks for the greetings.

The Executive Committee was then empowered by the members to draft a seal or monogram to represent the association to be used in connection with stationery and advertising matters used by the membership, and the stamps or cuts to be sold to the members at cost.

At this point the Executive Committee returned and announced that they had elected the officers: P. L. Alberse, Chairman; Vice-Chairman, S. K. Sturr; Secretary, William P. Hansche; Treasurer, J. V. Long. Past State Chairman J. W. Whitstone, declared the officers elected and called for a confirmative vote on the part of the members present, thereupon the action of the Executive Committee was confirmed.

Installation ceremonies were conducted by Mr. Whitstone, assisted by Messrs. Young and Badger.

Chairman Alberse upon taking the chair thanked the membership for the honor conferred upon him and discussed the open door policy and its meaning in connection with association work, and thereupon appointed the following committee chairmen: Executive Committee, A. J. Simonson; Legislative, C. H. Watts; Membership, William Young; Entertainment, J. C. Van Horn; Publicity, A. G. Zimmerman.

The annual banquet, entertainment and dance was held in the grand ball room of the Robert Treat Hotel at 7:30 P. M. and it was enjoyed by members, friends, guests of which there were about three hundred present. Among those at the speakers' table were the numerous city officials and Mr. Ross Nichols of the Newark Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Lafayette Temple of Baltimore, Md., Mr. Wm. David of the Newark Provident Loan Assn., Ex-Chairman John W. Whitstone and Chairman P. L. Alberse.

The spacious and attractive ball room was decorated and a most excellent program of entertainment was furnished by Brown's Novelty Orchestra of New York City and Charles R. Gallese, Tenor. Dancing continued until 1 P. M., when everyone who attended was satisfied the affair was the largest and most successful ever held by the New Jersey Association.

W. P. Hansche,
Secretary.

NOTICE

If your office has not yet received its 1925 membership certificate there must be a reason and that most likely is due to the fact that some members have neglected to pay their dues which were payable February 1st. Fortunately our records do not show many members delinquent in this respect but we hope within the next month all members dues will be paid to date. May I have your coöperation, please?

Geo. W. Kehr,
National Secretary.

COMING EVENTS

If we can get the State Association Secretaries to coöperate to the extent of sending in to the National Secretary, exact details giving the time and place of their prospective meetings, it is our purpose to publish with each issue of the NEWS, a calendar or schedule of prospective events. The purpose of the schedule is to enable members in different states to attend as many of these events as possible and to give them advance notice. It is also hoped by having a central bureau of information, to avoid conflict of dates of the State Association meetings. In other words, it would be our aim to prevent State Associations holding their meetings on the same date or so near each other that a person desiring to attend the different meetings will have sufficient time to cover the distance that separates one state from another. All State Secretaries should see that the National Secretary is advised on or before the first of each month to insure publication of any information they may wish included in the next issue of the NEWS.

According to our information the annual meeting of the Indiana Association will be held in Indianapolis, Lincoln Hotel, May 20th and 21st. Other meetings will probably occur in the other states but we have no exact knowledge of the time and place. One important event which we do know about is that the next National Convention will be held in Providence, September 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th —headquarters at the Providence Biltmore Hotel. Apropos R. F. Hartz writes:

"It has been suggested by Mr. Watts that an exchange of information between State Secretaries be made in order that the dates of annual conventions would not conflict with each other.

"It appeals to me that the LENDERS NEWS could carry in a small block from month to month this information. The various states could notify you when their next meeting would be held and these could be classed in states, cities and dates, requiring a very small space and the information should be valuable to the loan men who might arrange to be in various locations at the dates when conventions were held."

Other events scheduled are:

MARYLAND.—Annual dinner and dance of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association, Hotel Emerson, Tuesday, May 12th, at 7 o'clock.

MICHIGAN.—Meeting of the Michigan Industrial Lenders Association, Kalamazoo, Thursday, October 15th.

INDIANA.—Semi-annual Convention of Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, November 18th.

OHIO

Under date of April 11th, Col. D. H. Pond, newly elected chairman, sent out the following bulletin relative to Judge Dyer's resignation as chairman of the Ohio Loan Association, which many will read with surprise and regret:

"Your Executive Committee met at Columbus, Ohio, April 9, 1925, at which time Judge J. H. Dyer, who has for many years been our chairman, tendered his resignation, effective at once.

"Setting forth and explaining to the committee that the demands upon his time, occasioned by the rapid growth of the loan companies with which he is actively connected, together with his other business associations and professional duties, had become so extensive that he felt it impossible for him to further devote to the Association the time and attention required by the many and various duties devolving upon him as its chairman.

"Col. D. H. Pond, Vice-Chairman of the Association, was thereupon called to the chair to preside, and the resolution of J. H. Dyer was made the immediate order of business, and after full discussion of Mr. Dyer's request, together with a thoughtful consideration of the reasons therefor, the Executive Committee unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Be it Resolved by the Executive Committee of the Ohio Loan Association that the resignation of J. H. Dyer, as Chairman of said Association, be regretfully accepted, and that we here express to him on behalf of said Association our sincere and deep appreciation for the many accomplishments achieved by him through the faithful, capable and untiring efforts which he has put forth for and on behalf of our Association during the years of his administration, not only for the Ohio Loan Association, but as well for the small loan business throughout the United States, and further that we as individuals express to him our gratitude for the many courtesies which he has extended to us both as individuals and members of the Executive Committee.

"I accept the duties of Chairman of the Ohio Loan Association believing I will have your support on all matters for our mutual benefit. All who know of J. H. Dyer's contribution to the elevation of the small loan business will heartily second the resolution adopted by the Executive Committee of the Ohio Loan Association,"

OUR LEGISLATORS

In securing the passage of the "loan shark" bill, so called, State Senator W. S. Wilkin of this district, and Hon. Harry A. Weiss of Ohio County, have rendered a very great public service.

The bill has for its purpose the limitation of the rates to be secured or collected for temporary loans made by chattel mortgage concerns, and by other money lenders, and also the establishment of institutions that facilitate credit to small borrowers. The bill is framed upon lines that have been adopted in other states and have been found to be practical and helpful.

It is not to be assumed that no members of the Legislature have been active in helping to secure the passage of this law other than Messrs. Wilkin and Weiss. The bill, however, was introduced into the Legislature and fathered by these two members, and has become to be known as the Wilkin-Weiss bill, largely because of the intelligent, active, and persistent advocacy of the bill by these two gentlemen.

Mr. Weiss is one of the older members of the Legislature. He began his service in the House of Delegates from Ohio County in 1911, and has been almost continuously in the Legislature ever since. A working man himself, he is familiar with the problems of working people, and he has given intelligent and earnest consideration to legislative questions. Mr. Weiss stands to-day one of the most influential members of the House of Delegates, an evidence of the wisdom of returning good men to the Legislature continuously.

Senator Wilkin is serving his first term, but has already taken an active, one might say, a leading part, in the deliberations of the Upper House. Strong intellectually, quick, clear in debate, he is proving himself a valuable member.—The Wheeling Intelligencer, April 3, 1925.

IT'S EVERYBODY'S JOB

The one-man business is always a small business. As long as it remains a one-man proposition it is bound to be a small concern.

The American Industrial Lenders Association owes its growth and influence to the fact that it has had the wholehearted support of its members in its conduct. It is not a one-man concern and never was.

The job of presenting to the public the claims of industrial lending for their approval and support of it as a useful institution is not a one-man job. It's too big an undertaking for that, no matter how big the man who would undertake it. That's why I want the help of each and every State Chairman of Publicity in putting over each month a message which will react to the good of every legitimate lender in the nation.

All I ask is the coöperation of the State Chairman in this. The publicity articles will be prepared and written, and will be sent in quantities desired by the several chairmen, to be distributed by them for publication in the newspapers of their respective territories.

We want to blanket the country with material that will give the public a right understanding of industrial lending, and we can do it with the aid of the local contacts that the State Chairmen have.

THREE THOUSAND DOLLARS IN PRIZES FOR FINANCIAL RESEARCH

An unusual opportunity for research and writing in the financial and legal fields is represented in an award of prizes to be made in the autumn by a committee under the chairmanship of Ralph E. Heilman. Professor Heilman is Dean of the School of Commerce of Northwestern University, Chicago. The leading prize amounts to $2,500. Secondary prizes are offered for monographs amounting respectively to $300 and $200. The committee of award is enabled to give these prizes through a donation made by the Chicago Trust Company.

An extensive list of topics for research is published. This includes a number of questions relating to trust company banking. An example is "The Use of Insurance and Trusteeship in the Development and Conservation of Family Estates." Various other subjects in the field of general finance are included, such for instance as "The Reorganization of Jeopardized Business Concerns." The award of smaller prizes for monographs under this offer a year ago resulted in the publication by the A. W. Shaw Company of two business handbooks in the field of investment banking that have attained wide circulation.

The committee of award have adopted a liberal policy in respect to subjects that may be used for essays. They wish to encourage research not only by academic students of finance and law, but also by attorneys and by men and women engaged in practical business and financial pursuits. An announcement of the prizes will be mailed on request sent to the secretary of the committee of award, Professor Leverett S. Lyon, Dean of the School of Commerce and Finance, Washington University, St. Louis, Missouri.

USURY AND USURY LAWS

By Franklin Winton Ryan. Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston and New York, 1924.

An instructor in banking in the Harvard Business School wins a Hart Schaffner & Marx prize for an essay in economics, and Houghton Mifflin Company add it to the long list of Hart Schaffner & Marx monographs. The author has made a thorough study and given us a readable summary of American legislation on usury. He believes that "the typical state usury law...... should be repealed." He would protect small borrowers by the Uniform Small-Loan Law.—Nation's Business, Feb., 1925.

WHAT DO YOU DO—

—when one of your employees is in urgent need of financial assistance to meet some unforeseen emergency?

It may be for railroad fare to go to the death-bed of a member of the family or for any one of a dozen good reasons.

It would probably be less embarrassing to the individual in need and more satisfactory to you to have the transaction handled by an organization formed to meet that very need.

Especially when you know the transaction will be handled by men of high standing in their communities and under the supervision of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Illinois.

When employees or friends in need of financial assistance seek your help, send them to us. It will give you an opportunity to learn of the high plane on which the industrial loan business is conducted. We loan any amount up to $300.

For list of members refer to Subdivision 55, page 695, of your Chicago Ass'n of Commerce Blue Book.

WHEN YOU NEED MONEY—

—you instinctively turn to your bank for assistance. You appreciate their help and are thankful that banking institutions exist.

Under conditions prescribed by state and national laws your bank is pleased to serve you.

But what about the individual with a family who is suddenly confronted with the need for money but has no banking credit? It may be only $50, but the need is urgent. His banker in such emergencies is one of the members of this Association.

The entire transaction is handled in the same manner as the loan made by your bank. The business is conducted by men of high standing in their communities and under the supervision of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Illinois.

Direct employees seeking your help, or the help of their immediate superiors, to the members of this Association.

MAINE

The April business meeting of the Maine Association was held at 6:30 p. m. on the 6th of April, at the Columbia Hotel, at Portland. After the banquet the charming wife of our genial chairman, Mrs. Wesley M. Snow, after a few very fitting remarks, said that she wished to present to the baby Association "a rattle," and then presented the chairman with a beautiful gavel, made from a chair taken from the Longfellow Memorial Building, and one used by the immortal poet. A rising vote of thanks was given Mrs. Snow for her very pleasing remarks and most useful and historic present.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Snow.

Reading of the minutes of the last meeting.

The secretary called the roll and the following members were present: Mr. Fitzgibbons of the "Personal Finance Co." of Portland; Mr. Snow, Chairman of the Maine Association; Mr. Sulkowitch, Treasurer of Maine Association; Mr. Bernstien of Bangor, of the "Eastern Loan Co."; Mr. Johnson of Lewiston, of the "Dirigo Loan Co."

We also had with us Mr. G. R. Rich, Chairman of the Rhode Island Association, and Harry Channel, Esq., of Port- and.

Mr. Edward J. Lennon and Mr. An- lrew C. Sager of Portland, and Mr. Ed- ward Miller of Auburn were elected nember of the Association.

Report of the Treasurer showed $42.13 on hand.

Moved by Mr. Fitzgibbons and sec- nded by Mr. Bernstein that each mem- er be assessed to pay for services of Attorney Fisher at the State Legisla- ure.

It was voted that the Personal Finance o. be eliminated from paying any part f the assessment, owing to the valuable ersonal work carried on by said Com- any at the State Legislature.

Chairman Snow appointed the follow- g members to act as Publicity Com- ittee: Mr. Fitzgibbons, Chairman, Mr. ulkowitch and Mr. Joseph Bernstein. his Committee is to assist Mr. Arthur Vick and the National Association.

Letter was read by Secretary from Mr. Vickstrom, Secretary of the Rhode Is- nd Association, in regard to the Na- onal Convention, and inquiring if Maine ould be willing to take an active part the program and to help defray part f the expenses.

The question was talked over by all resent, and there being only about one- ird of the members present the senti- ent was that those present did not feel ke voting on such an important matter. n motion of Mr. Bernstein and second- l by Mr. Fitzgibbons it was voted to y the matter on the table until the xt meeting.

A very cordial invitation was given e members by Mr. Bernstein to hold e next meeting at Bangor. Owing to e fact that Mr. Bernstein is the only ember from Bangor and that its being 0 miles away the invitation was not cepted—but the date and place of the xt meeting was left with the Chairman d Secretary to decide.

Secretary Crosby was elected as Dele- te to the National Convention and Mr. as. Bernstein of Bangor was elected Alternate.

Mr. Fitzgibbons, Mgr. of the Personal nance Co. of Portland, and the young- t member of the Maine Association ade some very interesting remarks. e Maine Association is very fortunate having Mr. Fitzgibbons as a member, his talks are always instructive, and can always be counted on when there anything BIG to be put over.

Mr. Rich, Chairman of the R. I. Asso- tion gave us a very interesting talk plaining what Rhode Island is plan- g to put over at the National Con- ntion. His talk was clear and concise d I think Mr. Rich, upon his returning his home and State, will eventually d Maine willing to coöperate.

Harry Channell, Esq., one of the lead- Attorneys of Portland, gave the mbers a fine talk in regard to the esent workings of the Uniform Loan t. A rising vote of thanks was given Mr. Channell and Mr. Rich.

MICHIGAN

The semi-annual meeting of the Michigan Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Durant Hotel in Flint on Thursday, April 16.

Thirty-one members and four non-members were in attendance when the Chairman, Harry Firth of Kalamazoo, called the meeting to order. Several visitors from various states were also in attendance, among whom were Mr. Ray Reynolds of Indianapolis, Mr. Williams of Philadelphia, Mr. C. G. Liggett of Dayton, Mr. Clyde Woodley of Toledo, Mr. Ralph Clinch of the State Banking Department, Mr. B. E. Henderson of Chicago, and Mr. James A. MacBeth of Chicago, and Dr. C. G. Mueller of Philadelphia, who arrived just in time for the banquet in the evening.

The meeting was given to the regular routine of business, reports of officers and committees and general discussion. Mr. Liggett read a very interesting letter on coöperation with credit exchanges, which follows this account. Mr. Bentland of Detroit was selected as delegate to the national convention and Mr. Hanes of Lansing as alternate.

Announcement was made during the meeting that the Uniform Bill which had caused a great fight in the House of Representatives, the opposition to which was led by a Detroit representative, using as an excuse for his opposition that someone had attempted to bribe him to support the bill, had passed with the rate ammended to 3%. The following day, however, the bill was returned to the senate which refused to concur, and the bill was again returned to the House where the amendment was withdrawn and the bill passed on Friday, April 17, at a vote of 59 to 14. The Uniform Bill has now received the Governor's signature. Adjournment of the meeting was made and the members together with their wives assembled in the main dining room of the Durant for the banquet.

Mr. Henderson of Chicago acted as toastmaster and first introduced Mr. C. W. Otto, manager of the Flint Chamber of Commerce. In response to his call, Mr. Otto said, "I am glad to welcome you to Flint. In my job I am rather an official welcomer, but I am personally glad you are here. If one never gets anything else out of a convention or meeting, one surely acquires a new friend or two. If you do not, you are missing a bet." The speaker following Mr. Otto was Mr. Ernest J. Potter, assistant cashier of the Citizens Commercial and Savings Bank of Flint, who said, "You lenders are a necessary part and a beneficial one of any city's business. You take care of a class of business of which we bankers cannot. The old type of lender has gone. In his place have come yourselves, who realize that success is built on a solid foundation of service. We are glad to coöperate with you." Mr. John Ryan of Detroit sketched the history of the loan business and the legislation passed to regulate it in this and other states. Miss Mary Brumfield of Royal Oak, Mr. Ralph Clench of the State Banking Department, Norman Buckner of Pontiac, and Dr. Mueller of Philadelphia also acknowledged calls from the toastmaster. The balance of the evening was given to dancing.

The entertainment committee consisting of Mr. Norman Buckner who, together with his two brothers, Ira and Seymour of Flint, were responsible for the fine entertainment. They deserve the congratulation and thanks of everyone present for the finest meeting since the organization of the Michigan Association.

The next meeting will be held in Kalamazoo on Thursday, October 15.

April 15, 1925.

Mr. C. G. Liggett,
402 Commercial Bldg.,
Dayton, Ohio.

My Good Friend Mr. Liggett:

Many communications have reached me concerning endeavors of Loan Group Associations and Bureaus. In calling to your mind the Dayton Industrial Lenders Association, we cannot believe the Industrial Lending Field has had a thorough opportunity to learn of a tried and successfully operated Association. Therefore, we take great pleasure in broadcasting through an earnest worker and loyal friend, the many advantages of a working group expressing National sentiment and embodying local problems that are common in other lending fields.

Much has been said of the Loan Exchange Bureau operated by Loan Managers exchanging their information with one another in friendly and unbiased spirit. Frankly I am not in accord with this movement because I am a firm believer in Credit Bureaus wherein loan companies participate with other professions and mercantile activity. Why? You may ask, and are well aware that I am a Bureau worker, a Bureau advocate and follower. But, a Bureau in harmony with a broad business, covering the entire field of credit uses, from the dairyman, who in modern tongue, gives you your start, and the director of solemn ceremonies, who puts you away when your life work is done. In line with the thought of Bureau activity let us first be thoroughly familiar with loan ethics, then see how closely the Great Institution of National Association of Credit men dovetail the operation of the independent loan exchange Bureau, offering the many benefits and advantages never before available to Industrial Lenders.

Nearly a year ago the Dayton Industrial Lenders Association came into its own through the effort of the coöperating credit bureau and after the splendid work of the local managers, whose spirit is manifest in my communication to you. It would be well for other cities to taste of this, the civic pride and wonderful capacity for community service as have our members, as they are precedented only by the splendid work of the National Industrial Lenders who have opened the way for the earned advancement of this now recognized profession.

Our association is built around INSURANCE, the very fundamental protection so essential to all business. For the benefit of your constituents, let us take it in points.

1. Why Insurance:

Because insurance is organization for common good, the mustering of dormant forces long laying in wait for the wide awake community to put to play. Therefore, an Industrial Lending Association coöperating with your National and Local Credit Association.

2. How Insurance:

How muster these unforeseen forces to good and beneficient causes? By every local Industrial Loan Company soliciting its Local and National Bureau for assistance in better solving its credit insurance problems or write the Secretary of the Dayton Industrial Lenders Association for an outline of ways and plans or methods now employed here. The Dayton Industrial Lenders Association have established themselves by adopting a constitution and by-laws regulating its field and power through the employment of ideas now embodied in the code of ethics of the National Industrial Lenders Association and Ohio Loan Association.

3. What do we accomplish by adopting this form of Credit Insurance?

That depends largely upon the interest displayed in your group, and how well you believe in what your National and State organizations of Loan and Credit Men tell you. A few of the accomplishments of the Dayton Association have been:

A. Prevention of the doubling up of loans with one company and another. To do this we have established a loan file containing the accounts of every member of the Association which includes all of the Industrial Lenders of this city. These records have been successfully coded and arranged so as to prevent any suspicion of uses other than embodied in our agreement between the Local Credit Bureau and ourselves. Each member reports to the Bureau daily its new accounts and other Ledger experiences, changes of addresses, suits, replevins, etc.

B. Regulation of auctioneers activity. A bit of local friendly legislation regulating payments of due balances to interested merchants whose accounts have been subject to sale.

C. Fraternalism. A great progressive movement for mankind and it is not easy to pass this off as emotional bunk, because the very heart of our activity is built around a spirit that manifestly is a great characteristic in the success of this undertaking. We are all brothers under the skin and have need of friendliness and fraternalism in large quantities.

D. Community Worth. We conduct our meeting according to parliamentary procedure, with a President who is also a Chairman of the Board of Directors. A Secretary and Treasurer who in this instance of office is a representative of the Credit Bureau: several committees may be waiting upon the many important needs of our city relative to loan activities. Therefore, we are an institution of civic good and betterment setting aside personal interest for the common good. Through our fidelity to our city we have earned an honored place in the lives of our people, especially through the high standards of business, have built ourselves to a major recognized profession among our associates and friends.

E. That we are a working expression of the code of ethics following harmoniously, suggested plans and adopting to our needs such as the experiences of our members, Credit Bureau, Retail Credit Men's National Association and State, National Associations of Industrial Lenders.

4. Limitations:

There are none.

As Bureau Worker and Secretary of the Lenders Association, not paid agitator or organizer, I feel free to recommend to you with heartiest indorsement this movement as outlined in the summary of the Dayton Industrial Lenders activities; with sincere hope it may serve as a means of more firmly cementing together the bond of friendship and goodwill the National Associations of Credit Men and Industrial Lenders, and for the good of this great profession, I am

Yours respectfully,
Joseph D. Burwell, Secretary.

There being no further business, Mr. Pomfret made motion to adjourn, which was seconded by Mr. Neal, and carried.

"SALARY BROKERS"

The Supreme Court of Tennessee holds that so-called "salary brokers," engaged in the business of buying or acquiring by assignment claims of laborers for wages, are not dealers in securities, but are loan agents, and are required to pay the privilege tax fixed by law on loan agents.

The opinion was one of several handed down Saturday. The case under review was an appeal of a Nashville money-lending concern from a decree of the Davidson County chancellor.

The supreme court held further that the method of doing business by the "salary brokers" is such as to merely amount to the lending of money at excessive rates of interest, ranging from 100 to 200 per cent.

The laws of Tennessee forbid usury. They should prevent it, but they do not. Mr. Noah Webster was a lawyer, but his fame rests on his ability as a philologist and lexicographer. Here is his definition of the word "usury."

"Interest on money beyond the current rate of interest; practice of lending money at exorbitant interest."

The legal rate of interest in Tennessee is six per cent. The supreme court says these "salary brokers" lend money at excessive rates, ranging from 100 to 200 per cent.

That is usury, a violation of the law. The state fixes a privilege tax on loan agents, but that tax doesn't license them to practice usury. Yet the supreme court says some of them, at least, are doing that.

Federal and state court records in Memphis will testify to what loan sharks are doing to those caught in their net. They are grinding them to death. They are forcing them out of jobs, reducing them to destitution and driving them into bankruptcy.

Lawsuits do not originate in the supreme court. Its province is to pass on cases brought before it on appeal from verdicts in the lower courts. It is the final adjudicator.

However, the supreme court, in passing on another point of law, saw fit to declare itself as to these "salary brokers." The declaration is clear that they are operating in violation of the law.

Any individual or combination of individuals doing business in violation of the law should be put out of business. No man who preys upon the unfortunate has any place in the business or social life of a community.—The Commercial Appeal, Memphis, Tenn., Mar. 3, 1925.

"PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE OF INDUSTRIAL LENDING"

By J. W. Whitstone, of Newark, N. J.

"Being a senior member of the Association I will try to relate briefly my version of the Past, Present and Future of Industrial Lending."

Since we all handle money let us bear in mind "it's a commodity used by the sanction of law and custom as the medium of exchange." Lending on Chattels was mentioned by Confucius 4,000 years before Christ only in those days the consideration was not money but barter, then all the way down to the Elizabethian period when lenders were allowed 10% monthly in most of the world until 1914 New Jersey passed the first Statute to give what they thought was a fair return to the lender and not make it too easy for the borrower, for when the interest rate is very low then we are confronted with quantity and not quality borrowers.

The personnel of Industrial Lending was greatly enhanced by Colonel Clarence Hodson entering the field in 1915 and we must give credit to him for starting the first State association right here in Newark the early part of 1915 and I can distinctly recall the immortal words of Doctor Mueller at that first meeting when he said, "Boys, you do not realize what a big baby was born here today," and at this writing Doctor Mueller stands in the front ranks with his efficient organization doing their utmost dignity to the business from every angle.

Quite a number of the old timers who took out a license under the "Eagan Act" felt, well our worry is all over, no more strike bills at Trenton, no slows to chase as the borrowers will fear the law we are operating under and be prompt and under no circumstances would they try to skip, etc., but it came to pass that it did not change the custom of borrowers much and the gang who go down to Trenton started in 1917 to introduce bills that did not give us pleasant dreams but, thanks to our having an able monitor who has guided us safely over the rocks thus far and that man is none other than Charles H. Watts.

Our present aim should be to induce the other licensed lenders to join the "Exchange" regardless of State membership in the Association for it would not take long for them to realize the benefit accrued by efficient coöperation.

And, as to our future, it lays entirely with ourselves for at no time in the past has our business been so highly regarded as at present and the day is not far distant when all industrial lenders will not only be doing business on the level in upholding the spirit and letter of the law, but we will also conduct our business upon the street level as the National Banks and Trust companies are functioning today.

SUPREME COURT HOLDS "SALARY BROKERS" MUST PAY LOAN AGENTS PRIVILEGE TAX

In the case of the State vs. Tennessee Finance Co. et al. from Davidson County, the Supreme Court held that "salary brokers," engaged in the business of buying or acquiring by assignment claims of laborers for wages, are not dealers in securities within the meaning of the general revenue law, but are loan agents, and that they are required to pay the privilege tax fixed by law upon loan agents, which is greater than that imposed upon security dealers. In this case the state was awarded a decree for the privilege tax for the years 1918 to 1921 inclusive, and it was held that the defendants were not entitled to any credit for the amounts they had paid for the privilege tax on security dealers.

The court held that the method of doing business by the salary brokers is such as to merely amount to the lending of money for excessive rates of interest, ranging from 100 per cent to 250 per cent. An opinion for publication was filed in this case by Justice Chambliss.—The Nashville Tennessean, Nashville, Tenn., March 2, 1925.

INFORMATION SERVICE

Salaried workers in the manufacturing industries of the United States have suffered a net decline of more than $75,000,000 in their pay since the peak prices of 1919, according to a bulletin issued today by the American Industrial Lenders' Association.

In 1919 the Nation was paying total salaries of $2,880,868,000. In 1921 this total had fallen to $2,563,103,000. In 1923 there was a rally by which the total rose to $2,805,450,000. These figures are those of the United States Bureau of Census.

This net loss in salaried income, says the bulletin, emphasizes the necessity for an adequate nation-wide system of providing credit for the great number of the population to whom bank credits are not available, among whom are the majority of salaried persons.

This need has been recognized by about a score of the states which have in effect laws fostering an equitable system of industrial lending, but elsewhere the small borrower is left unprotected by law from the exactions of unconscionable lenders.

WHAT A MANAGER REQUIRES AS A LOOK UP ON A LOAN

Fred C. Blatt

Manager, Community Finance Service, Inc., Elizabeth, N. J.

I have been requested to write an article on what a Manager requires as a look up on a Loan. This subject could perhaps be elaborated on in the form of a book, but, I assure you my volume will only be a small pamphlet. As perhaps many of you gentlemen here know, the reader was for a number of years connected with, and counseled by, our old friend Al Simonson. I can recall after performing a hard days work on the outside, investigating loans, and later checking up the details both pro and con, Al would casually remark, "Is this a good looker, Freddie," so you see after all, this is one very strong detail of a look up, especially with Al.

Of course, the first requirement is a perfect application, with correct spelling of name, direct addresses, amount requested, etc. The verification, of the present address should be obtained through a corner store, or neighbor; the length of time he resided there and if possible, the appraiser should go to the previous address and spend time there, as it is surprising in many cases what valuable information your man can pick up from the old neighborhood.

Receipts are an important factor. Insist on furniture receipts, rent, insurance or building and loan books. Some kind of a receipt, for, if the applicant cannot produce proof of his identification, and his ability to pay others, the outside man cannot appraise correctly the valuation of his applicants security.

Occupation, let us be certain as to the place of employment of the applicant, how long he has been there, this together with the length of time at the last two residences, will tell you a great deal about Mr. Borrower. If children are employed. It is sometimes surprising, to learn of the number of persons employed in our borrowers' homes at the time of making the loan, but later if she goes slow, OH, BOY! the only excuse is the poor husband who has been idle for two weeks, but not a word is said about the employment of the remainder of the family.

Income should perhaps follow occupation, for that is what is going to pay back our money. What is the total income in the family per week or month and the exact pay day.

Coöperation with our fellow credit men is advisable for it creates a feeling of trust, which will be found most helpful at all times. A visit by the appraiser to the installment houses may prove most valuable. Our local exchange bureaus have proven the value of coöperation.

Appearance of the home is a very important factor and should by no means be overlooked. The observing appraiser should be able to paint in your minds eye a clear picture of the neatness and appearance of the home.

You will, I believe agree that the good prompt payers and steady workers have clean and orderly homes. He may be poor financially, but rich in soap and water. As one of our present day writers has said.

"Without cleanliness or character a man is like a footless stocking without a leg. He has nothing, and therefore is nothing. He is a cipher with the rim off."

Last but not least let us all be optimistic and try to find the good in all prospective borrowers, and not be like the pessimist who thinks if something ain't wrong, tain't right.

WHAT THE LOAN OFFICE NEEDS IN THE WAY OF ADVERTISING

By Robert Kreps,

of the Beneficial Loan Society, Jersey City.

Advertising is a great, though almost unknown, force; a force made up of a hundred different elements, each one too intangible to be defined. It is something which properly directed becomes a powerful agency in influencing human customs and manners, whereby a keen-eyed loan man secures for his business the widest possible market for utilizing every form of publicity and method of making an impression upon the public. He also must watch the results and know exactly what his advertising has accomplished and what it is failing to accomplish. He must know something about salesmanship, a great deal about human nature and the best method of appealing to it.

It is a difficult thing to theorize about advertising. No advertising is successful unless we are there to sell them our service.

The advertising of the loan office is the part of its business that the public sees. It should be a picture illustrating the sort of people we are, the kind of service we offer, and the manner in which we do our business. It should be a true picture. When people call to see us, they should expect neither more or less than we can give. Every inquiry should be closely scrutinized for suggestions as to future advertising and reading matter, as the entire inspiration comes from the people who respond to our advertisements. Nothing will show the weak spots of the result of our advertising so quickly as the absence of replies.

We all, more or less, advertise strictly private and confidential loans, and when a person calls at our office to make inquiry regarding the obtaining of the loan, we should show them this privacy which we advertise and make him realize that we live up to our word regarding privacy, and in most cases we are bound to win his confidence and respect.

More advertising has failed through not appreciating the importance of these prospective clients, than through any other source. We must realize that nearly every inquiry that comes into our offices, if handled properly, means the obtaining of a good account.

There are two classes of borrowers—the borrower from necessity and the borrower from improvidence or extravagance.

The first class always feels a sense of gratitude toward the lender for relieving his necessities. Therefore, the first thing our advertising should contain is an appeal to borrowers from necessity. My length of experience has convinced me that the borrowers from necessity practically always repay their loans.

Our advertising must not be directed against the habit of thrift, or tempt people to spend money that should be saved. If we advertise money to lend for frivolous purposes we risk bringing upon ourselves the censor of legislative bodies, bankers and employers.

The third thing I would like to see our advertising cover is to bring before the public the vast amount of good that we do.

Our business is a commercial proposition, which brings us a fair profit. It is also an actual benefit to the 85% to 90% of the entire population who have no banking credit. Our business has a fine purpose and high mission. People will need to borrow money so long as disease, death and unemployment visit them, and I fear that will be for a long time. People will need to borrow money so long as opportunities present themselves which require the possession of ready cash to take advantage of; so long as poor people make that first step to independence—involved in buying a home—loans will be necessary. Every humane man hopes that these opportunities will increase in number, and I firmly believe there is a large proportion of these men in the small loan business.

We expect our advertising to give a true picture of the good that our business does. Our years of experience in this business have brought to all of us at least one big thing—FAITH IN THE HONESTY AND GRATITUDE OF THE PEOPLE WHOM WE SERVE.

The fourth point that our advertising should cover is the dignity and usefulness of the small loan business. We render the wage earner and salaried man the same service that bankers render big business. We do as much good in our field as the bankers do in theirs. We are entitled to as much respect from the community and we should command it.

Now it is up to us to realize all this, when we make our advertisements and to give the public a true picture of the service we render.

Above everything, however, we should not assume that our written advertisements can bring before the public all the good that is being done in the small loan business. It can do much for us in the way of advertising, but we can do more for ourselves. Advertising in newspapers and by folder and form letter is only the beginning of good advertising.

Our entire business should be an advertisement—a constant effort to sell our business not only to borrowers, but to the entire community. I thank you.

WAYS AND MEANS OF CURING SLOW PAY

By T. C. Warden

Manager, Community Finance Service, Inc., Atlantic City, N. J.

Ways and means of overcoming slow pay is, no doubt, a subject which confronts us 365 days in the year. The complete solution is beyond my ability. I will try, however, to refresh your minds on certain things of which you all are, no doubt, aware.

In view of the fact that a number of our accounts are slow pay with others before applying to us and are not economically sound risks, I feel that it is the duty of each one of us to consider the remedy from an economic standpoint. The solution, as I see it, lies not so much in curing but rather in preventing. We must treat the cause rather than the effect. It is up to us to prove again the old rule that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

With this in mind I suggest the following:

First: Determine the actual amount of money that is required by the prospective borrower. Do not rely on the amount he thinks he needs as he will in most cases overestimate.

Second: Arrange the repayment of principal amounts in amounts that can be paid without interferring with the borrowers regular running expenses. And let me say right here that this is not nearly as hard as it sounds; providing you analyze your appraiser's report with paper and pencil, putting down on one side the income and on the other the known expenses.

Third: If the borrower is paid on a certain date of the month, arrange his payments at your office not later than one day after he receives it. If you delay it longer he is likely to use it for other things, with the result that he must then request your account to go over to his next pay day. Before you realize it, the payments will be several months in arrears.

These suggestions are directed more particularly to Balance Outs and former borrowers, as no doubt they are always practiced with the new ones. But I wonder if we inquire minutely enough nto our old ones. Statistics show that hese are the ones which go back and get nto our P. & L.

If these suggestions are followed I believe that the real way of curing slow pay will be found at its inception or ase.

Like the rest of you, I have been faced with the necessity of curing slows after he disease has been contracted.

I find that a type of slow can often e cured by having the borrower call at our office for an interview, and at such ime point out his unfairness to himself nd to the lenders by such abuse of his redit and of our confidence in extending he loan. Very frequently your interiew will develop the fact that he is nder too large a contract. It is impossible for him to pay as, since your contract was made, he may have experienced ckness, irregular employment, or it may be that he is a victim of that which believe we are all guilty of practicing o some extent; namely overloading. In ny event it is then advisable, in fairness o all concerned, to renew his contract on basis of smaller monthly repayments. I believe that another type of slow may be developed into a profitable account by pointing out to him some catastrophe that might happen, and asking him what he would do unless his credit with your office was unimpaired. It might be a good idea to take his very condition at the time the loan was made, and point out that under the present condition we could do nothing for him. In fact, this latter suggestion is the better one if the loan has been made to him at a time of urgent need.

This brings us to a point that I believe cannot be too forcibly emphasized and that point is—determine the necessity of the loan at the time of making because this vital point will often steer both you and the borrower out of an unpleasant and trying relationship. A loan made in excess of the actual amount needed, or made for some unnecessary purpose, proves, in a large percentage of cases, to be one of the kind now under discussion.

Assuming, now, that your office has not overloaded the borrower, and that there is no reason why he should not pay, let me caution you against allowing your personnel to develop a good account into a slow one. To avoid a condition of this kind the following will prove helpful.

First: When an account comes in two days late call attention to it being delinquent. Do not assume the attitude that it is perfectly all right to pay on the 12th when it was due on the 10th, but rather that it was the borrowers duty to notify you of his inability to pay promptly.

Second: Requests for an extension should be given graciously but not as a matter of course. I do not mean that the borrower is to be humiliated but rather let him know that it is an accommodation to him.

Third: If the account is not paid within the grace limit, or promise for payment is not kept on the date he specified, see that he is notified immediately thereof. Do not wait, thinking that he will come in tomorrow.

The whole matter may be summarized as follows:

Investigate carefully the paying ability of the applicant.

Try to prevent slows rather than cure them.

Do not overload the borrower; make the contract right as to amounts and repayments, then hold rigidly to it.

When extensions are requested ascertain the reasons and when given hold the borrower to his promise.

Impress the borrower with the importance of prompt payments to insure his credit for future use.

In closing let me say again that the cure for slow pay rests not in the effect but rather in the cause—and that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

WAYS AND MEANS OF LOCATING A HARD SKIP

By E. H. Lambert, Camden, N. J.

A skip, as I understand it, is one where we have exhausted all the given information, that is the data we collect when application is left, what we gather on our visit to the home, and the information listed on the large application when taken at the office at the time the loan is closed. Prior to this period our skip is one of ordinary circumstances and we have a fair chance of locating, but after this period we must work diligently and earnestly if we want to accomplish our purpose.

There seem to be very few, if any, cases where you would not have some means of following. Circumstances, of course, in all cases would have to determine what course to pursue, but I will take the subject up and cite a few instances: A visit to the house and you find they have gone. An inquiry from a neighbor or two may not give you the new address, but you may find someone who could tell you who have moved them. A visit here, much better than a phone call, may give you the name of the town, if not the address. This is better than no information at all, and we still have a thread to work on. A letter to this town, addressed to the skip, REGISTERED, but do not request a return receipt. If letter is not returned, no doubt your skip has received it, so now to get the address. Send a tracer after this letter and you will receive on return card the address. GET ON THE JOB RIGHT AWAY WITH A PERSONAL VISIT, or you may find that your skip has made a second jump and then you will have a hard proposition on your hands.

They may have had children going to school; a visit to the school you may find beneficial. Even though the officials could not furnish any details, still a talk to some of the class mates may give you some valuable information. You may be referred to someone else who knows them, probably the children had struck up an acquaintance with another family away from their own neighborhood, and so you may again pick up their trail.

The husband or sons might be War Veterans—World War or Spanish. Get in touch with these bureaus, as I have done on one occasion, and mention that your skip had an account with you and in mailing their last payment they had sent too much money and as the requirements of the Act under which we operate do not permit you to accept this overage, their new address would help you out of your predicament. We must be ever ready to use any kind of ruse to suit the occasion.

If a man follows a particular trade or occupation, in conversing with one whom you believe knows your skip's whereabouts but will not tell, you are a friend quite astonished to find they do not live there any more, for just recently letters you received from him were from this address and you were to let him know just as soon as you had located this new job for him. I had one just the other day when this very stunt brought the address of a brother whom we did not have on our papers. His previous place of employment is often a good place for information, if you could reach the men with whom he worked. He may have mentioned something about a particular town where there was plenty of work or where an opportunity had opened up for him.

If in a small suburban town, the Station Master may have known them and as his sale of tickets for distant points is limited, he may recall just where they have gone, or if their goods were shipped he could probably help you from his records. In most suburban sections the post office and general store is run by the proprietor and he may say "I can't give you any information" but if you could persuade him or tarry until a customer would make it necessary for him to go behind the retail counter, he would then be free to give you the information, if he has it.

An appointment or a personal visit to the home of the mail carrier in that district has also worked out to perfection. We all know it is unwise to try to force information from anyone, especially where one's position is at stake, but with tact and a little persuasion mountains can be moved.

Any and all information, no matter how trifling, should be tabulated and some day you will thank yourself for keeping it and credit some small bit of information in locating your skip.

I think the hardest of all skips is where they leave the town and change their name, but if you have a fair description of them you still have a chance of proving their identity.

A genuine skip is out to do you and you should bend every effort to get him, and I might say that money spent on locating a skip is well spent for you have taught him a lesson and may save someone else the time and trouble, say nothing of the money it would cost, bring this party back to earth.

If you believe you have located your skip in a distant town and desire to have another officer take care of the account, for you, along with the data you are forwarding you had better send a personal description of both husband and wife, also might add that if your investigator had a mind's eye view of your skip always before him, he would get better results especially if he were working in a strange neighborhood.

When representing yourself as an agent you must act your part. Get the confidence of one of the more modest neighbors and then ask her jokingly who is the "noseiest" woman on the street. The "nosey" woman often can tell you who moved them and how many chairs, etc. they had, even though she does live twenty doors away. Visit the poolrooms, cigar stores and barbers in the vicinity. That is where men gossip. As mentioned before, whatever part you play, be sure to act that part. For instance if your skip was a war veteran and you are looking after his compensation, you must stroll up the street, hands in pockets, with an air of absolute contentment with your lot and the rest of the world, and be in no hurry to get away from the party you are talking to. A Government man has loads of time to spare. Or if you are posing as an insurance agent you hustle up the street, take the porch steps in one leap and ring the bell a second time before the noise of the first jangle has ceased.

After you have got what you feel is the correct information, do not fail to find out in new locality all you can about the people; how long they have been there, was he a carpenter, number of children, etc., all you can about him before making your personal call. In other words, make sure of your man. The mailman generally won't say anything, but the traffic policeman knows all the notorious characters for squares around, and as it is only notorious characters who are dead beats, you can sometimes get good information here.

Again they might have attended some church, were members of a neighborhood club or association, had a hobby of some kind.

Probably a neighbor had seen an insurance agent calling there, or a collector for some installment house. If you can get in touch with the insurance agent you might find that he has another member of the family, or friends, on his books who could give you leads. The installment house would probably have names of references, or their collector could furnish you information. The Public Service Corporation of New Jersey pretty well covers the entire State on gas and electric supply, and they would be in a position to help you. The Chamber of Commerce of which you are a member can be asked to clear the name through the various retail credit bureaus, if you have any idea at all of where your skip might be. Also use your own Bureau of Exchange.

If the skip owned property he probably would place it in an agent's hands to rent or sell, who would have their address for business purposes.

For other means of locating skips, write the National Secretary for a copy of the booklet on this subject.

NATIONAL CONVENTION

I want you to know that I was extremely gratified in my contact with the Rhode Island lenders, concerning their work to make the national convention a success. You will find by the minutes of the special meeting called, that some real things have been accomplished.

I shall make it a point to visit Rhode Island about once a month from this time on and check up the various committees as to their accomplishments. I can safely say that the convention will be a decided success, if the plans now in the making are carried out and I feel sure they will be.

The matter of the business program as well as the selection of the speakers, were not discussed. The former I believe is in your hands and the latter in the hands of Mr. Watts.

On my next trip to Providence, which in all likelihood will be the week of June 18th I expect the various committees, appointed at the last meeting, to have their plans well lined up. This will enable us to work out a very definite program for the entire proceeding.

New committees were appointed at the last meeting, to take care of the various unfinished work that require some real handling.

The matter of finances was gone into very thoroughly and I am glad to say that the arrangement will safeguard against any possibility of failure. Massachusetts and Connecticut Associations were represented and it is now definitely decided that the New England states will act as hosts. The representatives from Massachusetts and Connecticut are entitled to a vote of thanks for their optimism and helpful suggestions as well as going on record as to their willingness to share the financial responsibilities.

You can now look forward to the building up of a program that will be pleasing to you.

Chairman Rich reported plans were now well under way to provide for the comfort, convenience and entertainment of all who would attend National Convention in September. He mentioned the wealth of attractions in these parts both for education and recreation purposes and that our varied program would be a source of pleasure for all.

A. L. Wick gave a clear talk on how to group details for the proper working of plans of National Convention. Stated had called at Biltmore to confirm arrangements made and was promised coöperation by the management to make the convention the best ever.

Committee on busses for Newport trip, Mr. Kennon and Mr. Delaney; committee on badges, Mr. Delaney and Mr. Kefauver; committee on entertainment, Mr. Kennon and Mr. Smith; committee on outing, Newport end of arrangement, Mr. Lewis; committee on souvenirs, Messrs. Moran and Dwight; committee on plans for outing at Rhodes, Messrs. Delaney and Findlay. All these committees to report at next regular meeting, June 18th.

H. J. Desormaux, of the Massachusetts Association, promised us support both financially and actively to boost convention. Will report definitely after their next meeting.

H. G. McMullin heartily approved of our plans and promised the support of the Connecticut Association after their next meeting

A rising vote of thanks was given to these gentlemen for their interest and efforts.

On motion of Mr. Delaney, seconded by Mr. LaGueux, it was voted and passed that each member be assessed $15 to help meet advance convention cost and that same be sent to secretary at once.

Chairman Rich read a letter from Maine Association. They regretted being unable to attend this meeting but assured us they were ready to coöperate, we to advise them by letter.

A letter was also read from our former secretary, J. H. Wickstrom, now of Philadelphia, wishing our association success and regretting not being able to take so active a part in convention work but offering his services during convention days.

Chairman Rich was delegated to acknowledge letters.

Mr. Blank talked on conventions held in Providence and stated his desire to work with the committees. His valuable experience along these lines will greatly help.

Mr. Barrows, of the Journal, gave a splendid talk on group advertising and the effect it had on several of his merchant friends.

E. LaGueux, Secretary.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

New Hampshire may now be listed as having a state association. The success of our undertaking is largely due to Mr. Schroder's sincere and whole-hearted assistance. The meeting was held at his office where for a time the future meetings are scheduled. Without his assistance I can safely say the Association would not have been organized.

Out of six licensees four lenders were represented. The four members who indicated their willingness to organize and become members of the state association are as follows:

American Loan Company, D. J. Cote, Mgr., 999 Elm Street, Manchester; Mutual Loan Company, Sarah F. French, Mgr., 413 Amoskeag Bank Building, Manchester; York Corporation Trust and Loan Company, Mrs. Mary E. Loveland, owner, Room 10 St. Johns Block, Keene; Simeon Sharaf, 98 North Main Street, Concord.

The fifth lender was not present due to a misunderstanding as to the date of meeting. The sixth lender refused to participate This is Mr. L. B. Salls, State Loan Company, 852 Elm Street, Manchester. Mr. Salls is already a member of the national association and will continue his membership. I believe the members of the state association will eventually convince him that he should become associated with the state organization.

The officers elected were as follows:

Mr. D. J. Cote, American Loan Company, chairman; Mrs. Sarah F. French, Mutual Loan Company, Secretary; Simeon Sharaf, independent owner, treasurer.

Mr. A. B. Slawsby, of the Nashua Loan Company, 69 Main Street, Nashua, asked that the chairman, Mr. Cote, call on him with reference to his membership in the organization. I have no doubt but that he will affiliate.

All of the licensees who joined the state association agreed to pay dues of $20 a year, payable $10 each six months in advance Half of this sum is to be used as their membership in the national association. Applications for membership in the national organization have been made out and will be sent to you in due time. This will make an unanimous membership in the national association, of every lender in New Hampshire, though one of them will not affiliate with the state body.

Mrs. French, the secretary, will send you the minutes of the meeting within a short period and in time for publication in the next Lenders News. Mrs. French is very well qualified for the work as secretary as she is acting in the same capacity for a number of lodges.

Mr. Cote, I know, will take a personal interest in the organization and will make an admirable chairman.

The business meeting in the afternoon proved of an advantage to everyone present but the get-together dinner in the evening proved helpful in binding together the friendly spirit that was born at the afternoon meeting.

The keen interest of the lenders here is indicated by Mrs. Loveland, an elderly lady, who left her home at Keene about 5:15 in the morning, due to poor railroad facilities, to enable her to attend the afternoon meeting. She had to remain in Manchester over night in order to attend the dinner. This lady remarked that the day's work was an inspiration to her and she learned many things that will be to her advantage.

I am sure you will hear favorably from these members as time goes on.

Will you be good enough to send each member, except those who already belong to the national association, a copy of the 1924 Year Book as well as a copy of the last issue of the Lenders News? I told them you would be glad to furnish them with these copies if you had them in your files. Arthur L. Wick.

In addition to Mr. Wick's interesting account of the organization of the New Hampshire Association Mrs. Sarah F. French, the newly elected secretary, has contributed the following interesting official account:

"A meeting was called to order at the American Loan Co.'s office Wednesday at 2:00 P. M., at Manchester, N. H., May 20, 1925, by Mr. A. L. Wick and A. J. Schroder, of Philadelphia, for the purpose of forming a State Industrial Lenders Association The following who are connected with the Loan Co's of New Hampshire were present:

"Mrs. Mary E. Loveland, president and manager of The York Corporation Trust & Law Company of Keene, N. H.; Mrs. Bernice H. Slayton, president of The Mutual Loan Company; Mrs. Sarah F. French, bookkeeper and cashier of The Mutual Loan Company; Mr. D. F. Cote, office manager of The American Loan Company; Mr. Simeon Sharaf, of The Sharaf Loan Company of Concord, N. H.

"By vote of those present, Mr. D. F. Cote was elected chairman; Mrs. Sarah F. French, secretary; Mr. Simeon Sharaf, treasurer of the new state association.

'The matter of the by-laws being left until the next meeting to be decided by a committee of three in regard to adopting the same as used in Rhode Island with what changes were necessary for the State of New Hampshire.

"Suggestion was made to hold meetings the 2nd Monday of each month.

"Notices to be sent by the secretary of time and place, also a record of each meeting to be sent to all members and a copy to be sent to the secretary of the National Association.

"After listening to the benefits to be derived from the association by Mr. Wick and Mr. Schroder, the meeting was adjourned at 4:00 P. M. to be followed by a gathering at the Carpenter Hotel where a delightful banquet was served at 6:00 P. M., when more interesting things were heard in regard to the association."

VIRGINIA

Copy of the Fifteenth Annual Report of the Banking Division of the State Corporation Commission of Virginia, has just been received by the National Secretary, in which the following interesting report in regard to Small Loan Companies, is given:

"The uniform small loan law was enacted in Virginia during the 1918 session of the General Assembly and prior to 1922, it provided for an interest rate of five per cent per month on all amounts up to and including fifty dollars, and three and one-half per cent per month on all amounts from fifty to three hundred dollars. In 1922, however, upon the recommendation of the Chief Examiner of Banks the General Assembly amended the law by eliminating the five per cent rate and providing for a single rate of three and one-half per cent on all loans made under the act. This rate is in conformity with that fixed by other states.

"This rate appears high, it is true, especially to those who are not conversant with conditions which pertain to the small loan business, it is, however, many times lower than that charged prior to legal supervision, and is intended to cover not only a reasonable return on the money invested, but also the losses consequent to the accommodation of the clientele such as is served by the small loan licensees.

"Before the enactment of the law providing for the licensing and supervision of those engaged in making small loans, conditions had gone from bad to worse, until interest was charged at rates as high as two, three and four hundred per cent per annum.

"In our opinion the Virginia statute governing the business of small loans is superior to any other law of similar nature, for while it conforms in the main to what is generally known as the "Uniform Small Loan Law," it contains safeguards not embraced in other small loan statutes

"There were thirty-five small loan licensees in this state on December 31, 1924, employing around one hundred and twenty-five people. Of this number thirty-one had operated for the entire year ending on the foregoing date, at which time they had a working capital of $1,836,763.02, with loans ranging from ten to three hundred dollars, averaging $68.00. Interest collected for the year amounted to $655,265.26, from which expenses and losses amounting to $492,217.34 were deducted, leaving a net earning of $163,047.92, or an average of 8.87 per cent on the capital invested.

"The four other licensees who had been operating one for eleven, two for eight and one for two months, respectively, represented an aggregate capital of $138,994.05, with loans averaging $74.00, interest collected amounting to $36,890.89, less expenses and losses $29,725.94, leaving net earnings of $7,164.95 or an average of 5.16 per cent on the capital invested.

"Since the passage of the law placing the small loan operators under the supervision of the Banking Division up to December 31, 1924, fifty had been licensed, and of this number eight were merged with other similar concerns, six had discontinued business and one declared bankrupt.

"The thirty-five licensees were carrying 26,461 accounts, while the total capital invested was $1,975.757.07. The total number of loans made during the year is 34,799."

WEST VIRGINIA

A special meeting of the West Virginia Industrial Lenders Association was held in Charleston, at the Hotel Ruffner, Thursday, May 28, 1925, and was called to order promptly at 9:30 A. M. by Chairman H. L. White, of Wheeling.

Due to the fact that the Uniform Small Loan Act is to become a law in West Virginia July 1st next, it seemed necessary and important at this time to get a constructive idea as to the main points of the law and also to consider the adoption of uniform forms of all papers which will be used under the new law, which it is hoped will meet with the approval of the state banking commissioner.

This association is very much indebted to Dr. C. G. Mueller and C. H. Watts, of Philadelphia, Pa., for the fine points they brought out at this meeting. May we say that no two more abler men could have been found, who could have put their subject across in so constructive a manner.

A very carefully prepared and complete set of papers which could be used under the new law were presented to the association free of charge by R. C. Aufderheide and Ray Reynolds, of Indianapolis. These men spent much of their valuable time in getting these forms up, giving this association the advantage of their long experience in this work. This organization feels more confident and stronger in knowing that when we need help that such men as these are willing to lend us a hand. It is needless to state that these sample forms were unanimously adopted.

A special committee was appointed, composed of C. H. Watts, of Philadelphia, Pa., F. H. Withrow and W. B. Grimes, of Charleston, to meet with the state bank commissioner and assure him that this association stood ready to coöperate with him in any way possible toward uplifting the business and aiding his department.

Summing up, it was declared by all that this was the most interesting and constructive Industrial Lenders meeting ever held in West Virginia, thanks to those who so kindly came so far to help us.

It is gratifying to mention that the attendance mounted up to twenty-two persons, those present being:

Dr. C. G. Mueller, Philadelphia, Pa.; C. H. Watts, Philadelphia, Pa.; Wm. Young, Philadelphia, Pa.; R. C. Aufderheide, Indianapolis, Ind.; Ray Reynolds, Indianapolis, Ind.; H. L. White, Wheeling, W. Va.; V. F. Thompson, Richmond, Va.; N. E. Caldwell, Charleston, W. Va.; V. K. Timberlake, Ideal Money Co., Charleston, W. Va.; F. H. Withrow, Capitol City Loan, Charleston, W. Va.; R. L. Bibby, Peoples Loan Co., Charleston, W. Va.; W. P. Gore, United Loan & Invst., Charleston, W. Va.; W. B. Grimes, West Va. Loan Co., Charleston, W. Va.; Geo. Paritz, Wells Loan & Jewelry Co. Charleston, W. Va.; Lloyd Rice, American Loan Co., Huntington, W. Va.; Glen Meadows, Home Loan Co., Huntington, W. Va.; A. M. Arthur, Union Money Co., Huntington, W. Va.; L. C. Withrow, West Va. Loan Co., Huntington, W. Va.; Sam Wormser, Citizens Loan Co., Huntington, W. Va.; A. H. Knox, Knox Brokerage Co., Parkersburg, W. Va.; H. T. Bates, Economy Finance Co., Wheeling, W. Va.; C. C. Cunningham, Bluefield Invst. Co., Bluefield, W. Va.

We are pleased to report the names of three new members who came forward willingly, and at the same time anxious to help in the fight for the betterment of the business in general in West Virginia:

Sam Wormser, Citizens Loan Co., Huntington, W. Va.; A. H. Knox, Knox Brokerage Co., 410½ Market St., Parkersburg, W. Va.; W. P. Gore, United Loan & Investment Co., Charleston, W. Va.

Another meeting of the W. Va. Lenders Association will be held in Charleston, Thursday, August 6, 1925.

YOU CAN HELP

There is to-day no forward looking, progressive leader in any line of endeavor who is not a firm believer in the value of good will.

Business corporations, great and small; organizations, whether of a business, political or social character; governments, churches, colleges, municipalities, rulers, and individuals, all realize the importance of building up and maintaining the favor of public opinion—which is good will—by consistently informing the public of their activities and purposes.

When the Government of the United States cast its lot with the allied nations in the greatest war in history it recognized the power of publicity as an agency for recruiting the money and man power, as well as maintaining the morale, of the nation, and expended millions of dollars for a department devoted to these purposes.

It is the individual and personal concern of every industrial lender that a structure of good will toward the institution of lending be reared. Much has been done in this direction since the national association embarked upon a campaign of organized publicity, but much remains to be done, and every one can help in the work.

State chairmen can help in this important work by distributing to the newspapers in their territories the articles prepared each month, and by using their best endeavors to have these articles published.

The articles are designed to inform the public as to the purposes and benefits of a supervised industrial lending system, and are of a length which will not make too great a demand upon the space of any newspaper.

Upon receipt of a request I will be glad to send copies of these articles in the quantity desired.

Chairman of Publicity,

MARYLAND.

Tuesday, May the 12th, was Maryland Day at the Southern Exposition in New York City and an address was made by his Excellency Albert C. Ritchie, our governor who ascended the speaker's platform amidst a shower of roses and spoke in his usual eloquent way, making the day a memorable one for Maryland.

The Maryland Industrial Lenders Association also added to the memory of this day by holding their Ninth Annual Meeting, Dinner and Dance at the beautiful Emerson Hotel, where a feed worthy of only Maryland cooking was served to about one hundred and twenty-five hungry Industrial Loan Servants and distinguished friends.

C. Howard Hood, who we are delighted to call Mr. Chairman of the Maryland Association, in an unusually brilliant manner introduced the toastmaster of the evening who was none other than my friend, and everybody's friend Bill Young. Bill carried on in true Maryland style and we are proud of him. Several years ago Bill moved to some little town up Pennsylvania way and thought he could fool us by having some artist or mechanic remove three hairs from his eyebrows to his upper lip, and the funny part of it was everyone present knew it was Bill all the time and thought it was axle grease on his lip.

The first speaker of the evening was not only our lovable friend but is a true friend of every person of this great city which he represents as President of the City Council. The Honorable Howard Bryant, speaking on the "Old and the New," as only our Mr. Bryant can was a rare treat. Mr. Bryant told of actual happenings more than a quarter of a century ago when the old time loan shark flourished in this state, and said it was one of the most pleasant moments of his life when he was called upon in 1918 to lend his effort toward legalizing the small loan business in our state, a business so necessary to this community.

The next speaker of the occasion is also a representative of the people and all good Baltimoreans are exceptionally proud of, Herbert R. O'Conor, our States Attorney. , Mr. O'Conor, like Mr. Bryant, is a true friend of the people he represents and is exceptionally distinguished by being the youngest attorney representing the people of a city the size of Baltimore in all America.

Mr. O'Conor amazed us loan people with his keen knowledge of our business and paid it a high compliment when he said that during his term of office more than seven thousand cases had been sifted through his hands, and not a single complaint affected Industrial Licensed and Bonded Lenders.

Our genial toastmaster next called upon a Mr. Sweeney to make us laugh, and did he do it? Well, the writer expected every minute to see the manager of the hotel walk in and order us out or throw us out. Mr. Sweeney said when he was coming to the hotel by street car a colored gentleman in alighting missed his footing and took a tumble to the street, it was a jingle of glass and he felt something running down his leg, he grabbed his hip and said, "he sure hoped it was blood."

After listening to many good jokes and stories, the floor was cleared and we danced to the beautiful music of Bob Iula's Band. Even real old-timers like our good friends, Doctor Mueller, Virgil Moss, and old man Dobbins, my good friend, Mr. Daudelin of the Baltimore Association of Commerce just couldn't make their feet behave.

Oh, yes! We had punch and about eleven o'clock a very refreshing drink was served. One very stout couple while trying to dance was heard to remark that they did not need any punch as they were being punched enough.

We hope everyone thoroughly enjoyed themselves and will be with us again in November, February and May of each year and when get-together meetings, such as this, will be held along with our regular little monthly confabs where our everyday problems will be thrashed out.

Officers elected to serve for the ensuing year are: Chairman, C. Howard Hood 455 Calvert Bldg.; Secretary, H. T. Mattingly, 322 Equitable Bldg.; Treasurer, J. D. Goldrick, 201 N. Liberty Street.

HOWARD T. MATTINGLY,
Secretary.

INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS

Every once in a while we receive a letter from someone in the loan business, inquiring why they have not received the NEWS regularly, or since a certain date. The answer is that this publication is the property of the A. I. L. A. and is maintained by part of the dues paid by its members, as the expenses come out of the general treasury of the national organization. Being a member of a State Association shows a certain degree of interest in the general movement to improve small loan conditions, but no part of the money paid in dues to the State Associations comes to the national organization as the two bodies are now constituted. In order to contribute your share to the running expenses of the A. I. L. A. and to help finance its publicity and legislative work, it is necessary to become a member of the national organization.

Some states have recognized the value of the INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS to the extent that they pay for subscriptions to be sent to members of their state organizations who are not affiliated with the A. I. L. A. and some have even gone so far as to pay for subscriptions for all lenders regardless of the fact that they may not be members of either state or national bodies.

For educational purposes, the Executive Committee of the A. I. L. A. has always considered that public libraries, educational and public welfare institutions should receive the NEWS without charge, but at no time has it felt that because someone is in the loan business that they should receive the NEWS and other publications gotten out by the A. I. L. A. without helping to pay the cost. So if you are not receiving the NEWS regularly and you are not a member of the A. I. L. A. or paying a dollar a year for it, we hope that this article will make all the explanations necessary.

LEE H. PUMPHREY VISITS THE UNITED STATES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING

Before giving you a short synopsis of my visit for one day at the Thirteenth Annual Meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, I desire to state that I have learned that we, as members of the Maryland branch of that Association, have not in the past assumed our share of the responsibilities of making America prosperous by interesting ourselves in City, State, and National business and political problems, regardless of the fact that we may think they do not interest us directly.

During the war when all business was prosperous, ours was not an exception. This should prove that it is essential for us to be active in any organization that benefits business in general.

Our national conventions are held for the purpose of improving our ideals and to educate the public about our business, our rate, and so forth. At these yearly conventions we do some educational work, but it is a slow process, the opportunity is before us to educate at a faster pace. The big business man is within our reach. At the yearly meetings of the United States Chamber of Commerce, big business is represented from every corner of America. The men who control big business are eager to learn, especially about some other business. It is a diversion for them. At any convention or social affair their minds are more active in grasping a new problem, they leave at home their own business worries and can weigh and consider what we have to teach.

At the Thursday morning session of the National Chamber of Commerce meeting with President Grant presiding, Mr. John Willys, President of Willys Overland Company, Toledo, Ohio, made the first address; his subject on commercial treaties was both interesting and instructive. The motive for an address of this character was to stimulate interest towards increasing our exports, the audience learned through Mr. Willys that there now exists a necessity for a survey of the tariff treaties. He emphasized the fact that machinery is superseding labor, and that tariffs more favorable to American business will encourage mass production which will automatically demand an increase in the use of our natural resources, and also solve the problem of the unemployed.

Mr. John H. Fahey, American member of the Council of the International Chamber of Commerce, delivered the second address. Any listener to this splendid speech would readily agree that Mr. Fahey is thoroughly acquainted with international business problems and is qualified to render valuable advice and assistance for increasing American exports.

Few of us realized until told by the speaker that up until a few years ago, treaties on tariffs were one hundred or more years old their recent changes in principle have improved our foreign trade. Further advancement of this trade might be expected from business groups selecting committees to study such international problems so that the necessary tariff and duty changes be wrought that would permit us to expand and develop the largest national resources in the world.

The speaker could not forecast the international debt problem, his advice was to forget the European past and to accept as a beginning or foundation the Dawes plan.

The last speaker at the morning session, Mr. Elliott H. Goodwin, Honorary Chairman of the National Fire Waste Council, interested his listeners by quoting loss by fire of property and life statistics. To those who were responsible for reducing fire hazards, awards were presented.

The afternoon session of the insurance groups began with a luncheon at the New Williard Hotel, and very interesting talks on insurance were given by prominent representatives.

OHIO

BULLETIN No. 4
Springfield, Ohio,
May 21, 1925.

The Supreme Court of Ohio has decided the case of State v. Mehaffey. The law of the case is as follows:

"Section 6346-1, General Code, does not make it unlawful for a person, firm, partnership, association, or corporation to engage or continue in the business of purchasing, outright, salaries, or wage earnings already earned, without having first obtained a license so to do from the commissioner of securities."

Synopsis of Case.—Action begun in the Municipal Court of Cleveland: affidavit charged that one Jos. J. Mehaffey, agent of American Finance Company, did unlawfully engage in the business of making loans on salaries and wage earning, to wit, of making a loan on salary of one E. L. Kelly, at a charge and rate of interest in excess of eight per cent per annum including all charges, without first having obtained a license to engage in said business and otherwise complying with the provisions of Section 6346-1 to 10 of the General Code of Ohio. The evidence disclosed that defendant required customer to sign application to sell to defendant an undivided interest in account due him from employer for wages already earned and an assignment of such wages. In other words the evidence showed outright sales of wages. Municipal Court found defendant guilty—Court of Appeals reversed Municipal Court.

Condensed Opinion.—Robinson, J. The only question in this case is whether the Pawn Broker's Act, General Code, Section 6337, and following sections, covers and includes the purchase of salaries and wage earnings.

It is argued here by counsel for plaintiff in error, who appears amicus curiæ, that it was the intention of the Legislature to make "purchasing" and "making loans on" separate and independent acts, and that each is dependent upon the phrase "salaries and wage earnings"; that the statute as written does not express its real purpose, and literally interpreted would lead to an absurdity; that the real legislative intent was to require all persons who engage in the business of purchasing salaries and wage earnings to first secure a license under the provisions of the act; that the court in some manner should ascertain that that was the intention of the Legislature, and, having so ascertained, should by the process of interpretation, effectuate the purpose which the Legislature had intended but failed to express.

It is the contention of the defendant in error that the section as punctuated by the Legislature makes it unlawful for any person to engage in the business of purchasing loans on salaries or of making loans on salaries, and that the section does not cover the business of purchasing salaries and wage earnings outright.

It is the contention of the state, through its amicus curiæ counsel, that this court should repunctuate this statute, placing a comma after the word "purchasing," thus making the statute read: "It shall be unlawful for any person . . . to engage . . . in the business . . . of purchasing, or making loans on salaries or wage earnings"; that the intention of the Legislature to so punctuate Section 6436-1 may be gathered from the history of the legislation.

The act as originally enacted is found in 102 Ohio laws, at page 469. As there enacted Section 6436-1 reads: "No person . . . shall engage . . . in the business . . . of purchasing or making loans upon salaries or wage earnings," etc., and was entitled "An act to regulate and license the loaning of money upon chattels or personal property of any kind and of purchasing or making loans upon salaries or wage earnings."

The Legislature next had this subject under consideration in 106 Ohio laws, page 281, where Section 6346-1 was amended. The amendment reads:

"It shall be unlawful for any person . . . to engage . . . in business . . . of purchasing or making loans on salaries or wage earnings"—and is entitled: "An act to amend Sections 6346-1 .. . . providing for the regulation and licensing of the loaning of money, without security upon personal property, and of purchasing or making loans upon salaries or wage earnings."

The section in its present form was enacted in 107 Ohio laws, page 509, as part of the act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a commissioner of securities . . . and to amend Sections . . . 6346," etc., which was passed for the purpose of transferring to such commissioner of securities the duties theretofore vested in the superintendent of banks.

It will thus be seen that the act has carried substantially the same title in its various amendments since its original enactment, and has carried with reference to the purchasing of salaries and wage earnings the exact phraseology and punctuation throughout.

It is also significant that Section 6346-5, as originally enacted (102 O. L., P. 479) provided: "No such person, firm or corporation shall make a loan upon chattels or personal property of any kind whatsoever or purchase, a salary or wage earning of another at a rate of interest or charge in excess of eight per cent per annum upon the principal sum"; that when amended in 106 Ohio Laws, at page 283, it was made to read, "No such licensee or licensees shall make a loan or purchase or furnish guaranty, or security, as hereinbefore provided at a greater total charge, including interest, than three per cent per month"; that the Legislature there dropped out of the section all description of the businesses, the operators of which were required to secure a license as a prerequisite to such operation, and by reference carried into the section the description contained in Section 6346-1, which description, in so far as it affects this case, has been unchanged throughout its history.

Section 6346-5, as originally enacted, would seem to have included the purchaser of a salary or wage earnings at a rate of interest. Whether the Legislature, in the revision of the act, had discovered between 1911 and 1915 that a "rate of interest," as applied to a purchase, was an inapt and inaccurate expression, and inconsistent with Section 6346-1, and therefore, for the purpose of consistency and clarification, eliminated it or whether it was eliminated for some other purpose the legislation does not disclose, but certainly an interpretation of present Section 6346-1 with a view to harmonizing it with repealed Section 6346-5, after the repeal of the inconsistent provision thereof, would be carrying the doctrine requiring the harmonizing of the provisions of inconsistent sections beyond the purpose for which the theory was evolved.

The Legislature having removed the conflict, the court would not be justified in attempting to reconcile a conflict which no longer exists.

The interpretation of the meaning of Section 6346-1 may be aided by the provision of Section 6346-6, which section requires a statement and receipt to be given the borrower or pledger, and requires the writing of the name of the person making the loan or purchase, the name of the assignor, borrower, or pledger, the amount of the loan, the rate or amount of interest charged, the date when the loan is made, and the date when payable, and requires the loaner or purchaser to "give the assignor, borrower, or pledger, a receipt for each payment of principal or interest." It may be further aided by the provisions of Section 6346-7, which is particularly applicable to the assignment of wages or earnings, and provides that "no assignment of any salary, wages or earnings, or any part thereof given to secure a loan shall be valid unless the same shall be in writing," and defines the term "assignment" as follows:

"The term assignment as used in this section shall include every instrument purporting to transfer an interest in or any authority to collect the wages, salary or earnings of such person. Any assignment of wages, salary or earnings, made in accordance with the provisions of this section shall bind the wages, salary or earnings earned or to be earned by the assignor until the loan secured by such assignment and interest thereon is fully paid."

The relations created by the transactions proven in this case are not those of debtors and creditor, but are those of sellers and buyer, to which the question of interest has no relation. The subject of discounts is not covered or approached in Section 6346-1 or succeeding sections, but the act throughout is replete with provisions as to loans and time of payment of principal and interest, all of which are unrelated to the subject of purchase and sale, or debtor and creditor.

If the practices of the defendant and others similarly engaged require the supervision of the commissioner of securities, that is a subject for the consideration of the legislative branch of this state and not for the courts.

This is a penal statute, and the mere fact that it is susceptible of more than one interpretation does not justify a court in so interpreting it as to bring within its scope transactions not clearly included therein.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals will be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Dayton, Ohio, May 24, 1925.

We are a bit happy down here in Dayton to-day and all days, since we inaugurated and proved the success of the Dayton Industrial Lenders Association. It is hardly possible that you have had the privilege of hearing about us, although we term ourselves as the working expression of the Ohio Loan and American Industrial Lenders Association; because we actually put to play the code of ethics you two Associations have so effectively launched into the Loan Field. You know we like to take the conceit out of our elders whenever we have that good opportunity by actually proving to them that what they say can be done and is done by our Dayton Association.

After so much of what we think of ourselves, we are really interested in knowing, if there are other units that meet our first qualification, and are also working out the common salvation of putting the Lending Profession on a plane with the recognized professions of our country. That is more possible than is really conceded by many of our opponents, though I say without fear of contradiction, we are doing it here in good old Ohio. Only to-day marked the climax of a great drive that was put over by our Chamber of Commerce for a large and mighty sustaining fund campaign—materially to boost Dayton—but ethically to rise to that plane that we are all putting our effort toward. Dayton Industrial Lenders were back of this thing, strong and with what financial support they were able to give. Where they could not match it with dollars their efforts were 100% effective in securing their fellow business men to do their share. We are materially interested in the present "Prompt Pay Campaign" being conducted by the Dayton Retail Merchants Credit Bureau, for the general education of the public at large and betterment of credit conditions. Thus far it has been very effective and beneficial to all members. These are only little examples of what an Industrial Lenders Association can do for its community, besides countless other bits of work for the good of their own profession. Therefore, I say to you it is a community asset.

Aside from this, let me point out to you the many striking accomplishments Association work has netted our own profession. Dayton is a creditor community and our Retail Merchants Association and Credit Bureau will bear out this statement, that this is a great city for credit competition, therefore, we are plunged at times into great chaotic conditions and the very moral fibre of our community shot with instalment plague; therefore, if calculations are to be believed losses are greater and risks are greater, such conditions demand the finest coöperation between the credit-granting merchant and Industrial Lender and in the day when a condition prevails, we are competitive in our exchange of information; even though we now have a fine code of ethics and a moral obligation to our great National Institution. Therefore, we have set about to destroy this evil and build in its place an everlasting monument to character, integrity and honesty of purpose in such a manner and imbued with such principle we will whip into play these destructive forces. Namely the establishment of a local Industrial Lenders Association—broad in its operation and coöperative in spirit and of high ethical standards. By this we mean—functioning for the common good of all; allying ourselves with the Retail Credit Men's National Association and Dayton Retail Merchants Credit Bureau and carrying forward the principles set down by our State and National Association of Industrial Lenders. We prove to you by one year's actual operation that we have gone far toward making Dayton a model city of Industrial Loans.

This Association has turned over to its Secretary the entire records of transactions of its offices for the past five years; these in turn have been carefully coded and a file of them established in the offices of the Local Credit Bureau with which the Secretary is affiliated. In turn the Lender now has complete access of the entire membership files of over seven hundred business and professional men, records of their experiences over a period of thirty years. This has been very instrumental in ironing out difficulties that have arisen in the past, not uncommon to other communities, of leaky information and false statements and have entirely eliminated doubling up of borrowers' accounts. This association has been organized in accordance with regular detail set out by the code of ethics and its meetings are entirely conducted by parliamentary procedure. We have our chairs established and officers are elective and for the term of one year and in this instance the post of Secretary is occupied by the writer who is associated with the local Credit Bureau.

There is a great spirit manifested here and it has been responsible for the many achievements, although credit is also due to the splendid manner in which the Credit Bureau have assisted and given of their time and materials. It would be in good stead for the other cities to take note of what Dayton has ventured to do, it pays big dividends and goes far in creating a kindly feeling in the minds of our people and is expressive in the fellowship that is enjoyed by those who partake of it.

Dayton will share her success with others.

J. D. Burwell.

We have a new member in addition to those carried above in The Community Finance Service, Inc. They have recently established an office in Dayton.

Would appreciate your putting my name on the mailing list for the Industrial News and other good bits of advice that would interest us down here in Dayton. And in turn feel free to ask what you would know of our association and what our intentions are and of how much assistance we can be in helping other cities establish their Industrial Lenders Association.

INDIANA

The tenth annual convention of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Lincoln Hotel, Indianapolis, Indiana, May 20 and 21, 1295.

Luncheon was served to 88 members and guests in the Lincoln Room, Wednesday, May 20 at noon, following which Mr. Jesse Hanft, representing the Chamber of Commerce, made the address of welcome to the convention, as follows:

Mr. Hanft: Members of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association: I am more than glad to come over here, on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce, to give you a word of greeting and welcome. When groups of men bring their conventions to Indianapolis, we are trying very hard to make these men feel we'come—to feel that this is a truly courteous city.

I am connected with the Advertising Club of Indianapolis. A few years ago, we accumulated a fund of $50,000 here and brought the Associated Advertising Clubs to this city. When the Directors of the Advertising Club got their heads together we had this one object in view, in bringing that convention to Indianapolis—not to entertain the convention, but to make Indianapolis known from the Atlantic to the Pacific and, from the Gulf to the Lakes, as one of the most courteous cities in the United States. After that convention, we received many hundreds of letters from those men, complimenting us upon that one feature of our convention—and we have heard it in every one of our Nationail Conventions since—that Indianapolis is a truly courteous city.

In extending this word of welcome to you this afternoon, we want you to have a good time here. We want you Hoosiers from Indiana to feel that we are one of you and you are one of us. If there is anything that this Hoosier State should stand for, it is good fellowship and hospitality and courtesy. As business men, we are beginning to realize, as never before, that we should treat our customers upon such a basis as will bring them back to us with smiles on their faces.

I notice as I go down your program that you have men who will talk to you along advertising and educational lines. It is a wonderful thing to think that you men are grouped together here, in the business that you represent. There was a time when people were a little afraid to play in your line of business, but through your educational work, they are coming to understand the principles upon which you operate and to-day you are a real power in the State of Indiana.

And so I say we want you to have a good time here with us, and, when you go back home, you will have a kindly feeling in your hearts for Indianapolis and the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce. Anything we can do while you are here to make your stay pleasant, we will be only too glad to do it for you.

Come back again; help us out in your own home Hoosier cities to make this State known as one famous for its hospitality and good fellowship so that, when strangers come from other States, they will go back home, feeling that they were in the hands of friends.

Professor George H. Tapy of Wabash College addressed the meeting on the "Perils of Prosperity." He spoke in part as follows:

Professor Tapy: I am sorry to say, Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Association, that I am not a member of the Indiana Lenders Association. I am not boasting about it; I am just making a confession. I am a member of the Ancient and Honorable Order of Borrowers.

There was once a wise old Philosopher who said that there was nothing new under the sun. He was not thinking of aeroplanes, or Fords, or things like that. He was not thinking of modern inventions; he was thinking of Human Nature.

Another Philosopher said: "The old order changes, giving place to the new." He was not thinking about Human Nature, he was thinking about the great world of inventions.

Both of these men told the truth. We come into the world to-day with about the same passions and desires that our Fathers had but we come into a world that differs widely from the world of our Fathers. This changeless individual, coming into an ever-changing world, has given rise to all the modern problems that the world is trying to solve to-day.

When our Fathers lived, they could live and prosper by themselves alone, but we are so completely tied together to-day that no man lives to himself alone. When Grandfather lived, the community was the neighborhood; but to-day the world has become a neighborhood. One hundred years ago, it was said that the Atlantic Ocean would be a barrier forever between Europe and America; but to-day it is no barrier; it is a highway between Europe and America; we talk under it, sail upon it, fly over it and whatever happens in Europe we will be in it, just as we were eight years ago, when we entered the World War. We are thoroughly tied together.

What has produced this change? The answer is simple. It has been produced by the fact that we have invented machinery. The machine is a harness which we throw upon the forces of Nature. We touch the button and the electric current does the rest. The greatest machine that the human mind has devised is the steam engine, which makes it necessary that the human race shall live together and the good of one is the good of all.

We seem to think that we are so much smarter and better than Grandfather was but that is not true, because these inventions are the accumulations of the race, and, for this thing which we call "Progress," we have to pay a price—and that price is something I want to speak of to-day. We pay a price for all this organization and it is a price that you Lenders will have to pay, just as well as everyone else.

In the first place, for this having to live together, we have to pay this price—we are not inclined to be as broad as Grandfather was; this working together has a tendency to narrow our minds; to make specialists of us. We are not going to junk our machinery—I am just pointing out what this invention of machinery and working together has done. It has meant a steady and increasing exodus from the farms to the city. We have a problem to solve here, with the city in it. All this invention of machinery has disintegrated the family. It has created big institutions, like your organization; and do you know, my friends, the bigger the organization to which you and I belong, the more we are inclined to surrender our individuality and depend upon the organization?

We are just as good as our Fathers but we don't support our institutions the way our Fathers did because they knew that the Government, being small, needed their support. How easy now for a man to stand on the street and say: "Why doesn't Congress look after this?" What are we going to do about all this?

I am not a pessimist. I will admit that the world is not as good as it ought to be; but it is infinitely better than it used to be. The American people will have to learn to be obedient to the will of the Group. This is practically our only salvation. Everyone has a right to discuss questions that arise but when the vote has been taken, then Minority and Majority must get along together. We must learn that the success of one depends upon the success of all. No one can succeed by himself alone.

We are so thoroughly tied together that no Loan business will succeed in a city when other financial businesses in that city are failing. No bank can succeed when other banks are failing. We either succeed or fail together.

Do you know what a Cancer is? A doctor told me not long ago, that a cancer is a perfectly healthy growth of flesh, feeding upon another body, but not in harmony with the other body, and so it kills the other body and then dies itself. That is the story of the profiteer in the world. In the short run, he will profit but, in the long run he will ruin the Body Politic upon which he feeds.

The Loan business depends upon the success of the people to whom you loan money. No one can profit if he thinks too much about his own business. He must have an objective point of view in the matter and, when his community succeeds, then he can succeed also.

A lawyer has a perfect right to make money out of his profession but the lawyer who says: "I am never going to give legal advice unless I know what fee I am going to receive" will have few clients in the long run. The lawyer who believes in giving good advice to his clients will have plenty of clients and make plenty of money.

I will illustrate this with a story. There was a sailor who had a parrot and this parrot was taught to speak English in the sailors' language. A preacher also owned a parrot, which was taught to speak English in the preachers' language. One time the sailor had to be away all summer and he took his parrot to the preacher to take care of. The parrots began eyeing each other and finally the preacher's parrot said: "Oh, brother, what shall we do to be saved?" He repeated this three times and the sailor's parrot, shutting one eye, replied: "Unless we all pump like Hell, none of us will be saved."

The application of that story, it seems to me, shows that in order to win we must help each other. When you make your loans for the benefit of the people who borrow, you all succeed and like each other. Service is at the bottom of it all. When you do things for the community and for the good of the town—no matter what the business, you are doing something worthwhile.

If you want to learn to hate a man, all you have to do is do him an injury. If you want to learn to love a man, do him a kindness first and then you will learn to love him.

And so, after all, it seems to me: "This old world that we are living in is mighty hard to beat. You get a thorn with every rose, but ain't the roses sweet?"

2 P. M.

Mr. Frederick E. Schortemeier, Secretary of State, was introduced to the convention and gave a review of the accomplishments of the 1925 Assembly.

The speaker said in part: It is a great thing to live in this State of ours—Indiana. Of all the States of the Union, Indiana, in the per capita wealth of her people, stands seventh; she has more miles of surface roadways than any other State in the Union; and, in the matter of education, Indiana ranks fourth among all the States of the Union.

In speaking of the accomplishments of the 1925 General Assembly of Indiana, Mr. Schortemeier mentioned the fact that, when the session was closed, we had 218 new laws in this State. One piece of legislation passed states that any corporation which does not make its annual report for three consecutive years, loses its charter. A bill was passed restricting the use of fire-arms. The Wright Bone-Dry law was passed. The gas tax was increased from 2 cents to 3 cents. The General Assembly passed two pure milk bills, making the standards for Indiana the same as those of the United States Bureau of Standards. A new weights and measures law was passed, which requires that in every county in Indiana, they must meet the requirements of the State's Weights and Measures Department and that the State Weights and Measures Department must use the standards of the United States Bureau of Standards. Every county over 30,000 population must have the Standard Weights and Measures.

Legislature placed the buses under the Public Service Commission. They are common carriers and the bus problem is one of the most difficult with which we have to deal. The Farmer Coöperative law was passed, and the new automobile law. We have now 36 State Police to enforce the new automobile law.

Those are some of the more important laws passed but if the Legislature had not done any more than pass the Garnishee Law, in my opinion, it would have been a worthwhile session. I shall give you, as best I can, in my limited time, just what the terms are, under which the new Garnishee Law may be applied.

In taking advantage of the Garnishee Law, the first step is to proceed against your debtor and get a judgment. We will say, for the purpose of our demonstration, that "A" is a creditor; "B" is a debtor; "C" owes "B" something. Since "B" owes "A," then "A" must go to Court to get a judgment and he must actually show that it was returned unsatisfied. "C" owes "B" something. This applies to profits or wages or salaries from "C" to "B," who owes "A." "A" files his affidavit against "C." The Law provides that there will be no docket fee and if "C" loses the suit, he must stand cost only for $3.00 and, beyond that, all costs must be borne by "A."

"A" goes to Court with the judgment against "B." "A" sues "C." The Court looks over the judgment and issues an execution, requiring "C," who owes "B," to pay to "A" 10% of whatever he owes him. If "D" owes "B" also, you can sue "D" also and get 10% and so on, down the line—but only 10% judgment can lie at any one time of that amount which "C" owes "B." The Law is not as strict as it would seem because any of the parties can move the Court to modify the judgment; therefore, when you have a Law, which seeks both honesty and is merciful at the same time, in that it does not apply in an extremely unfortunate situation, then you have a piece of legislation which meets the ends of Justice.

This act does not apply to any acts or judgments assigned. This Law does not apply to any debts which are standing now. The new law went into effect when the last County Clerk certified to the Secretary of State that he had received his number of copies—on the 28th day of April. This law provides that "No demands on contracts be made prior to sixty days after this Act takes effect"; this will be sixty days after April 28th, which would be approximately June 28th.

I have given you the outstanding points of the Garnishee Law. You can answer the question for yourselves whether the Legislators, regardless of their political affiliation, did not do a pretty good piece of work in incorporating the laws of Indiana during the 1925 session.

I never appear before a group of business men without realizing that, after all, it is such meetings as this which buoy us up, help to elevate the standards of business, and better qualify us in the maintenance of the highest standards in our business relations.

The Indiana Securities Commission spends two afternoons a week receiving applications to sell stocks and bonds. The men file in, in groups, and tell us about their proposition and, after they leave the room, one of us, on the Commission, says to the others: "Are those men honest? Do you think they meant what they said? How about their reputation for reliability in their home communities?"

What is my point? More important to you than your surplus at the end of the year or your profits, in a business way, is your reputation for reliability, dependability in your community. If that is once shattered, you can never restore it. If a fire should suddenly destroy your possessions, that would not be such a tremendous loss; insurance would take care of that, but if the wholesomeness of your business standard is lost; then you have lost something really worth while.

Henry Cabot Lodge once said: "We need monuments in America." He meant those things which made us think of the idealistic; a determination for a higher moral standard; the ability to say "Yes" or "No," as the facts in the instance might justify.

When Theodore Roosevelt passed to the Great Beyond, Warren Harding said: "It is little to say that he was a great executive; more to say that he inspired the American people to higher thinking and nobler living." And, by the same token, it is little to say that we are citizens of the greatest country in the world, but more to say, as individuals, and members of this association, as citizens of the United States of America, that we, in our respective spheres, encourage ourselves and each other toward higher thinking and nobler living, to the end that this modern America of ours may be handed on to unborn generations and that no hurt may come to the Republic.

Appointment of Nominating Committee

The president appointed as members of the Nominating Committee Messrs. George Farrington, Clarence E. Clift and H. H. Burrell.

It was moved that the reading of the minutes of the last session be dispensed with. Motion seconded and carried.

The treasurer's report was read in detail, showing receipts and disbursements, copy of which is on file at the secretary's office, and, upon motion of Mr. Clift, which was duly seconded and carried, the report of the treasurer was referred to the Auditing Committee.

The Auditing Committe consisted of Mr. C. E. Durnell, Mr. Hardesty and Mr. S. F. Smith.

"INDUSTRIAL FINANCIAL CONDITIONS"

By Mr. Dick Miller,

President of the City Trust Company, Indianapolis, Indiana

Mr. Miller: Mr. chairman and gentlemen: This is a subject, I think, of just as much interest to you as it is to me; it is of just as much interest to the man in wholesale or retail trade as it is to you or to me. We are all tradesmen, in legitimate businesses, along different lines and our activities are determined largely by the fundamental conditions of industry and finance; therefore, it is a subject of real importance to any man in business, in these days.

It is my opinion that it requires more hard work, more ingenuity, to make a dollar to-day than in many years. I am not saying that conditions could ever be such, in this wonderful, rich country of ours, whereby it would be impossible to make a dollar; but there are times when it is harder to make a dollar than other times—and this is one of the times when it is hard to make an honest dollar. In a good many of our businesses, there is a specific reason for that.

The difference between utilities and private bankers is that we bankers have no commission, which absolutely gives us a return on our capital. We realize how the expense of operation has mounted; and yet we are charging the same rate of interest as before the expense mounted; therefore it has come to the time when we must build efficiency in the business, to get the dollar, which is hard to get hold of these days.

There was a time, immediately following the World War, when a man did not have to work for a living—it just came to him. In almost every channel of activity, dollars were easy to get hold of and we have a tendency in these days to measure our business situation by the business condition of those days. We have simply got to get out of that frame of mind.

I take it that 1925 has been a disappointment to a great many people, as far as profit is concerned, because the expected so-called "great activity" in business has not come. The Curtis Publishing Company said that labor conditions are better now than they have been. I realize that, in a sense, the steel industry has been extremely active; the oil industry has been active; it seems that all big businesses have reflected a spirit of prosperity; but there has not been a balancing of the account. Somehow or other, it has not touched the little fellow. I don't know just how soon he will be affected by it. I do know this—that the so-called "prosperity" of the last three years, in the urban population of the country, came from the building industry, from the automobile industry, and from public improvement development—and in public improvement development, I class he railroads and institutions of that character, together with the municipalities that have erected great structures, which have caused a sort of prosperity among the great masses of the urban population of he country—and we have enjoyed the prosperity.

The fact that the farmers have not been on a dividend paying basis goes to prove that, after all, there can be no great inancial and industrial tragedy in this country, because our country is so absoutely rich that it cannot all go down at he same time. If it had not been for he extraordinary richness of this great country of ours, with the farmers down o the point where they were, there would have been a financial and industrial tragedy during the last two or three years.

I think we have come to the position where there will be a balancing of the budget between the urban and industrial classes and, when we get that balance, we will have a fundamentally sound basis of prosperity in this country. We have arrived at a time when we have to work for every single dollar that we earn. This is a year of reorganization of the business of this great country of ours.

We are now working on a readjustment of the foreign debt situation and when France becomes more at ease with egard to her financial position, it will reult in a reorganization of International ndustry, and better foreign markets for he products of the farms. There can be no such thing as stability of prices—agricultural prices—without a foreign market and there can be no foreign market until we get our international differences adjusted.

So I take it that this is a year when we are seriously beginning to study the situation; but remember that he is a lost prophet who tells you that we will come to the position where we were in 1919 or 1920—and if a fellow is a real red-blooded business man, he does not want that condition to arise again. He wants a fundamentally sound basis, from which we can reason, as business men. No man dares to make a budget in his business these last few years and, if you cannot do that, you are not in a scientifically conducted business. So what we all want is a fundamentally sound basis above all. It is a problem, of course, to conduct business in these days but it is a joy, at that. The fellow who does not get any kick out of trying situations in business is not the best type of American business man, to my mind. It is up to the business man to build efficiency into his business, whereby he will get that share which he deserves. It is our struggle for existence.

I happen to be engaged in four or five different kinds of business. There is no fundamental difference in the character of different businesses. The basis of all business is exactly the same—it requires stick-to-it-iveness, a love of the business—a desire on the part of the man, who is conducting that business to win out over obstacles in that business.

I have no fear about the future of America, in a business way and neither have you. We believe in America, in our great riches; we believe that she is of that particular type that guarantees to every man who renders a real service that he will get some return for that service and, if there is a thought which I wish to leave with you this afternoon, it is that we are years nearer a fundamentally sound basis of what we are pleased to call "prosperity" in this country than we were at the end of the war—because we are improving constantly and, if these seem irksome years, this had to come because it is a natural situation, arising after an unnatural situation, and it is up to you and me, in our respective businesses, to work this thing out and, above all things, let us get a pleasure out of it while we are working it out.

It was moved by Mr. Hancock that the secretary be instructed to write a letter of thanks to Mr. Schortemeier and Mr. Miller for their splendid addresses. Motion seconded and carried.

REPORT OF PUBLICITY COMMITTEE

By Mr. Broughman

Three pieces of publicity have been sent out recently. One member in every town has received copy for release to the newspapers, in order to bring our business before the public.

The chairman requested the different members, to whom this literature had been sent, to state what success they had met with, from their local papers.

Mr. Parker, of Logansport, stated that his local newspapers had coöperated with him.

Mr. Baum, of Fort Wayne, managed to get some of this data into the local papers, but said that some of the papers complained that this material was more of advertising than news and refused to print it.

Mr. Smith, of Evansville, suggested that the Ft. Wayne condition also applied to his locality.

Mr. Geiser's copy had been printed by one Newcastle paper; the Terre Haute papers did not publish the articles submitted to them. Mr. Bishop, of Indianapolis, reported that he succeeded in getting an eight-inch article in the Times. Mr. Durnell, by going direct to the city editor, was successful in having his article placed in the Indianapolis News, and Mr. Clift reported similar success on the Indianapolis Star.

Mr. Stratton: It seems to me that, after all, this is purely a business proposition. The newspapers in the towns, where they will not publish this stuff, are not sold on the Small Loan Business. In our town, the reporter wrote a nice arti- and put it on the front page. If you are going to get coöperation from your newspapers, you must sell your business and yourself to the newspapers. They are not running simply to help you make money on your business and, as a newspaper man told me once, they have to print what the people want to read.

Mr. Crunk said that the Anderson papers refused to print the copy because it was not "real news."

Mr. Arnett: Those articles which have been sent out are not "news" and can not be published. Advertising space in newspapers is for sale and we have no right to ask them to publish something that is not news.

Mr. Hartz: H. F. Woods, of New York, has been employed by the National Association to get these articles in. I am open for suggestion along this line and will send same on to Mr. Woods, who will prepare the publicity article.

REPORT OF MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE

By Mr. G. W. Farrington

I went to the State House last fall and asked for a list of all licensed men, eligible to membership in this association. They told me that a number listed were not eligible to membership. I would recommend to the man who follows next year that he select a man in each town, to write him a list of all eligibles to membership in that town, who would like to come in. I think there are about fifty eligibles not now members.

We took in seven members during the last six months. There is not an eligible in Indianapolis who is not a member because we go after them. I think you ought to coöperate more with the next chairman and see if you cannot bring up this membership.

REPORT OF LAW COMMITTEE

By Mr. W. A. Zumpfe

You are all familiar with the case that came up in Terre Haute regarding the receipt question. Some of the attorneys thought it would be safer to use a form of receipt better than provided in the law of 1897 but we consulted our association attorney and he thinks it unnecessary to get a written receipt of that kind. In the Terre Haute case, the court agreed with Mr. Noel's opinion. It would not be a hardship to give a receipt but would take more time to do it and I am perfectly willing to do as our attorney, Mr. Noel, said and use short form receipt.

Regarding the figuring of interest. I presume you all saw the Supreme Court decision of Georgia, recently, which said that interest must be figured by the month and not by days. Some of the Lenders, in giving receipts, say for thirty-five days, would say: "One month and five-thirtieths." We must not figure thirty-one days to any one month but must always figure the month as thirty-days.

Regarding mortgages, some attorney recommended that, on mortgagse, we should provide the amount actually paid the borrower. I cannot find any reason for having that appear on the mortgage; neither does our attorney.

The Supreme Court decision of Georgia was published in the September issue of the LENDERS NEWS. It occurred to me that, under that decision, it would be safer to take a receipt for the receipt card—that is have the statement come at the time the loan is made. According to this decision, the burden of the proof would be on us. Under the old Act of 1897, we used to take a receipt of that kind. Since, under this decision, the burden of the proof would be on the lender, I think it would be safer to take a receipt for this statement.

I think it safer, also, to have the statement show that they received a receipt card and specify what the receipt card contained—for instance, "I have this date received from .... Loan Company a statement of loan, dated ...., made by me, doing business as ...., such statement being in the English language." Have this give fully the amount of loan, of interest charged, amount yet unpaid, and when it will be due. Said statement gives the name of the borrower and licensee and is in form of receipt card. Copy of Section 2 of the act is given in English on which this is made.

Mr. Hartz suggested that if there are any suits brought, that might affect all of the Lenders, that same be reported at once to the secretary and all possible assistance would be rendered.

MR. PARKER, Logansport: In 1917 the Legislature gave the power of issuance to the Secretary of State and in 1919 the power was transferred to the Bank Examiner. The question was raised recently in our city whether the Legislature had that power, without repealing the 1917 law.

The Chairman of the Law Committee stated that he would try to find out the facts in this matter.

SECRETARY'S REPORT

May 20, 1925.

We have at the present time 93 members, one delinquent for twelve months $25.00, and one delinquent from Dec. 30, 1924.

During the past year we have accepted eight new memberships as follows:

O. W. Storer, operating as National Loan Co. at Connersville, Marion, Indianapolis; Commonwealth Loan Co., New Castle; Lincoln Loan Co., Indianapolis; Connersville Remedial Loan Ass'n., Connersville; Ft. Wayne Loan & Discount Co., Ft. Wayne, Indiana; The Brooks Loan Co., Wabash, Indiana.

During the year we have lost one member, Capitol Loan Co. of Frankfort, who sold to the Legal Loan Co.

This makes a net gain of seven new members. During the year we have had a few legal situations raised which will be explained during the convention; the legislative situation was settled and will be explained by the chairman of that committee.

A suit filed to test the receipt law has been adjusted and will be reported by the Uniform Paper Committee.

A few accounts have been sent to this office for assignment to various offices.

Respectfully submitted,
ROY F. HARTZ, Sec'y.

It was moved, seconded and carried that the secretary's report be accepted and placed on file.

Upon motion duly made and seconded, the meeting adjourned.

BANQUET, WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 20th

MR. C. H. STRATTON, Toastmaster

The banquet was held at 6:30, 223 members and guests attending. Musical program finished, followed by dancing.

Mr. Stratton introduced to the gathering Mr. J. H. Aufderheide, President of the American Industrial Lenders Association, who spoke as follows:

MR. AUFDERHEIDE: Mr. toastmaster, ladies and gentlemen: I have been with you too many times, and I am too well known, to pose as a speech maker here to-night, besides you are soon to hear from several gentlemen whom I am sure have something of importance, and interest, to tell you.

It is customary for the Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders Association to attend the conventions and banquets of the affiliated state organizations. I have done so several times since I was elected Chairman of the national organization. At such times the national chairman usually prefaces any remarks that he has to make by complimenting the state organization upon their splendid attendance, their fine spirit, and the handsomeness of the men and the beauty of the ladies. In so far as I am a member, in good standing and of long standing, of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, I am afraid that any compliments which I should make to-night would seem like throwing bouquets at myself.

I have no message to deliver to the guests, or to the members of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, to-night. I desire, only, to say a few words because I feel that in the inner consciousness of many of our guests, and perhaps some of our members, they are asking this question: What is the American Industrial Lenders Association and this affiliated state organization which is gathered here to-night?

The American Industrial Lenders Association was organized in Philadelphia in 1916. It had for its object the improvement and up-lift of industrial loan conditions in the United States. It has broadened its scope since those days, but this association still maintains this same high purpose. Besides providing occasions for pleasant social contact between the members, and assisting and coöperating with the affiliated state associations, the American Industrial Lenders Association stands for certain high principles in the conduct of this necessary business. We are for right, fair-dealing and integrity; we are for perpetuating everything that is good in this business and we are for exterminating everything that is bad. We are for truth and squareness to the borrower and for rates of interest that are fair and equitable to both the borrower and for rates of interest that are fair and equitable to both the borrower and the lender. The American Industrial Lenders Association is for helpfulness to the unfortunate and against extortion; we are for law and order and decency. The Indian Industrial Lenders Association stands for the same high standard of ethics in the conduct of the industrial loan business in the State of Indiana. The national organization has no other purpose for its existence but to be helpful and beneficial to our membership and to make this necessary business honorable and clean throughout these United States.

Mr. Arthur Nash, President of the A. Nash Company, Inc., Cincinnati, Ohio, a man of wonderful personality, delivered in a dramatic manner the message of the "Golden Rule in Business."

Mr. Nash spoke in part, as follows: I was born here in Indiana and that was a thing that appealed to me, when Mr. Stratton called me over long distance and asked me to come over here and speak to you to-night. Anyone who was born and raised in Indiana can never forget this state—somehow or other, we keep coming back.

I have no intimate knowledge of the intricacies of your business. I came here for the purpose of telling you a little of my experience in life, and will have to start my story with the close of the war—with the beginning of my industrial experience. I want to say to you that I come to you to-night, not with theoretical ideas for the solution of the problems of humanity, but rather with the story of things accomplished; and, out of the facts has grown a very definite conviction with me.

I am almost always introduced to audiences as one that will try to convince them that the Golden Rule will work in any kind of business. I immediately correct that statement by saying that I am not simply claiming that the Golden Rule will work, but that it is the only thing in God's Universe that will work. Any other principle put into business of any kind will end in disaster.

I make that statement unqualified, based on all the history of humanity and whenever one builds upon the foundation of the Golden Rule in his business, he is doing just what the great Teacher of teachers said: "He is building upon a rock" and when the floods come and the storms beat upon that structure, it will stand, because it is founded upon a rock; but if it is built upon any other foundation, it cannot withstand the floods and storms.

We hear a great deal of talk these days about the Golden Rule. In the last four years, I have spoken to over one thousand audiences and there are very few of us who know that the Golden Rule is the very hub, about which the Philosophy of the Man of Galilee revolves. It is the summing up and putting into one sentence all of the Philosophy of the greatest Teacher upon this earth. A false claim that goes around the world is that the Golden Rule was given before it was given in the sermon on the Mount.

Jesus said: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do you even so to them, for this is the Law."

In order to live the Golden Rule of the Man of Galilee, every man and woman on the face of the globe must become our brother and our sister, children of the same Father as we, and we must deal with them as we would want to be dealt with, under all conditions.

Religion will never get anywhere until we make it solve the issues of our business and then this world will begin to find a solution of its problems and not until then.

This vision came to me during the great World War, when I was struggling through that dark period, when one son was lying wounded in a Hospital and my other boy was preparing to enter war. When the vision began to come to me, after thinking myself an atheist, I got down on my knees and said the first real prayer of my life. I had thought I had prayed many times before, but I never had prayed like this: "Oh God, if there is a God, show me the way and I will walk it."

Perhaps you are thinking that you didn't come here to listen to a sermon. I want to say this though—if there is anyone here who thinks himself an atheist, I have just this one challenge: Go down on your knees and pray that prayer honestly, and mean what you say, and I warn you, before you pray, be prepared to be led into strange paths. After I had uttered that prayer out of a bleeding heart, things began to happen so fast that I could hardly keep track of them.

I began to read the Gospel, to find the real Jesus, and I found Him to be a great Teacher of how to live here and now and found that His Philosophy was the Philosophy of Life and that religion was not a theory to be believed in but a life to be lived.

Mr. Nash then related the history of his own particular business, from the time it was a small "Sweat Shop" until the present day, when it is a large, prosperous and growing concern, and explained that, by living and bringing into practice in his business the teachings of the Golden Rule, this remarkable change had been wrought.

THURSDAY MORNING SESSION, May 21, 1925

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Davies, chairman, at nine o'clock.

Report of the Committee on the Adoption of Uniform Papers

By Mr. Francis L. Thompson

Our committee has been working for some time on the subject of Uniform Papers or standard forms. It has been our desire to present something concrete —something which be believed would be beneficial to every member of the association. We have looked into his matter from the standpoint of a complete survey of the Loan Law of Indiana and have awaited the completion of the survey in Ohio, put out by the Anderson-McKee Law firm. The survey has been completed and is a wonderful success as a piece of work. It is not as complete, however, as we would like to see a survey of the Indiana laws and our desire to-day is your authority to go ahead and complete a survey of the laws of Indiana, pertaining to the Loan business, in general that would have any bearing on our law so that we may put a piece of work on your desks that, whenever any question arises relative to the local phrase of the conduct of your business, you may turn to your Survey of the Indiana laws and have either Opinions or Case-Law on the subject.

Naturally, in compiling such a work, the association would be at an expense. We have succeeded in finding a firm of attorneys who will compile this work for us for $500.00. This is a good deal of money, but at the same time, it is a small item, compared to the benefit we can obtain from such a work. The printing of 500 booklets will cost somewhere between $400.00 and $500.0, which will mean, if this work is put into effect, that the association will be at an initial outlay of $1,000.00. The cost to the Ohio Association for 500 copies was around $819.00.

This survey will contain also a complete compilation of all the papers required by the law in connection with this work. There will be a copy of it in the book and further action, on the part of the association, for the printing and preparation of standard and uniform papers, will be up to whatever action you may determine upon.

The recommendation of this committee is that you authorize us to go ahead with the compilation of the printing of about 500 copies, one copy to be given for each membership. We would recommend that additional copies, which unquestionably you will all want, and which lawyers and other people interested will want, be sold at about $2.50 per copy. That would leave us in a position to practically close out the expense of compiling of this survey. The committee recommends to you that we carry on this work for a period of say two years and I believe that, for a very nominal sum, we can arrange for all decisions that, in any way affect your business, to be bulletined from your committee or secretary's office and, at the end of the two-year period, when the next Legislature has convened, we could get a complete review of all laws pertaining to our subject and they would be sent to you in supplemental form. Whatever charge would be attached to that would be problematical because we don't know how much or how little that might be. We believe this should be printed and bound in binder form, so that bulletins and supplements can be added to it, making a continuous work.

Mr. Chandler also spoke on this subject, stating that in his estimation, the price stated was most reasonable, considering the magnitude of the work involved. It was stated by the committee that it would take around five months to complete this work. Mr. Thompson stated further that as soon as the compilation of the survey is completed, copies of the mortgage note and the statement required by law and the receipt proposition could be submitted the members and then, in three or four more months, the completed papers would be ready.

Mr. Thompson: We have been asked to look after the forms particularly required by the law. Personally, I would like to see a standard and uniform set of papers, but I don't believe that is the desire of the membership, after the questionnaire which I sent out. I believe the desire of the Association is a note and mortgage and whatever might be necessary in the way of a receipt.

It was moved by Mr. Baum that the committee be authorized to continue their work and that one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars be placed at their disposal to cover the expense of the attorneys and the printing of the books. Motion seconded by Mr. Chandler and carried.

Mr. Leroy Sanders, of the Coffield Company, Indianapolis, addressed the meeting on "Local and Income Tax Problems."

Mr. Sanders gave a very concise interpretation of the Corporation and Income Tax.

Taxes is the greatest problem that the business man has to deal with said Mr. Sanders. Nearly one-half of the time of our legislators in the state and our Congress is taken up with the proposition of taxes. This subject will never be down to a sound basis until it is settled on a business plane.

I think, for the class of loans you fellows make, you should be allowed to take off at least 30% instead of 20%, and I had hoped, at one time, that the State Board of Tax Commissioners would see it that way too.

There are two items that I would advise you never to carry on your books as expense items. One is "miscellaneous" and the other "suspense." If the government asks you in four or five years what they were, you don't know. They can all be put under some of your other headings and thus be plainer to everybody concerned.

The following subjects were introduced for free and full discussion and lead by persons to whom subjects were assigned:

MANAGER'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR EDUCATING CUSTOMERS TO BE HONEST

Mr. C. G. Liggett, Dayton, Ohio: (The Quiz Committee for these subjects was composed of Mr. A. C. Broughman, Mr. R. C. Hardisty and Mr. C. E. Clift).

Mr. Liggett said in part: By having this legalized rate, we educate our borrowers to pay. The first thing you should do is to investigate the particular applicant who comes to your office. These borrowers are not protected in any manner and I think it is up to the managers to get in close touch with the borrower and find out what his troubles are, and thus try to help him; you will find out why they want the loan.

A woman wanted to borrow $300.00. She owed on her furniture but she wanted this money to pay off her debt on their Ford car. Why not tell people like this that they cannot be served, because their household furniture is not paid for. They should be educated to the fact that they should be honest and have good credit. A man without credit is like a man without a country.

Mr. Cliff: When do you educate him?

Mr. Liggett: Educate him before he makes the loan.

"HOW CAN THE ASSOCIATION BETTER SERVE ITS MEMBERS?"

By Mr. C. H. Stratton, Sullivan, Indiana

We have a fine organization in this state and I venture to say that you can go into any state in the Union and, in the small loan business, you will find less harmony and efficiency than we have in our state organization.

In my opinion, in order to have the association serve us better, we should give more service to the association. We must know more about our business. When we get a uniform set of papers, it will mean a great deal to us. What is good for one is good for all and we want to find the correct way to proceed. I think Mr. Johnson, the examiner knows that we want to do as near right as possible. We must watch the system of doing business between the lenders and borrowers and between the lenders themselves.

Mr. Stratton also complimented Mr. Hartz, Secretary of the State Association, upon his efficiency and untiring efforts on behalf of the organization.

In commenting upon Mr. Stratton's remarks, Mr. Arnett said: I think Mr. Stratton took the association, as meaning the officers. The officers certainly do serve the purpose of the association. I think that the reason why the association, at times, does not seem to serve the members is because the members do not assist the officers properly.

Mr. Liggett: I talked recently to a former member who does not attend our conventions any more. He said he got tired of always listening to the same members. Why not put other fellows on the program and give them the benefit of these little discussions?

Mr. Farrington: There are fifty or more loan men in this state who do not belong to our association. Being connected with the Membership Committee, I have been astonished at the inertia of some of these people who don't belong to our association and don't think it is worth $25.00 per year. If you have to write a man five or six letters to convince him that his association is worth $25.00 per year, then probably you have not put the proposition over correctly. We would like to hear from some of the fellows who just came into the association, or probably are thinking of dropping out.

Mr. Parker: I think these meetings are a fine thing. They help to keep us together and make us coöperate with each other.

Mr. Rose: I think it would be a good idea if we had a clearing house, the same as some of the Merchants' Associations have, for "dead beats."

Mr. Crunk, Anderson: In Anderson, we have about six loan companies but no organization. We have a plan outlined at this time, by which we are going to get together and organize in that city and see if we cannot induce new members to come into the organization. I think if every city throughout the state would organize themselves first, that would be an incentive to organize the state association in a better way.

Mr. Zumpfe: I think we are doing everything we can to satisfy the membership. I think that everything that comes up in the way of new legislation, affecting our business, should be given to the members and, if any of the members have troubles, of any kind, that might affect others, they should notify the secretary and let the matter be thrashed out among the officers. Let the members have all the valuable information possible, relating to our business, and not wait until we come to the annual meeting to have these matters brought up.

Mr. Hartz: This coming year, should I happen to be your secretary, if the members will send me, during the month, information of sufficient interest to the other members, I shall be only too glad to put it into a Bulletin and issue multigraph bulletins once a month.

Mr. Thompson: In addition to the questionnaire, which will be sent you, regarding the Uniform Papers, you can either send to Mr. Hartz or to me, as chairman of the committee, anything pertaining to the law that might affect our business. If you send this information to Mr. Hartz for monthly bulletin, he will forward same on to us. It is our desire that this booklet, when completed, will be the most valuable part of your furniture and fixtures.

NOTICE

To Members:

The first Monthly Bulletin will be issued on June 10th. It depends upon the coöperation of the members just how worth while this will be. Send your Bulletin data at once, to the Secretary, 347 Bankers Trust Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDUSTRIAL GROUP GATHERS FOR ITS QUARTERLY SESSION

Captain Tiffany Welcomes Visitors; Oscar Shumate Tells of Work Being Done

Members from all over Virginia of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association met last night at the Virginian Hotel for their regular quarterly meeting. Following a dinner, several speakers filled the program for the evening.

Captain Stephen L. Tiffany was the first speaker. He was introduced by J. J. Price, of Roanoke, vice chairman of the organization, who presided in the absence of Edgar P. East, of Richmond, chairman, who was prevented from attending the meeting on account of illness.

Captain Tiffany welcomed the organization to the city and during his talk said that he believed this industrial lenders' organization is a needed unit in the commercial life of the present and that while in a sense it is on trial the records of its operation in this state have been such as to reflect credit on its purposes and the personnel of its organization. He admonished all members of the organization to so continue to conduct their business on a plane that would hold the confidence of the public and establish their reputation as in every way worthy of the public spirited idea behind the legalizing of their present system.

Oscar L. Shumate, of Richmond, former counsel for the state tax board was the next speaker. He told something of the history of the start of the present organization, reasons for its existence and the purposes that it hopes to attain in the community life of the cities. He pointed out the need for some system that would permit the persons without banking facilities to obtain loans at a price that they could afford to pay and quoted figures to show the rather surprisingly large amount of business that was done by this organization in Lynchburg last year.

E. F. Moore, the southern supervisor of the Beneficial Operating Bureau of New York, gave a short talk of the work of his department and the spread of the movement throughout the country.

Rev. A. N. Perryman who was a guest at the meeting invoked the blessing and also made a short talk.—Lynchburg News, May 22, 1925.

BANK OF HUMAN KINDNESS COMPELLED TO SUSPEND

Prisoners on Release Neglected to Repay Their Loans

Moved by the desire to help needy and worthy prisoners, William Pigott, a philanthropic Seattle manufacturer, put up $500 a few months ago to aid the down and out. The money was to be loaned only on the security of human nature, a promise to pay within thirty days, and its disbursement was entirely in the hands of Justice of the Peace C. C. Dalton.

Prisoners brought before the judge were advanced sums ranging from $2 to $20. The $500 was in due course drawn on heavily, but only one loan for $2, has been repaid. Two other debtors came back and asked for more time, but all the others vanished quickly. The judge and the philanthropist, somewhat more cynical, have suspended disbursements, at least temporarily.

The advances were confined to prisoners released by the court or discharged after serving terms in the county jail.

"I wouldn't have believed it," said Judge Dalton recently. "It looked like a fine idea, helping the lowly, retrieving lost souls and all that sort of thing. But hang it all, the souls won't be saved, and so we've got to save what's left of the bank."—Philadelphia Public Ledger, May 24, 1925.

Bulletin No. 3.

Springfield, Ohio,
May 5, 1925.

The Eleventh Annual Convention will be held at Cedar Point, July 22, 23, and 24, 1925. This gets us there in the height of the season and we advise prompt reservation of rooms.

The Executive Committee has appointed Timmermeister, Taylor, Zimmerman and Anderson as the committee in charge of the convention.

To Timmermeister has been entrusted the delightful task of seeing to it that whatever entertainment the ladies desire, they shall have. If it be the merry-go-round, shoot-the-shoots, ice cream sodas, or what not, he is to see to it that their wants are supplied and the Association foots the bill. The fact is we should keep the ladies entertained. They-ve helped us all year at home, let's show 'em a good time.

In due time you will receive from the management at Cedar Point full particulars as to rooms and prices thereof.

Our book, "A Survey of the Ohio Law Relating to the Small Loan Business" and accompanying forms will be off the press probably by the time you receive this.

Each member in good standing is entitled to one copy for each licensed office maintained.

These will be mailed when each member sends in his latest address and name of manager and if member maintains more than one licensed office, a complete list of addresses thereof and manager's name. So please mail same promptly to the Secretary.

Bulletin No. 5

Springfield, Ohio,
June 12, 1925.

To all O. L. A. Members:

Owing to an opinion of the Attorney General, many County Auditors have required loan companies to make tax returns as banks.

On May 7, 1925, Judge Walter D. Jones of the Cuyahoga County Common Pleas Court, handed down an opinion in the case of Ulmer, etc., v. The Tax Commission, construing Section 5407, General Code, which defines a bank or banker within the meaning of Chapter 4, Title 1, part second of the General Code, which section in force at the time of that decision read as follows:

> "A company, association, or person, not incorporated under a law of this state or of the United States, for banking purpose, who keeps an office or other place of business, and engages in the business of lending money, receiving money on deposit, buying and selling bullion, bills of exchange, notes, bonds, stocks, or other evidences of indebtedness, with a view to profit, is a bank, or banker, within the meaning of this chapter."

It is conceded that the Ulmer Company was engaged in the business of lending money, its own money or that of its stockholders. The Court held that the Tax Commission was wrong in requiring this company to make a return as a bank, and says among other things:

> "It seems to be well settled by the authorities that the mere fact that a corporation is authorized to exercise some of the functions of a bank does not in law and in fact create it a bank."

Since this case was brought the Legislature has amended Section 5407, and it now reads as follows:

> "A company, association, or person, not incorporated under a law of this state, or of the United States, for banking purposes, who keeps an office or other place of business, and engages in the business of lending money, and receiving money on deposit, and buying or selling bullion, bills of exchange, notes, bonds, stocks, or other evidences of indebtedness, with a view to profit, is a bank, or banker, within the meaning of this chapter. Provided that corporations or institutions organized under the provision of the act of congress, known as the Federal Farm Loan Act approved July 17, 1916, and amendments thereto, shall not be considered banks within the meaning of this chapter."

You will note that the words in italics have been added to the old section, and that the conjunction "and" in the original section, second word before bullion, has been changed to "or." This legislative enactment is exactly in line with the reasoning of Judge Jones in the foregoing opinion.

We are reliably informed that this case will not be carried up, especially in view of the new act.

In Re: Fort Wayne Printing Company Letter.

Please be advised that your Secretary, in response to a request of this company, did give permission to it to solicit printing, and furnished a list of members on the theory that probably some money could be saved to the members, but he absolutely did not authorize this company to make any such statement as is contained in the first paragraph of the letter which you recently received from the Fort Wayne Printing Company, and your Secretary has recently written this company demanding that its erroneous statements be immediately corrected.

You are advised that no law has been passed requiring the use of the forms set out in the Survey recently distributed. These forms were submitted as a part of this book and if you may feel that they are better than the forms that you are now using you of course have a right to use them and get them printed where your own sweet pleasure may direct, and this was the thought that your Secretary had in mind when he was imposed on by this company as above set forth.

Everybody is responding splendidly to the requests of our Convention Committee We are going to have a great time at Cedar Point this year—lots of fun—lots of good fellowship and lots of worthwhile discussion. Better do your convention room shopping early.

Respectfully submitted,
J. Fred Anderson,
Secretary.

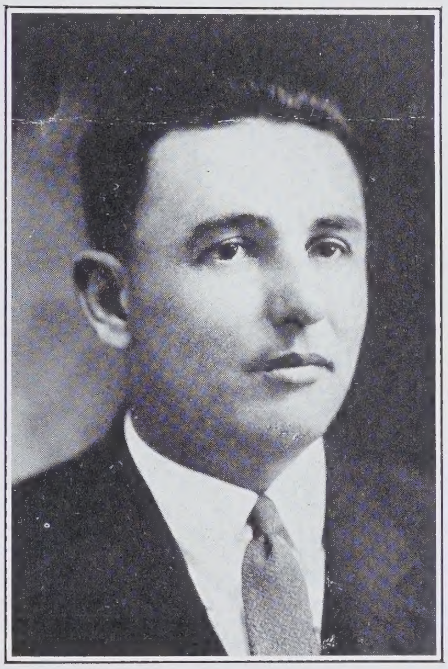
VOLUNTEERS WANTED

The National Secretary has again been delegated to make up the business program for the National Convention to be held at the Biltmore Hotel, Providence, Rhode Island, September 2 to 5. He is not concerned with the social features nor with the outside speakers, as these details are in competent hands and will be up to the usual high standard. What he is after is the member who does not attend his state meetings or national conventions because he is tired of listening to the same people. If there was ever an effort made to get new blood into the business program it is being made this year.

The State Association officers have been written and requested to suggest the names of persons and subjects which have never before appeared on a national convention program. As the State Association officers are all busy with their own business, they probably will not have much time to make this canvass, so this is a direct invitation to all readers who are members of the A. I. L. A. to come forward with their suggestions as to persons and subjects for discussion at the National Convention. Speak up promptly. Tell the National Secretary who has never been on the National Convention program. What subject of importance has never been discussed? Is anything wrong with our policies? Do the officers function as they should? Let's all help to make the Providence Convention a success by contributing more than our dues. Who will be the first to volunteer?

The Trustees of Russell Sage Foundation have appointed Mr. Leon Henderson Associate Director of the Department of Remedial Loans of the Foundation, to take effect September 1, 1925.



Leon Henderson,
Newly Appointed Associate Director of the Department of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation.

Mr. Henderson is thirty years of age, and comes from New Jersey. He is an A. B. of Swarthmore College and took graduate courses for three years in the University of Pennsylvania and the Carnegie Institute of Technology. He taught industrial geography and economics in all three of these institutions. He was employed for one summer as agent for the Swartmore Chautauqua, in which position he showed ability to influence business men.

He has also done some work as reporter for a local newspaper. During the World War he served in the Ordnance Department where he was in charge of the Washington District Property Office and later of the Ordnance Property Section and its district offices. He rose from private to the rank of captain. He had charge of personnel work, of accounting and of the development of property accounting procedures concerning plants built by the government for manufacturers. He has been until recently Deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Director of Accounts and Secretary of the Retirement Board. His responsibility there has been for classifying state employees, improving the procedure for employing personnel, and for promotions, salary increases, and the maintenance of the State's retirement system.

CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS

When industrial lending was rescued from the hands of men whose methods had made it a reproach this result was accomplished largely through the power of publicity. The reform of the business was brought about by necessary legislation, which was only made possible by a policy of making known all the facts about lending.

We have emerged from the dark age of lending, but our work is not finished. There is a large area of our country where the Uniform Small Loan Law has not been enacted, and until we have convinced the legislatures of those states of the wisdom and necessity of this law our business can not thrive as it should.

We can not win over public sentiment to our course unless we constantly and consistently appeal to it. Our best appeal lies in regular and widespread publicity which will convince the public of the legitimate, necessary and constructive character of our business.

That is our job, and volunteers are needed in putting it over. State Chairmen are helping by distributing the articles prepared by the publicity department to the newspapers in their communities, and by endeavoring to have them published.

Just drop me a line telling me how many copies you can use and where to send them, and I will be glad to comply with the request.

PRACTICAL APPLICATION OF "CODE OF ETHICS"

By Mr. A. V. Keeney, South Bend, Ind.

Sometime ago I was requested to make a few introductory remarks opening a discussion of the "Practical Application of the Code of Ethics" which was adopted in the Convention of American Industrial Lenders at Baltimore last September.

This code has its basic foundation in Article II of the By-laws of the American Industrial Lenders Association and the General Principles of Business as promulgated by the United States Chamber of Commerce, as presented in Article I.

Therefore we will begin with Article II.

Proprietors, executives and managers of either chain organizations or individual offices reveal to the public what the business is within. Men in these positions should possess the following qualifications:

Personal appearance should be such as becomes a successful business man and general attitude toward the public that of courtesy and helpfulness. His associations and personal habits should be such that he will never bring discredit on the business.

The owners of financial institutions like ours should insist that all employees qualify under Paragraph I of this Article. The type of men employed reflects the dignity and importance of our business for the public may be fully expected to appreciate the business in proportion to the character of the men operating it.

When men of high type are at the helm, those charged with the enforcement of the laws regulating the loan business will have very little trouble. These men, because their high ideals and upright principles impel them to conduct their business along lines that are honorable, obey not only the word of the law but the spirit also.

There is no danger of them exceeding lawful rates or charges for loans. For this there are two reasons. First, the lawful rates are adequate when the business is conducted economically and, second, the service they bestow on their fellowmen in time of need—when perhaps there is none other to whom they may turn—is an additional satisfying compensation.

Men of this caliber always conduct their business with a view to the welfare of their clients—ascertaining in an unoffending way, the condition of their personal affairs—that they may not be burdened by their dealings with the loaning organization in which they have come in time of need. They make sure their clients know that they have placed their confidence in an institution that will help them solve their problems and give them the kindly consideration they deserve.

Concerning Article III in our Relations with Borrowers. It is a surprisingly valuable asset to have a high reputation with borrowers—our own clients, the actual basis of our success. Not only is there the reward of knowing that they have implicit confidence in your giving them a "square deal" but they pass it on to the other fellow. When some friend or acquaintance drops a hint that he is in need of money, your client does not hesitate to recommend the company with which he deals. He recalls that he has been dealt with honorably and has always received courteous, helpful and friendly service and advice, such as he was entitled to along with the money borrowed. He is pleased and ready to tell others and recommend the company whose manager and employees he found to be men with whom he considered it a privilege to transact his business.

Deal with your patrons so that you may have their high regard. Be strictly honest with them in all things. If errors creep into your transactions with them as they may do sometimes, rectify them the moment the mistake or omission is discovered. Do not let it go until your client calls your attention to it. Even though you correct it then, he will not appreciate it so much as if you are the first to mention it.

Create "Good Will" by impressing all prospective customers with your desire to have them thoroughly understand all contracts and other papers which they may be required to sign. Do not perfunctorily answer questions that may seem unimportant to you, but cheerfully explain to them your method of dealing and other matters in detail so that they may fully understand what you expect from them and what they will get from you.

It is many times a difficult and delicate matter to determine when an applicant is incompetent to transact his own business but successful managers will discreetly and tactfully refuse the application of those whom they believe to be in this class.

For the good will we enjoy from the great majority of people with whom we deal, we owe a great deal to our "Outside Man." Upon him depends the investigation and appraisal of property and he is not under the constant observation of the manager or head of the organization. If he gives offense or makes an error, the manager is not handy to rectify it. The mistakes he makes may never come to the attention of the manager and good business is lost or business that might have been obtained is never gotten. Make sure the man you trust with this important position is competent, considerate of the feelings of others and above suspicion.

Paragraph 10, Article III—Evasion of Our Loan Laws. I do not believe we have a member in our association who needs to have this discussed on account of the manner in which he is conducting his own affairs but it might not be amiss to caution him of unscrupulous lenders who resort to unlawful and unethical methods. When such instances are found there should be no hesitancy in reporting them to the proper authorities and in lending all possible assistance in compelling these people to mend their ways, or change their business. Such concerns are detrimental to all doing a legitimate business as their unlawful and unprincipled acts are always broadcasted on the loud speaker and we have no opportunity to explain or reply.

In our relations with our employees it is not only necessary to instruct them in ethical conduct but every owner and manager should so conduct himself both in and out of his office that his may be a worthy example for his employees.

I believe it to be a rare instance in our organization where an employer is so unappreciative as not to advance his employees in proportion to their ability, efforts and progress. We find this verified in practically all offices by the fact that our employees are second to none in any other line of business in point of loyalty. This statement needs no corroboration other than the observation that those in our employ seldom leave the business and make but few changes. This is convincing evidence that their efforts and loyalty are being properly recognized.

In our relation with public officials, there is little to be said to the members of our Indiana organization as to their individual conduct but it might be well for each of us to be more alert in assisting to guard the business and dignify it before a public that is not able to distinguish between our members and nonmembers. The bit that we may do along this line in coöperation with public officials will do much to impress unscrupulous lenders with the necessity of obedience to the law.

Friendly coöperation with other lenders, both at home and in other cities is essential to our welfare. Harmony is the strength of our institutions and this can be maintained only by our being open and frank with each other and exchanging information on a strictly truthful basis, lending assistance when needed and never resorting to sharp practices for the sake of ridding ourselves of undesirable accounts.

As to "doubling," comment is unnecessary as I am sure that anyone who has tried it has found it extremely unprofitable to himself even though he had no regard for his competitor whom he materially injures.

Paragraph 6 of Article VI regarding our conduct with our competitors' patrons embraces some very good advice and I believe should be followed strictly to the letter. And I believe it is, generally, as most of us are too busy getting out business by legitimate methods to give up our time to unethical means.

If we will practice the Code as written in the first six articles, we will have little trouble in placing our business in the proper light before the general public.

Affiliation with commercial and civic organizations is a long step in the right direction as it affords a means of creating and disseminating favorable impressions of our business among people who are in the main nonborrowers and know little about it. And do not forget to contribute liberally, both in time and money, to the projects sponsored by these different societies for they are directed by men of sound judgment and reason and therefore demand our respect and are worthy of our support.

Paragraphs 3 and 4 of Article VII regarding the loaning of money for immoral or dishonest purposes and the identifying of ourselves with questionable enterprises are acts which I do not believe are practiced or condoned by any of our members, but to whatever extent they may be found, they should be severely condemned and blotted out.

False advertising is a thing that is most objectionable but within our membership in this state it does not exist to such a degree as to deserve devoting any time to it.

This code has been adopted by the American Association, hence it is worthy of being our code. It is a practical code, easy of application and advantageous to observe and practice. It is replete with rules for the ethical conduct of good business, so let us all subscribe to it by putting it into daily practice twelve months out of every year, to our success, to our mutual advantage and honor.

Mr. Austin Potter, Lima, Ohio: The Code of Ethics is a good thing but only as good as the members make it. If each man does not take the Code of Ethics into his own business, day by day, it won't do him any good. The only way by which you can make a practical application of the Code of Ethics is to apply it daily and thus it will work, not only to the advantage of the member, but also to his business and customers.

Mr. Hartz suggested that this Code of Ethics be revised in such a way that it could be put in a small frame, taking from it the important features, so that each member might place same in his office for the observation of his customers. Each member of the association will have one copy for every dollar paid into the association.

Mr. Farrington: I think the most practical way of putting this Code of Ethics into application at once is for the cities, which have not already done so, to get their members together more often and talk over this Code.

It was moved by Mr. Farrington that a committee be appointed to draft out the most important features in the Code, of Ethics and that same be sent to each member framed. Motion seconded and carried.

The committee appointed by the president consisted of R. C. Aufderheide, chairman; W. A. Zumpfe and R. F. Hartz.

WHY A TRADE EMBLEM IS IMPORTANT

By Mr. Fred E. Circle, Newcastle, Ind.

The reason a lot of people don't join our association is because they think we cannot do them any good, as an association. I think, by the means of a trade emblem, we cannot only do them a great good, but they cannot afford to stay away from the association. We men who come to the meetings are sold to the idea or we would not be here. I think our proposition is to sell this association to nonmembers and also to use the association as a means of letting the Public know that the loan company stands for something besides the actual profit derived from each and every transaction.

Do the people in your town know that you belong to the Industrial Lenders Association or do you just let them find it out from contact with your office?

I have prepared an emblem, setting forth the fact that we stand for fair and lawful methods. If that idea appeals to you men, I will go into further detail and tell you how you can get it.

Mr. Paul Hancock: I think the emblem would be worth while and a valuable thing for us to use. Some of the members now are using the national emblem and putting it on their stationery. Almost all organizations have some sort of emblem, which means something to them, and I think it would be a good thing for us.

Mr. Circle then displayed an official sketch, drawn by an engraver and ready for the plate. He stated that the Patterson Engraving Company of Indianapolis had worked with him on this sketch, without cost, with the understanding, if the convention does not care to take the emblem, there would be no expense attached to their work, but if the emblem is adopted, they, of course, would expect the job of the electrotypes. Mr. Circle continued: My idea is that it should, by all means be on the association's stationery and used on every piece of printing that goes out in the name of the association. This Code of Ethics that we are going to print should bear that emblem on the front cover. The individual members of the state association should be the only ones allowed to use it because it is a state emblem. If we make it our business to show that we are proud of the fact that we belong to this association and are advertising that we belong, the prospective customer gets it into his head that we have something worth while.

It was moved by Mr. Stratton that this matter of emblem for the state association be referred to the Board of Directors. Motion seconded and carried.

It was moved by Mr. Bloomberg that the association thank Mr. Circle for bringing this matter up. Motion seconded and carried.

HOW LONG SINCE YOU CHECKED YOURSELF UP?

By Roy F. Hartz

Mr. President and members of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association:

Apparently this subject may seem odd or queer to you, it did so to at least one member who was asked to accept this assignment. He replied that he did not care to deal with comedy. As I see this subject it is not comedy, but good common sense. Each of us has a yardstick by which we measure our success in life. No man likes to be preached to by his employer, but every man who amounts to anything takes off time once in a while to do a certain amount of preaching to himself. They have a yardstick (a mental yardstick, if you please) by which they measure their capacity. Whenever they find their attainments falling short of their requirements, they set about to increase their own size or the employer sets about to find some one who can measure up to the requirements.

Since 1913 when the first loan law regulating the loan business was enacted, we have constantly from year to year adopted new business methods, fundamental changes in the character of doing business and these fundamentals have and will be the instruments by which our business will be measured and raised by the public.

A great step forward is being made each year and the interchange of thoughts and ideas on loan questions at our State and National Conventions enable each of us to improve our own way of doing business. It is needless for me to tell you the many faults most of us possessed under the old régime.

So in marking with this 10th annual convention in our organized effort to improve our business, I personally feel the Check-Ups I will mention will do no harm, but will remind us again to be careful in all our relations with the public.

I realize further it is difficult for a loan man to avoid all of these Check-Ups, but these Check-Ups do not come from any one community. I believe they apply to all communities alike. They constitute, literally, a cross section of bad habits of Lenders, therefore, by contact they reveal the good habits which every Lender should try to cultivate.

1. Don't misrepresent—Your customer will sooner or later find you out. You can never tell how many persons you will send out to work against you. It is the kicker who is not known that does the most damage.

2. Don't slight a small loan—It is your duty to give the small borrower the same consideration and service as the large one. You never know when the small borrower will be a large one and how many customers he may send you.

3. Don't argue—Arguments often lead to the loss of temper by either you or your customer and that usually means the loss of a customer.

4. Don't contradict a customer—It is equivalent to calling them a liar. An affront which few people forget.

5. Don't be a grouch—If you are not feeling well, don't bring your frowns to the office. Your associates don't like them, neither does your customer.

6. Don't knock a competitor—If your customer mentions a competitor, if you cannot speak a good word, don't say anything.

7. Don't ask questions in such a way to make it easy for the customer to give the answer you don't want—This especially applies to collections. Your questions can always be worded in such a manner to compel the answer you want.

8. Don't permit your likes or dislikes from pleasing your customer—Remember at all times the customer is the one to please and not yourself.

9. Don't hurry—Take sufficient time to explain fully every detail which the customer should know. Get them to visualize your position with the company when payments are not made promptly.

10. Don't talk too much—You are not running a vaudeville show. It is not necessary to entertain your customers. Unless you are very personally acquainted with them, don't lead yourself into a lengthy conversation, that is needless. Other customers may be waiting for you and in a hurry. By all means know when to stop talking.

11. Don't act indifferently—If your approach is automatic it gives the customer an impression that you have been "drilled" and have no self judgment. How easy is this to do and how many of us approach a customer in an indifferent attitude. The public likes a certain amount of aggressiveness. Approach the window or the customer as though it was a pleasure to serve them and not as though you were just being paid to wait on them.

12. Don't fail to oblige—It is one of the best mediums to build your business. Be willing to go out of the way to favor a customer. Make them feel that you appreciate their business.

13. Don't touch your customer—It is ungentlemanly to touch a lady and it is uncouth to paw over a man. Keep your hands off the customer and your mind on your business.

14. Don't promise too much—It is far better to have the customer realize that you have under-rated your service than to have your attention called to a promise made when the application was made that has been broken.

15. Don't be a slouch—Don't wear a dirty shirt or collar or unpressed clothes. Don't slouch about the office. You must create enthusiasm. You can't do that if you look sloppy. No one likes to do business with a person whose appearance does not show prosperity.

16. Don't neglect a customer's complaint—The wagging tongue of a customer can do more harm than several dollars spent in advertising can do. Your best asset is a satisfied customer.

17. Don't get familiar with a new customer—Don't think you can judge them all at first sight. Play safe. Some people are touchy, meet them with a smile, study their personality and watch your step.

18. Don't worry about the failures of yesterday—If yesterday's business was not up to the standard, go out just a little harder to-day and to-morrow. Don't worry about it. Worry never accomplished anything except to cast a gloom over success.

19. Don't forget names and faces—It is a part of your business to remember names and faces. It makes a customer feel better to know that you have remembered his or her name. Apply this to your own self. Don't it make you feel good to go into a place where you only make purchases now and then and have them call you by your name?

20. Don't get angry—A good loan man never loses his temper. A judge once told me that the man who lost his temper first, the other one had an upper hand, for a person who loses his temper is not able to think as clearly and quickly as the one who remains cool. The cool-headed man usually accomplishes his purpose.

21. Don't be absent-minded when waiting on a customer—It is rendering poor service. Pay attention to the customer. They deserve it.

22. Don't be afraid of work—Work never hurt anyone. It is the persistent worker who finally arrives at the top rung of the ladder. The shirker is kidding no one but himself.

Now, just how many of these "Don'ts" are applicable to you. Check them over carefully. You will find that few days pass but what you are just as guilty as the rest.

The more "Don'ts" you consciously place against yourself, the more need for improvement and by the same token the fewer "Don'ts" you can put down against yourself, the nearer you come to being an ideal Lender and one who is continually applying the fundamentals to raise the standard of our business where it rightfully belongs.

I thank you.

Upon motion duly made and seconded, the meeting adjourned to reconvene this afternoon at 1:30 o'clock.

Thursday Afternoon Session

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Davies, President of the Association, at 1:30 P. M.

CAN DETAILS IN MAKING LOANS GO TOO FAR?

By Mr. O. J. Parker, Logansport

Sometimes I think the answer to this question rests with the management of the office or perhaps the location in which the office might be. In smaller places, it might be that you can go a little too far in detail.

Of course, it is necessary, in handling a loan, to know the man's full first name, initial and last name, his wife's name, her initial, their residence and where they came from. It is necessary to know the names of the children, if any, and grade in school. There are many things which a man might think he ought to know, in taking an application, which are not necessary.

I think it is just as important, however, for the lender to find out the credit standing of the applicant as it is to find out who he is, where he lives and if he owes anything on his furniture. There are a number of men who would borrow money from you, who don't owe any other loan company; they have their furniture all paid for, but if you look them up in a well-conducted Credit Bureau, you will find that they owe almost every merchant or tradesman in the city. That kind of man is not a good risk, to my way of thinking. If he beats the other fellow, he may not beat you on the first or second loan, but he will eventually.

I believe it is just as necessary for every loan office, in any location, to belong to some good Credit Bureau as to belong to their Loan Association and I further believe that every loan office that belongs to a Credit Bureau in his location should be willing to exchange credit information with that Credit Bureau.

I think, when the Credit Manager or his assistant calls for a rating on a certain individual, they should be willing to at once give all the information that they have concerning that man.

In reply to Mr. Parker's question: "What is the nominal loss on a $100,000 loan account?" Mr. Parker explaining that he meant the smallest average loss that is considered good business, Mr. Sherman replied that he considered the average there would be a little less than 1% for a year.

Mr. Aufderheide suggested that the net balance on the principal would be your loss.

November Convention City

The selection of a city for the November meeting of the Indiana Association was next declared in order.

Mr. Rose, on behalf of the Mayor of Martinsville and the Martinsville Association, invited the members to have their November meeting at Martinsville, Ind.

Mr. J. H. Aufderheide also recommended Martinsville for this meeting.

It was moved by Mr. Broughman that the semi-annual meeting of the Association be held at Martinsville. Motion seconded and carried.

AFFILIATED WITH RETAIL CREDIT MEN'S ASSOCIATIONS

By Mr. C. H. Wilcoxen, Ft. Wayne

I have been requested to prepare an article "Affiliated with Retail Credit Men's Association." This subject could perhaps be elaborated on in the form of a book, but I assure you my volume will be much smaller. Perhaps many of you gentlemen here have had experience with Retail Credit Men's Association but for the benefit of those offices located in cities who do not have a Bureau, I will try and give you our experience in Fort Wayne and the benefit the loan companies have derived from the association. To extend credit profitably there is one thing that we must know and that it this—is the applicant worthy of credit? The credit rating association is a great help in determining this fact. Generally speaking, the bureau is helpful in the following ways:

1. Invaluable in revising accounts.
2. Helps eliminate the undesirable.
3. Valuable when a customer asks for a renewal.
4. Gives the information and advice of those who know.
5. Discloses the accounts that are discounted or paid when due.
6. Lessening the loss to the lender through information.
7. Aids in keeping record on special accounts—a great percentage of them go wrong.
8. Keeps the credit files alive and right up to the date.
9. Tells when the customer is overloaded, or exact credit standing of borrower.
10. Tells when the customer is paying the new creditor promptly and allowing others to wait.
11. Sometimes discloses that one may be mistaken in the belief that he is the principal creditor.
12. Invaluable to houses selling small accounts where the agency rating is blank.
13. The cost of several years' experience in the bureau may be saved by one reciprocal.
14. The bureau reports are ante-mortem" and not "post-mortem" statements and are valuable to the members for use "before" instead of "after the fact." Actual, not guess.
16. The information assembled and disclosed is reliable and dependable as it is taken from active, live ledger accounts. It is up-to-date — no guess-work, no prejudice, no prophecies.

I suspect that the bureaus in the different cities do not function exactly the same, and I will try to tell you how the bureau in Fort Wayne operates. Naturally you are interested in what special benefit the loan companies derive from the bureau. There is a clearance with every loan company on every loan company on every application for a loan, twice a day. Thereby eliminating any duplication, also a clearance of all furniture stores, musical houses and electrical appliance houses such as sweepers, washers, etc., to ascertain if the merchandise is paid for. If the loan is made, furniture or musical dealers' account is paid, thereby creating a good will with these concerns by helping to clean up some of their past due accounts.

Immediately upon receiving an application, the data is phoned to the bureau such as name, address, wife's name, occupation, etc., and all applications reported before 10 A. M. the loan office receives the bureau's report not later than 1 P. M. All applications reported to the bureau before 3 P. M. is received not later than 5 P. M. of the same day. All the loan offices in Fort Wayne have agreed to, and are coöperating 100%.

I think the last report we have was that we only have three duplications in Fort Wayne, and I think when the loan offices first went into the bureau there was something like thirty duplications. This was about fifteen months ago, that all Fort Wayne offices joined the bureau.

The bureau issues a bulletin weekly compiling the following information: Bad checks issued, divorces applied for, divorces granted, non-responsibilities, births, deaths, skips that have been located, new arrivals, people leaving town, removals, addresses wanted, ratings wanted, also any derogatory information that might be interesting to persons extending credit.

We have a meeting each other Tuesday at luncheon. Here we get first hand information as accounts are discussed in open. This meeting has an attendance of about thirty-five to forty, yet we have a membership of about two hundred and fifty. We have an interchange with forty-eight bureaus in the state of Indiana and all bureaus in the United States. We have about 140,000 rating cards in the files. We not only get loan and furniture houses' experiences, but we get the data as to how they are taking care of their other indebtedness such as grocery bills, clothing, coal companies, etc.

The bureau is very valuable in locating skips as the public utilities such as the Electric Light, Gas and Telephone Companies are members and each day they send a report to the Bureau of the removal addresses that they have the day before, thereby saving the individual considerable time in locating what might be a skip.

To my mind, the bureau has made it possible that the loan companies coöperate with a more friendly spirit than they had ever done heretofore.

Mr. Clift: What effect does it have on a merchant if a party applies for credit and they find he has a $300 loan in a Loan Company?

Mr. Wilcoxen: Our credit men and furniture stores are glad to know that that man is worthy of credit and they will give him a loan. If a man does not have ability to pay, then I would suggest not loaning him or selling him, even if he does not owe anyone.

Mr. J. H. Aufderheide: I don't think they hold it against a man any more that he already has a loan.

Mr. Thompson: The Credit Rating Bureau in our town believe, when a man is passed for credit with one of the loan companies, after the applicant has been thoroughly gone into, he is a better subject for credit than they could make him, because they don't know the details.

Mr. Davies: We have a Rating Bureau at Kokomo, composed of 122 members, and that takes in almost every line of business. They are all helping each other. Last fall at the National Convention we had a retail credit man with us and he found out a lot about our business and is for the loan people and is coöperating with us in every way. Our banks in Kokomo are coöperating with us, too.

Mr. Wilcoxen: We have the Public Utilities with us and every day they send over a list of removals. The Telephone Company recently sent in 32 cut-offs for non-payment and that information helps us.

Mr. Davies: You generally get ratings from three or four lines of business; then it is up to the individual whether you want to make a loan or not.

Mr. Arnett: The Credit Bureau has gotten the Loan Companies up to a place where the Loan Companies can't do without them.

Mr. Liggett: I assisted in the Fort Wayne Bureau a great deal and worked on the Gary Bureau. In Dayton, Ohio, we have one of the best Bureaus that I know of in the West. All the information which we receive from that Bureau is helpful. I like to know all I can about a borrower and if I can educate him to be honest and pay his obligations, then I feel that I have accomplished something. Don't turn a man down because he owes some other accounts. We are allowed 3½% per month in order that we may take chances at times. Let us make all the loans we possibly can and help better the communities where these poor people live and give them a service.

HOW THE ASSOCIATION MAY AID IN ELIMINATING FRAUD AND CRIME BY THE CUSTOMER

By S. F. Smith, Evansville

It might be that the Association could help some, in the way of educational lines, such as the Indiana Lenders used some time ago, but I don't believe it would be well for any individual lender to start anything in the way of prosecution at the present time. Two weeks ago in our town, they prosecuted a man for obtaining a loan of $80 and selling the property. This affair has been continued in Court three times and I don't believe they can make a case of it.

Mr. Farrington: I was particularly interested in this question. The National Association of Credit Men, at this time, are raising a one-million-dollar fund for the prosecution of fraud in the commercial lines and it appeared to me that prosecution could be done in this line of business as well as other lines of business where fraud is perpetrated. For instance, the checks which come back two or three times, in the long run, are usually made good, but it takes a lot of time and trouble to make these checks good. Mr. Smith said it does not pay, in dollars and cents, to go into Court with an $80 fraud case. If you cannot afford to do that personally, why does not the Association take up this matter and refer it to the proper authorities? People don't seem to worry about moving their goods, upon which they have borrowed money, into another State. If this matter were turned over to the proper authorities, in the right manner, it would be handled, if you have the evidence. The Association can get this evidence by having somebody, whose business it is to do that, and thus take the responsibility away from the individual.

In regard to the bad check law. When this came up, in the Legislature, I don't think there was a member of this organization present. The least we could have done, as an Association, would have been to ask that this Bad Check Law be passed. It died at the last moment because there was more opposition to it than for it. A good "Bad Check Law" would relieve us of a lot of losses and trouble.

Mr. Hartz: Did the Retail Credit Men's Association endorse the Bad Check Law?

Mr. Farrington: The General Retail Credit Men's Association did endorse the Bad Check Bill.

Mr. Parker stated that they had trouble in Cass County in getting the Prosecuting Attorney to file affidavits.

Mr. Clift: Sometimes I question the wisdom of squeezing the last dollar. I think the reason we get 3½% is to take these losses when they occur.

In regard to this bad check proposition, if a party gives you a bad check once, the next time refuse his check. You won't have to refuse but once. Would it be wise for our Association to get the publicity which they would get in prosecuting a man for $50 or $75? I think it would be bad policy to take any steps to prosecute as an association.

Mr. C. H. Watts, for a number of years Secretary of the Pennsylvania State Association, was introduced to the convention:

Mr. Watts: I came to Indianapolis to-day to pay a great homage to one of your progressive members; to express my appreciation of the worthwhileness of the Aufderheides. Of course, I was anxious to meet all of you fellows but that feeling was mingled with a personal desire to pay tribute to the Aufderheides. You boys who live here probably don't appreciate them as much as we, who come from afar.

You know about their wondrous work in Indiana, but do you know of the stick-to-it-iveness with which one of the Aufderheide group handled the situation in Virginia? If you would know the story of kicks and bruises that can come from the enactment of laws—or the attempted enactment of laws, R. C. Aufderheide could tell you of his experiences in West Virginia. They licked him once and he went back and did the job truly.

I wonder if you fellows have left a page open on your Minutes to pay tribute to this youngster for his work in West Virginia? It is not easy to get Legislation and it is getting harder to retain what we have. You fellows in Indiana are not particularly interested in what is going on in Texas or Florida or Tennessee because you are entrenched by the splendid organization in Indiana. But men, as they enact a uniform small loan law in other states, it makes Indiana that much safer. Therefore, it behooves every man in this group to so conduct himself that when we, outside your State, ask your Securities Commission or whoever your supervising authority is: "What do you think of the Uniform Small Loan Law?" we will receive such an answer as will indicate a clean slate—and that answer is dependent upon the man down in the smallest community, as well as the largest.

Most of the States have had laws introduced to decrease the rate. Unless we are careful about the conduct of our own business, we will find this difficulty confronting us likewise.

When I listened to your President discussing Credit Rating Bureaus and then heard one man ask, "What is the good of it all?" I couldn't help but think, if he would come with me, he would understand the good of it. If we are to hold our line, it means "shoulder to shoulder."

The National Association is functioning but much of the tribute is not due to the National but to those who are giving their time and money to make the National Association possible; that it may stand up and defend the thing which you know to be right and just.

I am glad to be back here to-day and most humbly pay my tribute to one of your junior members, who has placed the Uniform Small Loan flag on the State of West Virginia. Long may he live, never to pull it down.

Mr. Hartz read a letter from the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, inviting the National organization to meet in Indianapolis in 1926.

It was moved by Mr. Swenk that we invite the National Association to meet in convention in Indiana next year. Motion seconded by Mr. Rose and carried.

Mr. Hartz stated that the National Association allows the State entertaining the National Convention $1,000 toward that purpose and the State is only allowed to spend $1,000 additional at the most.

CLEVELAND HAS AN EXCHANGE

As secretary of the Cleveland Industrial Lenders Association which was formed June 2d, I have been instructed to write you information regarding same, as it might be of some interest to the National Association to note that one more city has been making progress along these lines.

For the past year we have had an organization known as the Cleveland Loan Association. Under this organization we had been considering the formation of an Exchange Bureau similar to that operating in several other cities. At our meeting of June 2d, by-laws were passed providing for the formation and organization of such an Exchange, to be known as the CLEVELAND INDUSTRIAL LENDERS ASSOCIATION.

The purpose of the organization is twofold. The first provides for a Board of Governors appointed by the chairman to operate an Exchange Bureau for the members. The second purpose provides for the appointment of committees, for publicity, to secure new members, police the business, to tell and explain to the public what the Ohio Loan Association stands for, and to keep the loan business in Cleveland on an irreproachable plane.

According to our by-laws, we will have our Exchange in full operation by October 1, 1925.

L. J. Ingram, Secretary.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LENDERS EXCHANGE BUREAU

During the past month, a pamphlet prepared by A. L. Wick of Philadelphia, Chairman of the Committee on Retail Merchants Bureau, entitled "How to Organize a Lenders Exchange Bureau," has come from the press. It contains considerable valuable information for any group of lenders who desire to organize a local exchange and improve their business. Members of the A. I. L. A. can have a copy of this pamphlet for the asking from the National Secretary's office, without charge. Nonmembers can obtain copies for 10c each.

ILLINOIS

The bill permitting corporations to be organized for the purpose of lending money passed the Illinois legislature and by the signature of the Governor, June 19, became a law. Although this bill met with the organized opposition of some of the Chicago money lenders and had rough sailing for a time, there was no real argument that could be advanced to defeat it.

No other state where small loan laws regulate the business prohibit corporations from doing business under them and the lenders who opposed this bill on the ground that competition in the small loan business in Illinois would be increased will find their judgment was erroneous. Some people prefer to do business as corporations rather than as individuals or partnerships.

GROUP ADVERTISING

Here is the text of a nine and a half inch double column display advertisement which appeared in the Providence Bulletin and Pawtucket Times, April 21, 1925, that illustrates effectively the great possibilities of group advertising:

Why We Are Associated

Previous to January, 1924, there was little restriction on persons engaged in making small loans, and practically no protection for the borrower, against extortionate charges. Such circumstances naturally attracted lenders of an avaricious character who placed personal gain above every consideration of equitable dealing. This class of lender deserved, and was given the common appellation of "loan-shark." He thrived at the expense of the necessitous borrower and was privileged to exist only because he relieved the necessity of appealing to charity for financial assistance.

"The Russell Sage Foundation" investigated the lending situation—found that some system of small loan making was necessary and recommended the present "Uniform Small Loan Law" which restricts loan charges and places those concerns endorsing the law, under the regulation of the State Banking Department. The R. I. Industrial Lenders are affiliated with the national Chamber of Commerce and organized in conjunction with the national association, to make it possible for all persons of good character to borrow in amounts up to $300 in a safe, protected business manner, and to serve so completely that all may gratify their requirements without resort to objectionable borrowing methods.

A committee composed of R. F. Hartz, Chairman, W. R. Hancock, R. C. Aufderheide was appointed to prepare plans to bring the 1926 A. I. L. A. convention to Indiana. What have you to offer that will assist this committee. Why not make arrangements to attend this convention at Providence, R. I., September 2-6th. If your are contemplating attending forward your name to the chairman of this committee.

The subject mentioned by O. J. Parker, Logansport, of an attack on the authority of the Bank Commissioner to issue Licenses. The Secretary conferred with Mr. Johnson. He cited the acts of 1919, section 2, page 114. The assembly specifically named the small loan business in the transfer of certain duties to the department of Banking and authorized the Bank Commissioner to perform this duty instead of the Auditor of State. Should this question be raised again, refer them to the acts of 1919, section 2, page 114.

The secretary at the request of the executive committee conferred with Mr. Johnson to ascertain if it was possible to change the title of his office from Credit and Loan Department to Industrial Loan Department. Mr. Johnson advised this would be done and hereafter his department will be known as the Industrial Loan Department.

Since the convention two new applications for memberships have been made:

Lincoln Loan Co., Room 3, 739 Broadway, Gary, Ind., Inc.

Portland Service Co., Mer and Main Sts., Portland, Ind., Inc.

The committee appointed by Mr. Davies to draft the important features from the Code of Ethics will report next month.

The subject of Trade Emblem is being referred to the executive committee.

If this Bulletin is to be a success, it will depend upon the coöperation of the membership. It will be sent out about the 10th of each month. Send all communications intended for the Bulletin to R. F. Hartz, 347 Bankers Trust Bldg., Indianapolis.

WHY WE DO NOT GRANT LOANS TO ALL APPLICANTS

By T. F. Walsh

The fact that the greater number of people borrowing from us do not have the security, as it is shown by statistics that about eighty-six per cent of the population have no banking accommodations or do not possess the securities or property that would be required as collateral for bank loans and must seek elsewhere for credit, it becomes necessary for us to take security which is not gilt-edged. We sometimes find ourselves in a position where it is necessary to refuse some of the persons that apply to us for a loan.

I have, therefore, summed up a few of what I think are very good reasons for turning down some of the applicants. The wife who tries to obtain money without her husband's signature, or a confidential loan to wives or husbands should be discouraged. If the husband does not give the wife the money to pay the bills as was his custom and decides to pay the bills himself, she, not having the handling of the money, would be unable to pay. It would then be necessary to see the husband in regard to the account, and he would not be able to see why it was necessary for her to borrow. It may be the cause of a separation or the breaking up of a home.

Take a heavy drinker or a gambler, they are poor risks, and great care should be taken in handling this class of loans.

The husband or wife that runs around with other men and women, you find eventually separate or break up housekeeping, and when this happens one of them will sell about everything they own and you will have plenty of trouble trying to get your money. Personally, I do not like separations. I would sooner see any other kind of trouble, for when they separate chances are very slight of your ever getting your money.

We find persons applying for money where the reason for borrowing does not warrant us the making of the loan. I wish to cite a case where a party applied to me for money to buy another pleasure car with two already standing in the yard and very little furniture in the house. Needless to say, this party was turned down. There are times where persons will apply for larger amounts than is really necessary for them to have, and by talking the matter over with these parties we can, at times, show them where they can do with smaller amounts and still help them in the purpose they need the money for.

A boarder or a roomer is a big risk as they do not have any security and it is very easy for them to get out and very hard for you to find them after they do get out.

You will often find persons applying for a loan, with only a small income and quite a number of dependents, and to advance these people the amount they apply for would only keep them in debt and give them a lot of worry and trouble, not forgetting the worry and trouble they would put you to.

Again you will have the person starting out in business in a locality where there is already a number in the same business. He has a very poor chance of making a success and you are running a big risk in loaning to an applicant of this kind.

There are persons that will apply that are so far in debt when they do apply that a loan will not help them, but only put them deeper in debt.

You will also have the case of the drifter. A party just moving into a city who has no family ties and is only here while work is slow in the city where he came from. Care must be taken with this class of loan.

There are also many accounts that look bad on the face of them, but if taken and weighed a little you will find they have their good points. Some of these turn out to be very good accounts.

We could find many reasons for turning down loans, but the average loan man will overlook most of the minor reasons and will just take and weigh the major reasons before turning down an account.

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN LOAN MEN AND CREDIT MEN IN ALTOONA

By James P. Gill

While preparing this paper it occurred to me that a discussion took place on a similar subject, "Coöperation with Retail Credit Men" at the last regular meeting in Pittsburgh. And also that several notices have appeared in the Industrial Lenders News citing different instances where loan men and credit men had gotten together for their mutual benefit. So it may be that you will hear nothing new from me. Possibly a repetition of a few facts which emphasize the fact of the general recognition of our business by progressive business me. A word about the relation of our business to the credit houses might not be amiss before getting into the general situation as existing in this city. In the extension of credit in any business it is necessary to know, if credits are to be extended properly with a minimum loss, the general standing of the person applying, both morally, financially and also as to his ability and capabilities of caring for his present obligations. Last but not least his past record in taking care of obligations which have been extended him is important. We are all familiar with these considerations. Now in getting together this information, we all probably pursue the same policy, neighborhood look-up to verify occupation, standing in the neighborhood, etc., but in order for us to get an idea of how the man pays his bills, other than his grocery account, it is necessary for us to see the installment houses. We have found in Altoona, that there are very few people who apply to us for loans who have not bought furniture on the time payment plan. In fact the majority of them owe the furniture company money. The installment houses here do not issue leases like furniture companies in other cities. I do not mean to say that they do not issue leases, for they do, but they do not keep a complete record of the customer's payment on them. They issue small receipts which makes it difficult for us to see if the customer pays on the date he has promised the amount he has promised. We believe that it is better to see the credit man at the store or stores with which they deal any way, for he will have a complete record of the customer's dealing and in almost all cases can give you an idea of whether the customer is good or not. We experience in Altoona, what we believe to be unusual coöperation among credit men. In every store in town except one we are privileged to call at all times and we have found an unusual willingness on the part of the credit men to impart to us information as to their past dealings with the applicant we want information about. I believe in time we will convert this one man to the value of our service in the community, so that he too will work with us. In citing an instance or two of just what the merchants' attitude is towards our business, I will tell you of a personal experience. We had stopped in a branch store of a furniture installment house in Tyrone, Pa., which is about fifteen miles from Altoona, regarding an application. They informed us that he had only opened an account there recently and the amount. A few months later this particular customer went bad, and they were informed that he had skipped town so they went to the trouble to call us up and inform us that he had skipped leaving his furniture in the house and that they were going to recover what goods they had on lease with him. It suprised me to receive the call for I could hardly believe they would remember the call we had made originally regarding him. Another instance of what I believe to be real courtesy; our outside man stopped in another store located here, and without knowing it was met by the proprietor, the proprietor questioned him for a few minutes regarding the company and then took him back and introduced him to the credit department of the store informing them that they were to give him information whenever he came in. We have tried to reciprocate wherever we could. While we have never had a call from any furniture company for a reference on a customer, we have been able to give them information regarding skips, which has saved them some work. The idea and the thought behind whatever coöperation we have been extended has been due I believe to the desire of the credit men as a whole to prevent the getting of credit by people who are unworthy of it. A willingness to impart information about some one who is slow in order that they might not get credit with some one else has been apparent. In several instances where the customer has been slow with the furniture company we have made the loan with the insistence that the customer pay off this particuler account. We had some other reasons beside his general credit standing for making the loan, and we have see to it that he has cleaned up this account. They appreciate this, because when we make a loan we know a great deal more about the finances of the customer than they do when they extend him credit on a furniture account, and we have many instances where customers have been A No. 1 with us who were slow with them. I know of another instance with a local office where they were having a very hard time getting their money from a fellow to whom they had made a loan. Everything he had which was worth anything, was on lease and he knew they could not take the goods. He owed three different furniture companies. The manager of the office made a call on these companies and explained the situation to them. Each one of the installment house men told him that he was also behind with them. After talking to them and showing them the fellow was no good, they all agreed to recover what goods they had in the house unless he got busy and squared up these accounts. I do not know what the final outcome was but I believe the fellow paid up.

Out of the four loan companies operating in this city, two of them belong to the County Credit Bureau, and attend the credit men's meetings regularly. At these meetings the various credit men turn in a list of the skips they have had since the previous meeting, and the list is read aloud. In quite a few instances we have been able to tell them where the people were that they were looking for. This sort of coöperation helps along the good will too, for it shows that we are not after something for nothing and that we are willing to go along with them and help them if we can also.

The situation in Altoona, may be different from most other cities. Although we have over 65,000 population everybody seems to know everybody else, due I believe to the fact that they are nearly all railroad workers. The business section of the city is small and you could not engage in business in it without everybody else in business in it, knowing about vou. And we believe that it is this acquaintanceship which has paved the way for this good feeling.

OUR CREDIT SITUATION

By Ned W. Gibney

Altoona embodies an unabridged field for the manipulation of legitimate credits. Its characteristics are unusual, not to say unique; and it is my belief that circumstances, such as I am about to relate do not prevail elsewhere.

For the purpose of conveying to your minds the potentiality of this city as a credit province, allow me to cite a few statistics in point.

The total population numbers sixty-seven thousand, eight hundred, seventy-two, with equivalent community drawing power. Approximately seven and one-half per cent constitutes our foreign element.

A splendid record is displayed in home buying pursuits. It is reflected by the highest percentages, population considered, to be found in the United States. An answer to this is apparent, in part, when we realize that one hundred and sixteen real estate concerns, mortgage companies and building and loan associations, help largely to make this vast scale possible. Our city has more building and loan associations than any other of its size in the United States. There are forty-four such associations, taking in from two hundred and twenty-five to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars per month. Approximately 70% of Altoona's home owners have purchased their homes through the aid of these associations. Their far-seeing and lucrative investments indirectly sponsor home buying projects.

In addition to real estate companies, we boast many retail credit stores and installments houses, viz: three hundred and seven grocery stores, nine furniture stores, six clothing stores, etc. It might be well to say that 85% of our business is conducted on credit basis. The alacrity of our credit extension supplies these facts and figures of which we are duly proud.

Gentlemen, you might ask, "how can we account for the stability of our buying power?" The best solution is that Altoona is principally a one industry city. Ninety per cent of our wage earners are employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in operating the largest car shops in the world. Average figures show that the employees wages vary from $75.00 monthly for the lowest type of shop labor, to $250.00 or more for locomotive engineers and skilled mechanics.

One of the outstanding features of our credit situation is, the majority of collections are made on railroad pay days which fall on the seventh working day after the fifteenth and last day of each month. Every credit man knows, if he does not receive his installment within three days after pay day, it is fairly certain he will not receive it until the following pay. Practically all our business hinges on this semi-monthly pay schedule, alloting us six days each month to collect our installments.

Another favorable item about Altoona as a city of credit, is the fact that its industry is so distinctly a fixed one, the business houses are rarely troubled with floaters, and through the excellent coöperation of our local credit men, the privileges of credit are denied to all debtors of questionable veracity.

As a class the people of Altoona live well for wage earners and under such a well regulated system of employment are able to afford the best of home standards. They are inherently a good paying body and their incomes so regulated, they can easily calculate the burdens they assume.

PUBLICITY

Chicago Commerce, June 6 issue contained the following ad.:

She Saw the Opportunity
We Furnished the Money

She started making candy at home and selling it to the neighbors to earn some extra money.

The demand was such as to encourage her to start a retail store down town. She needed money but had no banking connection.

We were impressed with her opportunity and furnished the money—a small amount which was paid back in monthly installments out of profits.

Today she enjoys a reputation second to none in the candy business with several well established stores—and incidentally a bank account of no mean proportions.

This is only one of any number of cases of a similar nature that it has been our pleasure to be a party to.

If you have friends that need anywhere from $10 to $300 to take advantage of an opportunity, refer them to us.

The members of this association are men of high character and the business is under the supervision of the department of Trade and Commerce of Illinois.

ILLINOIS INDUSTRIAL LENDERS
ASSOCIATION

MAINE

On May 20, Governor Brewster, at Augusta, nominated Hon. John G. Smith, the Mayor of Saco, as State Bank Commissioner. This Banking Department licenses industrial lenders, all of whom in Maine are now individuals and partnerships, except the remedial society in Portland known as the Peoples Loan Co., which received a legislative charter a good many years ago, and is backed by well-known business and professional men in that city.

FLORIDA

The uniform small loan bill was passed by the Florida House of Representatives on final reading May 30 by vote of 46 to 3. On June 1 the bill passed the Senate 23 to 3. June 4 the Governor approved the bill which will become effective September 1. The bill is the uniform draft which provides for banking department supervision and the scientific rate. It also has the well-known preamble very much like the Arizona and Virginia laws.

TENNESSEE

The uniform small loan act was passed recently almost unanimously by both the Tennessee House and Senate, but the Governor vetoed the bill. The Tennessee constitution provides that a bill becomes a law unless the Governor shall veto same and give his reasons within five days (Sundays excepted) after passage. It appears that the legislature was not in session on Saturday, and the Governor evidently assumed Saturday did not count The courts will be asked to pass upon the matters as to whether the uniform small loan law is in effect or not. After the Governor vetoed the bill, the Senate passed the bill again over the Governor's veto, but in the House it fell short of seven votes of having at least three-quarters of the majority. The interest supporting the bill in Tennessee consist of several loan offices in that state who hold membership in A. I. L. A., and they received active and helpful coöperation from several other money lenders who prefer to have the business legalized and dignified.

The Governor had an amendment passed by the legislature amending the 1917 small loan law which regulates loans upon security of personal property only, and had it to include purchase of salaries and wages. The amendment also included placing the enforcement of the 1917 law in the hands of the State Commission of Banking and Insurance. The authorities thereupon proceeded by injunction and closed up all loan offices in Nashville and Memphis, and court litigation is on in those cities. It is notable that the salary buying concern which managed to induce the Governor to veto the uniform act, had their offices all closed under the 1917 act as amended in 1925, and most of them have been compelled to take out licenses under the 1917 act.

WEST VIRGINIA

In West Virginia the uniform small loan law was enacted almost unanimously at a recent session of the legislature, and the Governor approved the bill April 10, the act to be known as Chapter 35, Laws of 1925.

The West Virginia Industrial Lenders Association gave moral support to the bill.

This represents the first instance where a State Association of Lenders favoring the uniform small loan law, was formed in advance of legislation and A. I. L. A. approved of its official affiliation with it.

THE LOAN COMPANIES PROGRESS IN THE NEXT FIVE YEARS

By David Armm, of Patterson, N. J.

Upon receipt of a letter from Mr. Irish, requesting me to say a few words to you on the subject, "What Progress will Loan Companies make in the next Five Years," I remarked, another Irish after a Jew, nevertheless, I considered that the Jew's keeness is a match against Irish wit, so I accepted his request and will endeavor to give you my opinion on the subject.

Will hostile Legislation be enacted? Will the Bankers attempt to put us out of business? How do we stand in the public's esteem? Will we be benefited by working against each other? The answer to my questions depends on the methods and conduct of you and me. In a few words the next five years hold for us a store of big successful years.

There has been in the last few years an influx to the Industrial Lenders' line, due to the profits made by these people during the late war in other lines. Through the readjustment to pre-war conditions a good many have been left with sums of money on hand and no immediate safe outlet for it. Those that chose the Loan business we hope will be an honor to us, but just as the tide rises and falls, carrying and bringing with it the good and the bad, so will our ranks be filled with good and bad. The rising of the tide will eventually flood the rifraff and drive them from our ranks, while the good will remain among us.

Lenders have existed since the Creation of Man. It is recorded that the Indian would give one of his fellowmen a trinket or some other article for the temporary loan of his fellowman's bow and arrow, boat, mocassins or blanket which might have struck his fancy or was temporarily needed by him.

There is no doubt that the Loan Companies are filling a very urgent need. As the cities and the rural communities grow, their growth will be felt by the lenders through the increased demands for loans. We ought to prepare ourselves for more rigid examinations by the Banking Department, stricter regulations, and in fact spasmodically, bills will be introduced in the various Legislative bodies, by so-called public saviours, who through their gift of speech will be able to mislead unenlightened members of the governing bodies, bankers and philanthropic organizations trying to induce them to eliminate us. Regardless of these facts the Loan business will flourish and it's degree of success will be limited if we pursue a plan of keeping the people and those that I have mentioned in ignorance of our true purpose and need.

It is to our interest to encourage the elevation of the spirit and public confidence in the Lenders by placing the business on the highest pedestal of public esteem and opinion, so that when a man says, "I am a Lender," it shall be considered by the public in an honorable manner instead of with scorn. How can we place ourselves in this position? Only through the encouragement of stricter laws and conditions for the procuring and the operation of licenses, the sincerity to the cause by the lenders themselves and through a campaign of public education. I will endeavor to bring home to you a few facts that those in the note end of the business are well acquainted with and which are only a few of the stepping stones to the future success of our business.

For instance, my personal contact is almost exclusively with the small butcher, grocer, hardware dealer, tailor and in fact includes a list of small tradesmen which time will not permit to mention. In the minds of these men the lender is considered a public benefactor regardless of the reasonable interest costs attached to loans, because they get quick action and receive the money when they need it the most, carrying them through an emergency. In fact all of us have saved a good many of this class from bankruptcy, from unpleasant embarrassments and have relieved worried minds by lifting their temporary financial troubles from their shoulders.

We have done much to help the credit standing of these people with their wholesale dealers, and jobbers, upon whom their very existence depends. I am well aware that there are among the lenders a good many who believe that the note lenders should be eliminated. In my mind the honorable note lender is doing much to promote the future of the loan business, more so, than he is credited with. The class of small merchants that I have mentioned become free advertisers for the note lenders telling their small neighboring tradesman the advantages of small payments accepted and the long term for the repayment of the loans. They are directly aiding the Chattel Lender by directing their customers to them and through their efforts the Industrial Lenders are receiving a benefit which money cannot pay for.

Under the conditions which I have only slightly touched can it be possible for the Loan business to become extinct? After considering the conditions the answer must be that the future of the Loan business will continue to grow and eventually will be considered among the nation's largest and most honorable business. In fact, in the next five years we can expect a large increase in the volume of our business and, in proportion to the increased volume of our business the number of Lenders will also increase. Each year's business will be far ahead of the preceding one. We may also see large numbers of special branch lenders added to our rank and file. By that I mean that the time is rapidly coming when Industrial Lenders will probably specialize in catering to particular lines. Some will handle the small grocers, some the clothier, some the baker and so on.

"We Are Still in the Making"

In closing let me remind you of one of the proverbs of the fathers of our country that "In union there is strength," therefore, we must strengthen our union along the lines of best endeavors, regardless of whether the resistance be weak or strong. Our foundation must be reinforced so that our cause may be able to face the storm of colossal undertakings and constructive work of you GENTLEMEN, the pioneers of one of the nation's largest enterprises, placing it in the foremost of Industrial life—to be placed in that position—by you and me—the Lenders themselves.

MEMBERS OF THE RETAIL MERCHANTS BUREAU COMMITTEE TAKE NOTICE

In the January issue of the LENDERS NEWS you printed a letter, written by me as Chairman of the Committee on Retail Merchants Bureau. It had been the intention of this Committee to work out a country-wide campaign that would result in a better understanding and friendlier contact between lenders and merchants in general and especially the members of the Retail Credit Men's National Association.

Our problems are identical, we are all in the credit business and what is good for the merchant and banker is good for the lender. The lenders' knowledge of collecting, locating skips and saving losses should be valuable to the merchant and banker.

With a better acquaintance and understanding between us and a closer coöperation we could and would accomplish results that would naturally be conducive in mutual good.

Following the appearance of my letter in the News, I wrote to the chairman of every state association asking him to appoint a subcommittee chairman in each city to assist in the work. He was to surround himself with the lenders in his community who would meet the merchants in his locality and let them know that we could be of mutual assistance to one another, that we would be pleased to assist in the locating of skips, save them the making of bad accounts by furnishing evidence of a past record that should deprive the unreliable debtor of additional credit and by mutual agreement pay off their delinquent accounts by furnishing the debtor with funds to make this possible, thereby enabling the merchant to invest his capital and we take the responsibility of collecting our account.

A number of the state chairman have reported to me of having appointed committeemen. Lack of time to devote to this work makes it necessary for me to appeal to these men through the LENDERS NEWS for data as to their accomplishments in their contact with the merchants, giving me concrete cases of being helpful and their experience in general. Wherever a committeeman has been appointed there should be possible a report of his activities.

I appreciate your assistance in broadcasting this request as I do not find the time to communicate directly with each committeeman.

THE LURE OF NEW ENGLAND

Here in this corner of our country, nature, history and literature have combined to produce a vacation region of surpassing interest.

Distances between points of interest are not great. Within easy reach of Providence are to be found the world-famed Newport and Narragansett Pier, where nature and wealth have combined to bring forth beauty and where society makes its summer capitol. At no greater distance from the seat of the convention is historic Plymouth, where the pilgrims laid the foundation of an enduring State; and Cape Cod, quaint, picturesque, delightful. Just beyond lie Salem with its Witchhouse, colonial architecture, House of Seven Gables and memories of subtle Hawthorne; Marblehead, with its rock-bound coast; and old Gloucester, famed in song and story.

Boston, only forty-five miles from Providence, appeals to every American with an interest in the beginning of our national life. Here patriotism's fires burned brightly. Here the hallowed places have been preserved as nowhere else in America. On every hand are found the memorials of the heroic past. Near to Boston is Lexington, one of the most historical towns in America, and enticing in its rural charm, is Concord, world-renowned by the literary genius of Emerson, Hawthorne, Thoreau and Louise Alcott, and immortalized by the Minute Men of 1775 who here

> Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
> And fired the shot heard 'round the world.

Great names and great deeds have immortalized these villages and spread their fame across the seas. Here one treads on sacred ground and once again one goes to school to learn the love of liberty and country.

New England's charm is ever in evidence. Her stately elms, her quaint towns, her picturesque homes by the countryside, her opulence, her verdure-covered mountains, her beautiful valleys, her rugged coasts all combine to make this region the motorists' paradise, the vacationists' opportunity.

Providence, the Convention City of 1925, will win you. Here the past and the present sit side by side, making a dual appeal to the tourist. Modern hotels, theatres, shops and factories and one of the most beautiful parks in the land tell of the initiative and progress of the community while the heritage of by-gone days flash upon the inner eye the story of the past. Brown University, built upon the hill, antedates the establishment of the Federal Government. The First Baptist Meeting House, founded by Roger Williams, and a rare specimen of Sir Christopher Wren's genius is the oldest Baptist Church in the Western Hemisphere. The Old State Capitol where Rhode Island declared her independence at Philadelphia stirs the imagination. Beautiful and modern residences stand side by side with fine colonial houses along elm shaded streets.

Combine business with pleasure, get the inspiration old New England can give you and at one and the same time, become better acquainted with the members of the trade and with the lure of New England.

LAST CALL FOR PROVIDENCE

Preparations for the Eleventh Annual National Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association began immediately after the adjournment of the Baltimore Convention last September, and throughout the year the committees in charge have given considerable attention to the arrangements incident to the big annual national event. Many of us who attended the Baltimore Convention remember the unique way in which the members from Rhode Island pressed their invitation for the next National Convention and how by their persistence, even though normally the 1925 Convention should have gone to the Middle West, Providence carried off the honors. This same spirit has gone with the members in New England as the months have gone by and from time to time it has been possible for us to print some parts of the propaganda furnished us relating to the advantages of Providence as a convention city and all the other attractions which one might desire.

Well, the day is not far distant when National Chairman Aufderheide will call the meeting to order in the Providence-Biltmore Hotel, for everything is arranged to go off on scheduled time beginning with registration, September 1st, and the opening of the Convention at 9 o'clock, Wednesday morning, September 2d. From that time on, there will be something doing all the time. Reverend Holyoke, of the Calvary Baptist Church, Providence, will render the invocation, and the Honorable Joseph H. Gainer, Mayor of Providence, will welcome the delegates to his city. Responses will be made by National Chairman Aufderheide on behalf of the American Association, and possibly W. G. Wood will respond for the entertaining local State Associations. Interesting reports of the officers and committees will follow and the first session will break up at noon when there will be a get-together convention luncheon to which all visiting members, their wives and children will be invited. The luncheon speaker will be Richard B. Watrous, General Secretary of the Providence Chamber of Commerce.

Wednesday afternoon will be taken up with papers on legislation by Messrs. Hilborn of the Russell Sage Foundation; R. C. Aufderheide, who had charge of the successful West Virginia campaign; and B. E. Henderson, who was in charge of the Michigan campaign. It is possible also that we will hear from representatives who were interested in the successes of Florida and Tennessee. Mr. Leon Henderson, the newly appointed Associate Director of the Division of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation, will be present and make some remarks. L. E. Pope will discuss "The Value of Uniform Papers," while Fred B. Snite, a man of long and practical experience, will discuss "The Loan Business as a Vocation."

Thursday morning will be given up largely to a discussion of relations with retail credit men, in which A. L. Wick, Chairman of the Retail Merchants' Bureau Committee; D. J. Woodlock, Secretary and Treasurer of the Retail Credit Men's National Association, and J. D.

Burwell, of the Dayton Industrial Lenders Association, will have a very important part and will have valuable suggestions to offer. Thursday afternoon, C. H. Hood of Baltimore will give his views on the subject, "Relations Between Headquarters and the Field Men." Charles J. Bernstein, Bangor, Maine, is down for a semi-humorous discussion on what he styles "The Bone of Discontention." W. R. Hancock of Indianapolis will give his ideas of "Why the National Organization"? Edward M. Steimle will outline "The Georgia Publicity Campaign," and Tillou Von Nunes, a prominent lawyer of Atlanta, will discuss "The Relations of Legal Principles to the Economic Conditions of Industrial Small Loans." P. B. Reeves, Pittsburgh, Chairman of the Pennsylvania Association, will be the author of a paper entitled "Limitations of Industrial Loan Service."

Thursday evening we will hold the usual Convention banquet, after which we will be addressed by two or three prominent speakers. Dancing will follow the speeches.

All day Friday, September 4th, has been given up for the trip to Newport, the famous society summer resort. Arrangements have been made for seeing all the sights and having luncheon and dinner at the water resort. There will be some speeches by local business men and there will be plenty of time for amusement. No business will be undertaken on any part of Friday. Saturday morning, the Convention will continue with any unfinished business that may be before the Convention, and for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year.

It is planned and expected that time will permit during the business sessions to permit a number of practical subjects to be discussed.

The National Executive Committee has approved a suggestion that prizes be offered to the three "outside men" or whatever they may be styled, who turn in briefly stated their experience covering "The Hardest Collection I Ever Made." The prizes will be $25 for the first prize, $15.00 for the second prize, and $10.00 for the third prize. A committee will be selected from delegates to pass on the relative merits of the papers submitted. The National Executive Committee was persuaded to favor this suggestion on the recommendation of those who believed the outside men are neglected when it comes to recognition for services rendered. It is hoped that they will be encouraged by this offer and that many will participate in the contest. The purpose is to read the communications during the Convention. Any who desire to participate in this contest will send in their experiences to Mr. E. LaGueux, Secretary of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association, 76 Dorrance St., Providence, R. I., at once.

Interest as usual centers in the attendance trophy, and it is said that the rivalry between the New England States will be very keen, as this year is the first since 1916 that the national organization has met in New England, and all the states situated in that part of the country hope to capture the cup. This contest is decided on the percentage of members of the American Industrial Lenders Association in good standing each State Association has present at the Convention.

HOTEL RESERVATIONS

If you want to be sure of first-class hotel accommodations at the Providence-Biltmore, we advise you not to delay a day longer in writing for reservations. This is a large hotel and up to date in every respect but we are expecting a large crowd so that the capacity may be taxed. Rates in the Providence-Biltmore are $3.50 and upwards per day single; $6.00 and upwards per day, rooms with double bed, and $7.50 per day and upwards for rooms with twin beds. Every room has a bath and circulating ice water. Owing to the unusual construction of the hotel, every room has direct outside exposure.

CREDIT UNIONS

According to Roy F. Bergengren, Executive Secretary of the Credit Union National Extension Bureau, Boston, Mass., credit union laws have been enacted in five states during the 1925 legislative session. Iowa, Minnesota, West Virginia, Michigan, and Illinois were the states to approve of this legislation. A bill is now pending before the Georgia Legislature. The objective of the Credit Union National Extension Bureau, Mr. Bergengren says, is to secure the enactment of credit union laws in twenty-four states, in twenty-three of which laws have been enacted already. As soon as the twenty-fourth state has been added, legislative work will be dropped and all their resources will be devoted to their organization program.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

HARRISBURG

January 28, 1925.

Mr. G. H. Orth, Chief,
Bureau of Private Banks,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir: I am in receipt of your letter asking "whether or not the licensee under the Small Loans Act, after his license certificate has been surrendered or the license year has expired without renewal, is permitted to collect interest at the rate of 3½% per month upon loans made before the expiration of his license."

The Act of June 17, 1915, P. L. 1012, known as the Small Loan Act, provides for the loaning of money in sums of $300 or less by any person or persons, partnership, association, or corporation within this commonwealth who shall comply with the requirements of the act.

Section 1A provides for obtaining a license for carrying on the said business, and also provides that

> "The said license shall be issued by the Banking Commissioner and shall expire the first day of June next following the date of its issuance."

Section 2 provides for the rate of interest which may be charged on such loans. The rate of interest allowed to be charged is much higher than the usual rate of interest allowed by law. To charge the rates alowed by the Act of 1915 is a privilege conferred upon a class, namely, those who comply with the provisions of the act and are licensed, and the privilege is to be exercised only while the license is held. Any others exercising any of the rights conferred by the act are acting without authority and against the explicit requirements of the statute.

It will be borne in mind that the statute is a penal one and is to be strictly construed and all of its requirements observed.

In order to charge more than 6%, the legal rate of interest in this state, the person so charging must have lawful authority to do so. This the Act of 1915 gives to persons granted the benefits of that act under a license issued by the Banking Commissioner, as required by law, but with the expiration of the license the privileges granted expire and the licensee has no right to do any of the things which he had the right to do only when holding a license. This includes collecting interest at a rate exceeding 6% on loans made before the expiration of the license.

In Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co. v. Bales, 92 Pa. 352, an insurance agent duly licensed, after the expiration of his license, collected premiums on contracts made while he was licensed. The Supreme Court held that he had no right to collect such premiums and that every act as an insurance agent after the expiration of his license was unlawful and without authority.

I, therefore, advise you that a licensee under the Small Loans Act has no right after the expiration of his license to collect interest in excess of 6%, even though the loans were made before the expiration of the license.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) J. W. Brown,
Deputy Attorney General.

DETROIT LENDERS ORGANIZE EXCHANGE

For several years Detroit lenders have talked of an Exchange, but no definite action was taken until a meeting was called several months ago, at which a committee was appointed to prepare a plan of organization. On the first of May an organization known as the Detroit Lenders Clearing House Association came into existence. Officers were elected and authorized to purchase necessary equipment to place the Clearing House into operation.

Because of the large number of open accounts in each of the eight members of this organization, considerable time was consumed in preparing the records and placing them on file. On June 22nd the Exchange opened for business. This Exchange is operated similarly to those in Pittsburgh and Indianapolis. The following are officers and directors: J. J. Bentley, Carl F. Metz, Charles E. Macbeth and Frank Cady.

MICHIGAN ASSOCIATION

A special meeting of the Michigan Association was held in Detroit at the Detroit Union League Club on Thursday, May 28th. This meeting was called for the purpose of discussing and explaining the provisions of the Uniform Law which becomes effective in this state on August 27th.

The meeting was well attended by both member and non-member licensees.

The following licensees joined the State Association at this meeting: Ann Arbor Finance Company, Ann Arbor; Community Finance Service, Inc., of Flint and Grand Rapids; Fidelity Loan Company of Battle Creek; Personal Finance Company of Lansing and the Standard Credit Company of Flint. This brings the total membership of the Michigan Association to thirty-four.

STATE LENDERS ASSOCIATION BELIEVES IN SMALL LOAN LAW

So Declares H. L. White, Chairman of Association in Interview

No More Than 3½ Per Cent Can Be Levied on Loans of $300 or Less

Believes New Bill Will Do Much to Do Away with Abhorred Loan Shark

Members of the West Virginia Lenders Association are unanimous in their approval of the state Uniform Small Loan Law which went into effect on July 1st. Harry L. White, chairman of the State Association and manager of the State Loan Company here, says that the law will stabilize the loan business in West Virginia and will tend to abolish the much abhorred "loan shark" entirely.

The law provides that an interest rate of not more than 3½ per cent be levied upon a borrower of $300 or less, that a loan dealer must take out a license with the state for permission to loan sums of $300 or less, and that the loan company must place a $1,000 bond with the state licensing official for the use of the state and of any person who may have a cause of action against the company. The law does not affect banks, trust companies, building and loan associations or licensed pawnbrokers.

Action Tardy

Mr. White pointed out that West Virginia was rather tardy in the passing of the bill. He said that the state was twenty-fourth in the Union to put such a law in effect, but that loan sharks had not been especially active here, which might explain failure to enact the law a number of years ago.

"By act of legislature," he said, "many states have enacted the Uniform Small Loan Law, or other practical anti-loan shark legislation, the effect of which has been to eliminate the loan shark evil in each state where it was adopted, and to encourage the establishing of reputable money-loaners for loans of $300 or less, repayable in monthly instalments, under conditions fair to both borrower and lender.

"In states where no loan laws exist," he continued, "many loans have been made where it was found that charges were made on the borrower which equaled as high as 1,000 per cent a year, and there were some at even more ruinous rates. It is needless to say that the state legislature has throttled such movements, if there were any in West Virginia, by the passing of the law."

Mr. White went on to explain that it will also keep persons from going into the business with a small amount of capital. "I have known instances when men with about $10,000 in capital started up in business and made fortunes out of their investments by charging unusually high rates," he said.

"The present rate of 3½ per cent means that only those who expect fair returns on their investment will venture into the field, and it also means that they will have to be backed up by a large amount of capital.

Protects Borrower

"The law also protects the borrower as well as the lender. The lender will not be permitted to foreclose on the borrower's household furniture unless the note be signed by both the husband and wife, and in case there is a written agreement with the lender that in case of nonpayment the loan company has the right to extract what is due at a rate not more than 10 per cent of the salary. In many former cases the entire envelope was taken," he said.

"And we are also benefited in respect to payments. The law provides the 3½ per cent be paid on unpaid balances. This means that the prompt payer, the man who pays promptly pays his 3½ per cent, while the man who comes in in a few days or perhaps at the end of a month, must pay the accumulated interest from the day the note was due until his time of payment.

"There is no doubt in my mind that the time will come when every state in the Union will have adopted small loan laws similar to that which passed the West Virginia legislature. It is the only solution to small loans."

The bill was passed by the state legislature on April 1st. Prior to its passing, the opposition to it was trifling. What opposition there was, was based on the contention that money is as much a commodity as are butter and eggs and that the rate of interest or price should be regulated according to the law of supply and demand.—Wheeling Daily News, July 8, 1925.

HAWKINS TO APPEAL. GIVEN 15 YEARS

Alleged Head of Mail Fraud Scheme Also Fined $10,000 by Federal Judge Baltzell—Will Not Be Eligible for Parole

Morton S. Hawkins, former president of the defunct Hawkins Mortgage Company, must spend the next fifteen years in Federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan., Judge Robert C. Baltzell ruled in Federal Court to-day. Hawkins, in addition was fined $10,000.

This sentence, one of the heaviest ever imposed in Federal Court here, was given after Hawkins was found guilty by a jury Friday on charges of conspiracy to use the mails to defraud and use of the mails to defraud.

Starts Appeal Move

Hawkins immediately started preliminary moves to appeal. Appeal bond was set at $50,000. He has twenty days in which to provide this bond, and in the meantime he will be kept in the Marion County jail, where he has been held the past few weeks.

The indictment against Hawkins contained fifteen counts charging use of the mails to defraud, and one count charging conspiracy to use the mails to defraud. He was given five years on each of the fifteen counts, and two years on the conspiracy charge, a total of seventy-seven years. However, only fifteen years will be served cumulative, and Hawkins' term is therefore only fifteen years. He will not be eligible to parole until the end of that time.

Fined on Each Count

The fine given was $1,000 on each count, but only $10,000 will be cumulative.

J. S. Denny, attorney for Hawkins, filed a motion for a new trial, immediately after the sentence was announced. When Judge Baltzell overruled this motion, a motion in arrest of judgment was filed, and a ninety-day period was allowed for filing of a bill of exceptions.

Hawkins' sentence marks the end of what is said to be a nation-wide swindle, alleged to have mulcted many individuals of a total of $6,000,000. Many of the victims were widows.

Hawkins Jumps Bond

On the eve of his trial in Federal Court here in 1924, Hawkins jumped bond, and fled to Ohio, where he fought extradition until a short time ago.

Hawkins stood before the judge when he received his sentence, his hands in his pockets, and his eyes looking to one side.

"I have nothing to say," was his comment when he received his sentence.

Fourteen of his associated and fellow officers of the organization have been convicted and the cases of twelve are now pending in the Circuit Court of Appeals at Chicago.—Indianapolis Times, July 6, 1925.

THE BANKER AND HIS EXCHANGE BUREAU

By A. L. Wick

The interest in exchange bureau matters continues. Throughout the country we hear of the good results obtained through the exchange of ideas, with lenders, retail credit men and bankers. We find that lenders are not alone in their effort to improve conditions surrounding their particular business and with a keen desire to be helpful to the public at large.

It has been found, that with credit too easily obtained, the borrower or purchaser gets into a financial condition where they find it impossible to extricate themselves. It behooves the business man, who does a credit business, to make it possible for the borrowing class to secure credit beyond their ability to pay. We find that merchants, by one means or another, participate in a clearing house or retail credit bureau. We find too, that bankers have problems identical to our own, and they too have found it necessary and beneficial to establish credit bureaus. This desire of the merchant, banker and lender, has existed for a long time. They have been surrounded with helpful knowledge and have known the thing needful to bring about a definite plan in which everyone might participate, thereby creating a wholesome desire to be helpful to the borrower and save themselves heavy losses. This is proven by a statement of Mr. C. A. Chapman, President, First National Bank of Rochester, Minnesota, made in his address before the Nebraska Bankers' Association—"The great weakness of American banking in general is that we have so utterly failed, until recently, to make the great mass of experience available to all those engaged in similar undertakings throughout the nation. Our individualism was so intense that we preferred, each one, to buy and dearly purchase, our experience, when valuable precedents were already available." So with the lenders. They all know what is needful, but they hesitate for one reason or another, to take part in the beginning of an effort to improve conditions and in most cases it is based on selfish motives.

The reason why an exchange bureau cannot be quickly organized in most cases, is a suspicion and a feeling of selfishness on the part of the lender or banker and a fear of something that he believes may happen to his business by his connection with such an institution.

The success of an exchange bureau is a certainty if the banker, lender or merchant will have in his heart, faith and generosity and a sincere desire to coöperate. Mr. Chapman in his address on "Banking Practice and Ethics" also makes this statement: "One thing is certain, we shall have to regulate our own vocation from within or be regulated from without. We have experience enough at present, with legal intervention, in every direction. Calling in legislators is like calling in the junk man; the machine is wrecked and the junk man gathers a little more brass. We must set our own houses in order. We have made mistakes and many of them; let us profit from the experience."

"What is best for the community and clientele, must be best for the bank operating staff and stockholders. Community service, trust and stability must be first, and bank profits secondary." "Others engaged with us in banking are to be regarded, not as combatants in a game of strife, but as associates in a noble profession of service. With a need of fraternal solidarity, uniformity of practice, a mutuality of interests and a common discipline of morals to be exercised through the various forms of bankers' associations." "We need constantly to salute the flag of conscience, so that we and others may know of our allegiance thereto. Others, seeing our allegiance, may yield their's also. Thus a growing body of opinion gives weight in the estimation of still others and the things grow."

I also quote from an address by Mr. Chapman, "Protection for the Country Banker," published in the United States Investor, October 18, 1924: "In the great industrial and financial centers, the exigencies growing out of keen competition have compelled men in the same line of business to get together, to throw aside the old objections, to surrender valuable trade secrets, formulæs and practices, and to lay upon the table for their common benefit, their common experiences." "You can readily think of a number of communities in your own states, which under such a conclusion ought to have clearing houses and those of us who have enjoyed the protection of clearing houses, the safeguards set up by clearing houses, the fellowship engendered within our clearing house associations, the intimate contact which we have gained through those associations, the interchange of valuable and indispensable information which has come to us through them, to say nothing of the physical facilities which they afford, can well afford to make the effort to carry the idea afield to our rural communities." "The most valuable aspect of the clearing house after all, is the common counsel table. Men against whose keen intelligent efforts in business-getting we found ourselves pitted through the years, come finally to be regarded by us in some measure as friends, rather associates than rivals."

I also quote from an address by C. W. Allendoerfer, Vice-President, First National Bank of Kansas City, Missouri, entitled "A Credit Bureau Will Cut Your Losses," as follows: "I am raising the question to-day as to how many of these frozen loans have resulted sadly, as well as how many, which left us feebly convalescent for the reason that too little accurate information about the borrower's assets and liability was available." "I do not mean to say I doubt the integrity of the average borrower. Most men are honest, but a good many men do not feel any guilt in letting the banker believe certain things to be true, which are not true, so long as they do not have to tell a complete and direct falsehood to create that belief. I believe that with coöperation between banks and a small outlay in expense, a much better knowledge of the debts of our borrowers may be had and greatly to our advantage." "And so the clearing house examiner system was installed and the idea has spread to many cities, working successfully practically without exception. When once adopted the clearing house is never abandoned." "The plan of coöperation in cities is shown to be precise and machine-like, but valuable and adaptable to use by varied personalities and under varied conditions. One of the valuable features in nearly all clearing house examiners' offices, is the ability to furnish a member bank, on fairly short notice, information as to the total indebtedness to all members, of a borrower, from the inquiring banks. The objection commonly raised is that the fellows in the other banks will not play fair and will get more than they give in the exchange. This has not been found to be a fact—a reality." "There have been several instances that I know of, where farmers have borrowed from each of the several banks, an amount which would have been entirely in line if they had not owed the other banks. Discovery of the total borrowing was made too late to do any good. How much of this duplicated borrowing exists without our knowledge we can only guess. The establishment of a credit bureau will reveal how much there is."

Quoting from an address by E. A. James, Clearing House Examiner, Salt Lake and Ogden, Utah, entitled "Some Reasons for Installing the Clearing House Examiner's System." "The installation of the clearing house examiner system in any city serves as a notice to the citizens of that community, that the members of the clearing house association means sound and scientific banking. Also, "Coöperation and construction should be the aim of every clearing house association. To build up an association therefore, every member must be willing to help the other members and every member must have confidence in the statements of the other members."

It will be seen from the above that problems of bankers do not differ from that of the lenders or merchants. It also proves that the problems of the merchant, lender and banker are identical and for the improvement of collections and a reduction of losses and general helpfulness toward one another it is imperative that we all work hand in hand for our mutual good.

BANK PLANS HERE GET OFFICIAL O. K.

Richard Bean to Start Industrial Loan Department for Louisville National

Back From Washington

Richard Bean, president of the Louisville National Bank, has returned from Washington, where he obtained permission from the Comptroller of Currency to launch for the Louisville National Bank his plan for an industrial loan department. "As usual," Mr. Bean said, "the large commercial banking institutions are not organized for handling small loans that are paid back in weekly or monthly installments. For many years the people of moderate means, who could advantageously use money on such terms, have been depending upon the so-called 'loan sharks' or 'lending companies' at a very high rate of interest.

"The Kentucky Statute allows institutions of proper capitalization to handle loans of this type up to $2,000 at the regular 6 per cent rate of interest, plus a 2 per cent fee for the cost of investigating the character and responsibility of the borrower.

"The man who has had the same job for five or six years," Mr. Bean said, "is a pretty substantial citizen provided he has not overlived his income. But if he does not own real estate, stocks or bonds, which would afford him the right kind of collateral which regular banks require when lending money, he cannot always get accommodations from them.

"This plan we have worked out here at the Louisville National, and approved by the Comptroller of Currency in Washington, makes it comparatively easy for employes, small merchants and others to borrow money for necessary purposes by simply having two friends, neighbors, or relatives who have good positions, to endorse their note. A note with three such men is certainly a good risk.

"By enabling a borrower to repay his loan weekly for fifty weeks, if he is paid by the week, or monthly if he is paid by the month, this plan is really of great benefit to the public. It also tends to effect the habit of depositing every week or every month in a bank which habit certainly makes for substantial citizenship."—The Courier-Journal, Louisville, Ky., July 27, 1925.

THE LOT OF THE MONEY LENDER

Evidence Before Committee

Sixty Gross Profit a Necessity

Under the chairmanship of Lord Darling the committee appointed by Parliament to consider the bill affecting money lenders, introduced by Lord Curzon in the House of Lords, and Mr. S. R. Wells, Conservative M. P. for Bedford, in the House of Commons, yesterday heard evidence on behalf of money lenders.

Mr. C. H. James, of Leeds, representing the Money Lenders' Association, objecting to the clause in Lord Curzon's bill which provides for county court decisions in money lending cases, declared that some county court judges took a prejudiced view against the money lender.

Mr. James said that money lenders contended that their business did not cause nearly so much misery as was caused by drink and gambling; yet it was proposed to place restrictions upon money lenders while other people circularized as they liked.

When it was asserted that money lenders charged extortionately it was not stated that the profit obtained was gross profit. Nothing was said about the expenses of running the business or of bad debts.

"I wish to state most emphatically after 40 years' experience," said Mr. James, replying to a question, "that money lending cannot possibly be carried on under 60 per cent gross profit."

Mr. Moss, freeman of London, who also represented the Money Lenders' Association, said he generally got a promissory note from the borrower. The interest was calculated for twelve months and the borrower contracted to pay the full interest for the year if he defaulted. —London Daily Mail, June 18, 1925.

NEW JERSEY

The regular quarterly meeting of the New Jersey Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Coleman House, Asbury Park, N. J., on Thursday, July 18, 1925. The meeting opened by a delightful luncheon which was served to the satisfaction of all who attended.

The meeting was called to order at 1:30 p. m. in the ball room of the Coleman House by Chairman Alberse and the following responded to the roll call: Atlantic City Industrial Loan Co., Atlantic City; Beneficial Loan Soc., Paterson; Beneficial Loan Soc., Trenton; Beneficial Loan Soc., Newark; Beneficial Loan Soc., Orange; Beneficial Loan Soc., Elizabeth; Beneficial Loan Soc., Camden; Community Finance Service, Inc., Elizabeth; Community Finance Service, Inc., Jersey City; Community Finance Service, Inc., Atlantic City; Community Finance Service, Inc., Camden; Community Finance Service, Inc., Newark; W. A. Dunn Co., Paterson; Enterprise Loan and Investment Co., Newark; Gibralter Loan Soc., Newark; Hamilton Loan Co., Paterson; Industrial Loan Soc., Newark; Industrial Loan Soc., Jersey City; Industrial Loan Soc., Perth Amboy; Industrial Loan Soc., Plainfield; Jersey City Loan Co., Jersey City; Max Knobloch Loan Co., Newark; Newark Cash Credit Co., Asbury Park; New Jersey Finance Co., Jersey City; Newark Cash Credit Co., Newark; Newark Cash Credit Co., Jersey City; Peoples Finance Service Co., Newark; Peoples Finance Service Co., Jersey City; Protective Investment Co., Paterson; Standard Loan Co. of Jersey City.

The Association was also honored with the presence of Dr. Charles G. Mueller, President of the Community Finance Service, Inc., of Philadelphia, former president of the American Industrial Lenders Assn.; Charles H. Watts, President of the Beneficial Operating Bureau of New York City, Secretary of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Assn.;

Mr. A. G. Zimmerman, Supervisor of the Beneficial Loan Society; and Mr. E. C. Marsh, Secretary of the Asbury Park Chamber of Commerce, who represented the mayor.

Dr. Mueller made a motion which was seconded that the chair appoint a committee of three to include the secretary, to go over the records of both the treasurer and secretary and clean said records, as to delinquent members, with power to make correction, to be reported at the next meeting, whreupon the chairman appointed Mr. Simonson, Mr. Cameron, and the Secretary.

Report of the Auditing Committee, of which D. H. Cameron was chairman, was read and ordered placed on file. A vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Cameron on behalf of his clear and precise report and much credit was given him for his splendid work.

Mr. Watts on behalf of the Legislative Committee reported that quite considerable action had been taken in the various state legislatures concerning our business and begged the members of the New Jersey State Association not to abuse the New Jersey laws in any way with the fear that sooner or later there might be some radical changes in our state laws. He told the members that someone was always trying to put new angles to the existing small loan laws in the various state legislatures and that usually it was someone who was in no way connected with our business and who least of all understood us.

He spoke of a bill which was now before the Governor of Connecticut to change the Connecticut rate of interest from 3½% to 3%, and that if the Governor O. K.'d that bill it would be the first break in the ranks, which practically would mean that a change would take place all over the country and place New Jersey in a position for a reduction. Notwithstanding adverse legislature some good work was performed, such as in Florida, West Virginia, and Michigan, by adopting a new 3½% rate.

Mr. Badger, of the Newark Cash Credit Co., suggested that a letter of appreciation by the New Jersey Industrial Lenders Association be sent to the members of the Legislative Committee thanking them for their splendid work and success in the past year.

A. G. Zimmerman, of the Publicity Committee, advised the members that he made contact with the chairman of several local exchanges in the state and that he met with some opposition due the propaganda sent him by the National Publicity Committee, and called upon John J. Irish of Jersey City, who stated that he had placed the proposition before the members of the local exchange and the members had not as yet been able to get together.

A. J. Simonson of Newark reports that he had taken the propaganda to several of the newspapers of Newark who absolutely refused to handle same in its present condition, but would accept said propaganda if paid for, and this will be presented at the next meeting of the Newark Exchange for consideration.

A motion was made by Mr. Mueller that the New Jersey Association recommend to the National Publicity Committee to change the form of publicity reader to contain more news items rather than presented in its present advertising form, so that the propaganda will carry a punch more easily digested than plain hard advertising matter. Motion carried and so ordered.

Mr. Badger advised the members that he being the only lender in Asbury Park had taken it upon himself to insert a similar advertisement as advised by the Publicity Committee and, that his organization had never derived any benefits therefrom and criticized this form very severely. His criticisms were answered by Mr. Watts in a very delightful discourse, through which he tried to show the members that this form of advertising or propaganda was to educate the public at large, rather than the individuals, that even though we did not derive any actual benefits to-day he looked forward into the future years. The members showed their appreciation for Mr. Watts' little talk with a hearty outburst of applause.

The secretary read a letter from Mr. Kehr, the National Secretary, which letter was ordered to be spread upon the minutes, regarding members in various states starting legal action attacking the laws under which they operate and pointing out to the members the necessity of first conferring with the State Association or National Law Committee on all matters of important legislation, upon which Mr. Watts made a motion and was seconded that the members before ever taking legal action of any kind pertaining to or against the small loan laws of this state should connect with the Association for advice before doing so.

Harrisburg, Pa., June 6, 1925.

To the State Association Chairman:

The Chairman of the National Legislative Committee, Charles H. Watts, points out the importance of State Associations conferring with the National Law Committee on all matters of important litigation.

He illustrated by referring to the cases lost by Mr. Masters in Georgia on the question of computing interest at 3½% per month for the actual number of days between payments, and the lost cases in Ohio against the salary buyers. He and others are of the opinion that if the National Law Committee had been consulted and its advice followed, and good counsel employed, that both of these cases might have been won.

Another suggestion with possibilities, comes from Edgar P. East, Chairman of the Virginia Association, in which he writes as follows:

"Do you presume it will be worth while if possible to attempt to get the several state chairmen and possibly the chairmen of the respective Executive Committees of the different associations to meet about three times a year, that is every four months, in order that they become better acquainted with the local conditions in the different states, exchange ideas and carry them back to the respective State Associations? The expense to be borne by the individual State Associations or by the National Association. This will, of course, include any of the national officers who wish to be present. I would like to have your opinion as to this suggestion.

"Will you therefore be good enough to take these matters up with your State Association Executive Committee and the other officers of your State Association, and let me know what if any action, is taken?" Very truly yours,

Geo. W. Kehr,
National Secretary.

The other suggestion coming from Edgar P. East relative to State Chairmen of each association meeting three times a year, was laid on the table for the next meeting.

The chairman then advised the members that the time had come when the delegate to represent our Association to attend the National Convention of the N. I. L. A. to be held in Providence, R. I., in September, be chosen, and upon motion by Mr. Watts, the secretary was nominated, seconded and carried.

It was voted that the secretary, Wm. P. Hansche, be elected as delegate and that all expenses in connection with same be paid by the Association.

The application of the Central Loan and Finance Co. of Atlantic City was presented for membership and elected by vote. The members decided that the next meeting be held in Camden, N. J., on the third Thursday of September, namely, September 17th.

William P. Hansche, Secretary.

OHIO

The eleventh annual convention of the Ohio Loan Association held July 22d, 23d and 24th, at Cedar Point, Ohio, has passed into history, and for the benefit of those who were unable to attend, we trust that you will be good enough to publish the following account thereof:

The convention opened with the annual "get together" luncheon, held in the main dining room of the hotel and was attended by 76 members and their guests and friends. The formal opening of the convention was called to order by Col. D. H. Pond, chairman, in the convention room immediately thereafter. And by the way, Colonel Pond demonstrated his "grit" in coming to preside over the convention, having only the day before gotten out of bed after a four weeks' siege of rheumatism. The Colonel says he will soon be as good as ever, and will be able to fill his position of "Sergeant at Arms" at the forthcoming National Convention.

The Association was welcomed by Mrs. Bella Lehman, a citizen of Sandusky and prominent in its social, business and civic affairs. Her's was a genuine welcome, conveyed in a speech sparkling with wit and humor.

The response was made by M. Austin Potter, manager of the Lima Loan Co., and was an expression of appreciation on behalf of the Association and stress was made upon the theme of "Service."

Colonel Pond thereupon made report of the activities of the Association during the past year, and also dwelt upon the aims for the future, and among other things outlined the policy of the Executive Committee that a larger part of the functioning of the Association be taken by the individual members, and to that end recommended the appointment of several standing committees to which could be assigned the work.

The report of the secretary and treasurer showed that the Association was in a flattering state from a financial standpoint; that there were 68 members of the Association having 142 licensed offices; and that the capital of these various offices during the year 1924 was approximately $8,000,000.00; and that the average loan balance of each office was approximately $54,000.00.

F. J. Schneider, of the Household Loan Co. of Cleveland, and M. Austin Potter, Manager of the Lima Loan Co., were chosen captains for the water baseball game to be held Thursday afternoon.

On Thursday the annual managers' session was held and was in charge of B. L. Thuma, Manager of the Capitol Loan Co. of Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Thuma's meeting reflected the careful efforts which he had made to bring out a discussion of various subjects and questions affecting the every-day work of the loan office.

Three speakers of prominence were with us on Thursday. The first was E. D. Lynde, assistant secretary of the Associated Charities of Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Lynde recognizes clearly the value of the small loan business in assisting persons to become self-reliant by means of a loan, and thus preventing him from becoming a public charge. He cited numerous instances where the securing of a small loan through the advice of the welfare society had assisted men in ridding themselves of clamorous creditors and getting a new start, saved his credit and put him on his own feet. The theme of Mr. Lynde's address was that a small loan helps men to help themselves.

Much mirth was injected into the meeting by the address of Mr. Tom Pearman, Secretary of the Lima, Ohio, Y. M. C. A., whose address was seasoned with some of the best stories we have ever heard. He demonstrated also that his thoughts do not run entirely in the lighter vein, for he in three short sentences came nearer to epitomizing the true ideals of the small loan business than many have in an hour's address.

He reminded us that since the small loan business has an ancestry of which it cannot altogether boast, that we should turn our faces resolutely toward the future and make it one of the best businesses on the earth.

L. J. Ingram was unable to be present and his well prepared paper on the subject, "The Outside Assistant Manager," was read by H. F. Welch, Manager of the Beneficial Loan Society of Akron, and was much appreciated.

Our convention was honored by the presence of J. H. Aufderheide of Indianapolis, Indiana, who delivered an address on Thursday and called our attention to the numerous benefits to be derived from being a member of the American Industrial Lenders Association.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: Chairman, Col. D. H. Pond; Vice-Chairman, L. K. Osborne; Secretary and Treasurer, J. Fred Anderson; Executive Committee, Dr. C. G. Mueller, Thomas R. Schoonover, L. K. Osborne, Col. D. H. Pond, J. Fred Anderson.

A communication from Geo. W. Kehr, in reference to inviting state department heads to the Providence Convention resulted in Chairman Pond being authorized to invite Cyrus Locher for the Ohio Association.

The water baseball game was a thriller, the final score being 23 to 17, favor of Schneider's recruits. Only the sands on the beach could number the total errors.

An earnest effort was made by the committee in charge of the convention to secure a complete list of those in attendance, but we very much doubt if everyone registered, the list as secured being as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA

The regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association was held in Parlor C, Pen Alto Hotel, Altoona, at 10 a. m., Thursday, June 11, 1925. The meeting was called to order by Chairman P. B. Reeves. Thirty members were present.

Chairman Reeves called attention to the goodly number of visiting members and expressed the hope that our deliberations would be helpful, and will have warranted the journey made for the first time to the city of Altoona as a place of meeting.

Treasurer Devine reported on hand, June 11, 1925, $2,964.58.

Secretary Watts reported a membership of 119. One hundred and sixteen of these are in good standing as of July 1, 1925. Seventy-one members are members in good standing of the American I. L. A. as of August 1, 1925. There are 284 licensed lenders in Pennsylvania.

The Executive Committee.—Chairman Ezekiel reported a special meeting of his committee in March, Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, to consider matters of vital importance to the membership. The Vigilance Committee.—Chairman Fahringer. The report was made by the chair, and indicated attention was being given to policing the business in different sections of the state.

The chair reported no further movement at Pittsburgh of the salary purchasing case. It was agreed that the chair will confer with Mr. Fahringer and endeavor to bring the matter to a conclusion at an early date.

The matter of the controversy between Mr. Noteman and other members re doubling up of loans in Philadelphia was ordered continued in the Executive Committee.

Considerable discussion was had with respect to one of our members advertising in Philadelphia newspapers of thirty days' interest free as an inducement to obtain customers. Messrs. East, Ezekiel, Reeves and others expressed their disapproval of this special inducement, and the secretary was asked to write Mr.

Webster asking that it be discontinued, or a conference on the matter be held at an early date.

The matter of the unpaid dues of the Citizens Loan & Investment Co. of Williamsport went over until the next meeting. In the meantime, this question is in the hands of a special committee consisting of Mr. Young.

This was well received and a vote of thanks tendered Mr. Gill and the secretary was instructed to forward the paper to the LENDERS NEWS for publication.

New W. Gibney, Mgr., Beneficial Loan Society, Altoona, read a paper on the subject of "Our Credit Situation." He was tendered a vote of thanks for his splendid paper and the secretary was instructed to forward it to the LENDERS NEWS for early publication.

VIRGINIA

The regular meeting of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association was held at Jefferson Hotel, Richmond, Va., July 22, 1925.

The secretary called the roll and the following members were present: Citizens Loan Society of Norfolk, Empire Company of Norfolk, National Small Loan Society of Norfolk, Beneficial Loan Society of Norfolk, Atlantic Small Loan Company of Norfolk, Beneficial Loan Society of Portsmouth, Beneficial Loan Society of Roanoke, Beneficial Loan Society of Richmond, Citizens Loan Society of Richmond, Virginia Small Loan Corp. of Richmond, Personal Small Loan Corp. of Richmond, Home Guarantee Company of Richmond, Standard Credit Co. of Richmond, United Small Loan Corp. of Richmond. We also had with us C. H. Watts and Walter S. Hilborn of New York; E. F. Moore of Philadelphia, Pa.; H. T. Mattingly, Lee H. Pumphrey and C. Howard Hood of Baltimore, Md.

Secretary Bray reported that there were 35 licensees in the state. Out of this number, we only had 23 members in the Association.

We had one delinquent member who had not paid any dues, and he was elected to membership Oct. 23, 1924. He also reported the monthly assesments were being paid very satisfactorily by the members.

Treasurer Bradshaw reported that we had cash on hand $1,246.16.

Executive.—L. E. Pope reported that pursuant to the instructions of the Executive Committee, he had had Attorney Virgil R. Goode prepare a set of uniform papers. Mr. Goode had completed the papers and Mr. Goode would present the same himself. He recommended the adoption and use of same. As previously agreed upon Mr. Goode's fee for preparing papers would be $275, and he recommended the treasurer to be authorized to send check for this amount.

Attorney Virgil R. Goode appeared before the members and read over the five papers he had prepared, Note, Deed of Trust, Financial Statement, Assignment of Wages and an Affidavit for releasing the Deed of Trust. He gave his reasons why he thought these papers bullet proof.

C. H. Watts moved that we accept the recommendation of the Executive Committee and adopt these papers. Mr. Edge seconded the motion and it was carried unanimously. The treasurer was instructed to pay the bill.

Mr. East promised to have some copies of these papers multigraphed and mail each member a copy at once.

Communications.—The secretary read a letter from Mr. Kehr, National Secretary, that at the suggestion of Mr. Watts and by direction of the National Chairman, he requested us to take up the matter regarding us inviting a state official who supervises our business in this state to the National Convention at Providence, R. I. Mr. Mattingly moved that we invite a representative from the Banking Department to be our guest at the National Convention. Mr. McMurtrie seconded the motion. Carried unanimously. Mr. East was appointed to attend to this.

Unfinished Business.—Mr. Moore reported that his committee had gone into the subject of a "Special Heading" to be used in newspapers, so it would eliminate pawnbrokers, salary buyers and other people not in our business from advertising under the same heading. He recommended that the heading "Loans Up to $300.00" be adopted. This was adopted and the various committee men agreed to try and get the newspapers in their respective cities to group them under this heading.

Mr. Mattingly reported that they had lost out in the Lynchburg Courts in the matter of filing an assignment of wages against a bankrupt. After some discussion, it was decided to let this matter drop.

Mr. Moore offered a resolution requesting the Banking Department to rename the department having charge of the supervision of the small loan business, that is to call the department, or bureau, or division, The Industrial Loan Division. It was agreed to take this up with the Banking Department.

Mr. Moore also stated that the state membership certificates should contain something of the following character:

"This certificate is the property of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association and is lent by it to the present member and shall be returned upon termination of active membership for any cause without requiring demand therefor." This was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Moore also gave notice that at our next meeting he wished to make an amendment to the Constitution, viz: "Should any member be convicted of violating the loan law or lose his license, the Association may terminate his membership, whereupon his certificate of membership is to be surrendered."

Mr. Watts moved that this matter be sent to the Executive Committee to look into and report at our next meeting. The secretary was instructed to send out notices of this to the members at least 10 days before the next meeting.

Mr. Watts spoke on the subject of where any office had a case in court where the defendant was questioning the constitutionality of our law, it should be taken up with the chairman of the Legislature Committee of the National Association so that they would be able to give assistance in this matter.

Mr. East and Mr. Burnett spoke strongly about every member attending the National Convention at Providence, R. I., Sept. 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Mr. East was elected as delegate representing this Association and Mr. McMurtrie as alternate delegate.

In the evening we met in the banquet hall where a splendid dinner was served. Chairman East gave each gentleman a beautiful pencil and each lady a Stone Mountain memorial coin. He also gave two special prizes to the winners of the lucky numbers, a brief case to the gentleman and a hat box to the lady. A colored orchestra furnished music during the banquet and for dancing.

Everybody was delighted with the way Chairman East arranged the program, and great credit is due him for the manner in which he put this thing over himself.

Eleventh Annual Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association at Providence, R. I., Sept. 2-4, 1925

THE eleventh annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association, held at Providence, Rhode Island, from September 2 to 4, went into history as a worthy successor of its predecessor events. In point of attendance, the quality of addresses made, in the interest of those attending, and in its social and recreational sides, it was a convention that will long be remembered with pleasure by those whose good fortune it was to have attended it. It was the first annual convention of the national body ever held in New England and the Rhode Island members had evidently determined to leave nothing undone to convince their fellow members that no mistake had been made when it was decided to hold the 1925 convention in Providence. Their generous hospitality and completely planned and capably executed arrangements for the pleasure and entertainment of their guests left no doubt in the minds of the visitors that they fully appreciated their responsibilities as hosts.

The convention, in a sense, was another reunion of North and South, for it was the occasion of a first visit so far north for many of the members. This phase seems to have impressed several of those on the programme, for more than one of the speakers digressed from the purely technical subject of his address to give expression of his gratification for the obliteration of sectional feelings in our country to-day and the existence of a firm bond of unity between all the parts of the nation. The convention also partook of a civic nature, for the local committee had arranged for addresses by the mayors of two Rhode Island cities, the Attorney General of the State and officers of Chambers of Commerce.

Credit for the arrangements for the entertainment of those attending the convention is due to the members of the Convention Reception Committee of the Rhode Island Association, whose members were: F. N. Kennon, Chairman, Pawtucket; F. A. Pomfret, Pawtucket; Harry G. Neal, Providence; George E. Rich, Pawtucket; G. F. Lewis, Newport; S. S. Moran, Providence; E. LaGueux, Providence, and G. W. Delaney, Providence. Due also to excellent advance publicity in Providence, the convention was no stranger to the city, for Mr. Moran had arranged for a half page article, illustrated with cuts of the national officers, which appeared in the Providence Journal the Sunday prior to the opening day of the convention. This article, besides giving the convention programme in full and the list of national officers and committees, quoted liberally from the Code of Ethics adopted by the Association at the convention a year ago.

A great many of the lenders who attended the convention were accompanied by members of their families, and special arrangements for their entertainments had been made by a local committee of ladies, headed by Mrs. J. D. Dwight, who was assisted by Mrs. F. N. Kennon, Mrs. G. E. Rich, Mrs. S. S. Moran, Mrs. E. LaGueux and Mrs. J. G. Findlay. They had provided a schedule of sight-seeing and social features that were a delightful side of the visit to Providence.

EDGAR P. EAST,
National Chairman Elect.

The convention was called to order at nine o'clock Wednesday morning, September 2d, in the assembly hall of the Providence Biltmore Hotel, by National Chairman J. H. Aufderheide, of Indianapolis, who introduced the Reverend Frank E. Butler, Assistant Pastor of the Central Congregational Church, of Providence, who pronounced an invocation. After Dr. Butler's prayers Mayor Joseph H. Gainer welcomed the convention to Providence.

Mayor Gainer spoke briefly, but earnestly and to the point. A significant circumstance connected with his appearance before the convention and his indorsement of legalized industrial lending was the fact, as he stated, that he is a director in a Morris Plan bank. After expressing his pleasure in having the convention in Providence and his hope that the members would enjoy their stay in the city, he commended the Association for the good work it had done in raising and maintaining the standard of the business in which its members are engaged. Industrial Lenders who are identified with the Association, he said, are doing business on a high plane and because they are doing so, they are enabled to meet in conventions without any apology. The Uniform Small Loan Law, said the Mayor, was legislation enacted in the interest of the community and was beneficial to a large element in society. Explaining that he is a director of a Morris Plan bank, he said that he realized the limitations for guarantors for applicants of loans, and hence he indorsed the Uniform Small Loan Law and the work of industrial lenders who are of service to a great body of necessitous who are not served either by commercial banks or Morris Plan banks.

Edgar P. East, of Richmond, Virginia, one of the Vice Chairmen of the Association, responded to Mayor Gainer's address, at the same time welcoming the convention to Providence on behalf of the New England States. National Chairman Aufderheide, disclaiming any intention to make an address, expressed the pleasure of the members of the Association at meeting in one of the principal cities of New England and his hope that the convention sessions would be well attended and of profit to those present. He indicated that the convention would be expected to get down to business forthwith by naming Mr. William Young of Philadelphia as sergeant-at-arms, with instructions to clear the corridors and seat the members.

After naming a Nominating Committee, with Mr. L. C. Harbison, of Chicago, as Chairman, the reports of Committee

Chairmen, were called for. The report of the membership Committe, read by the Chairman, Mr. George Hodson, of New York, was the first to be submitted. Committees on Legislation, Law, Publicity and Finance, and the reports of the National Treasurer and Auditing Committee, National Secretary and Special Committees followed. The reports will appear in detail in the 1925 Year Book.

Upon the completion of the reading of reports the morning session was adjourned, while those in attendance at the convention went to the City Hall nearby, from the steps of which a group photograph was taken. During the morning session many of the ladies were taken for a tour of the shopping and residence sections of Providence.

A luncheon was held at half past twelve in the grand ballroom of the Biltmore, at which 208 were seated. Arthur L. Wick, of Philadelphia, who is quite as well known in Providence as in his home town, presided at the luncheon and at its conclusion introduced Mr. Richard B. Watrous, General Secretary of the Providence Chamber of Commerce, the only speaker at the luncheon. Mr. Wick in his brief introductory talk referred appreciatively to the support given by the Providence Chamber of Commerce to the bill providing for the Uniform Small Loan Law which was enacted two years ago in Rhode Island. He gave much of the credit for this support, as well as for the enactment of the statute, to the efforts of Mr. Watrous, at the same time paying a graceful tribute to Mr. Watrous for his public spirit.

Mr. Watrous prefaced his remarks by a reference to the address delivered in the morning by Mayor Gainer who, he said, had made a contribution of meritorious public service to Providence, especially commending his work in reducing the tax rate in Providence. On behalf of the Chamber of Commerce, he supplemented Mayor Gainer's greetings of welcome to the visiting lenders. Referring to Mr. Wick's remarks in appreciation of of the services of the Chamber of Commerce in bringing about the enactment of the Small Loan Law by the Legislature of 1923, he said that the Chamber had indorsed the law and lent its support to efforts to have it adopted in Rhode Island only after a careful investigation.

The determining factor in inducing the Chamber to support this law, he said, was that the lenders themselves were united and insistent upon the passage of a law which would subject their business to strict supervision by the State. This circumstance, he declared, had convinced the directors that the business of industrial lending as legalized must be beneficial in its nature. Recalling the days during which the bill was pending in the Legislature, he said that when he appeared at a legislative hearing on the bill one of the committee members had asked him whether he appeared at the hearing on his own initiative or whether he had done so at the direction of his board of directors, and he had replied that he had done so on instructions from his directors. At that time he did not believe that the bill had a chance of passage because of the abnormal situation prevailing in that session of the Legislature, when legislation generally was obstructed by filibustering. That the bill was enacted in these extraordinary circumstances, he said, was due largely to the quiet, effective and persevering efforts of Arthur Wick, who was always on the job always tactful, sincere and convincing, and whose knowledge of the proposed law and whose convincing arguments for it had enlisted the support of civic organizations, leaders of thought in the community and the lenders themselves.

Mr. Watrous emphasized the value of trade and business organizations in keeping before their members an ideal of the dignity of their business, and counselled the lenders to keep this ideal ever before them. Industrial lending, he said, was a lawful business of service and there was a special obligation upon the national Association and its members to maintain it as such. In closing, he said that it was to the credit of industrial lenders that they had asked, and were asking, for regulation of their business by law. He described lenders as diagnosticians of the financial ills of those who sought their services and said they should strive to acquire the wisdom to decide the proper course to be followed in their dealings with prospective borrowers, Mr. Watrous advised both individual lenders and associations of lenders to affiliate with their local Chambers of Commerce.

At the opening of the afternoon session Mr. Harbison, reporting on the project for a joint meeting with the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations in 1926, moved that the annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association next year be held in June on a date to be fixed by the Executive Committee. Mr. Kehr, disavowing any wish to throw cold water upon the suggestion, expressed the belief that to hold the convention so early in the year would not give a sufficient interval after the close of the legislative season to properly prepare for it. Mr. William P. Woll, of Chicago, spoke in favor of Mr. Harbison's motion, saying that he believed a joint meeting had many potentialities for good, that it was therefore worth while making some sacrifices, if they could be so regarded, and that he saw great possibilities of good in having all elements in the loan business working together. After some discussion Mr. Harbison's motion was carried.

At this point Chairman Aufderheide called the attention of those present to a large cluster of flowers which had been sent to the speakers' table with the compliments of the Convention Bureau of Indianapolis, and upon motion the secretary was instructed to acknowledge the courtesy with the thanks of the convention.

In the absence of Mr. Walter S. Hilborn, Acting Director, Division of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation, New York City, who telegraphed that he was unavoidably prevented from attending the convention, his address on "The Year's Progress and the Uniform Law" was read by National Secretary Kehr. Mr. Hilborn's address will appear in full in the Year Book.

After the reading of Mr. Hilborn's address, Chairman Aufderheide requested Dr. Louis N. Robinson, who has been directing the comprehensive survey of the small loan business inaugurated several years ago by the Russell Sage Foundation, to give some informal information about the progress of the survey. Dr. Robinson replied that the survey was practically completed, there remaining only some minor alterations to be made upon parts of it. The printing of the survey, he said, is already under way and he expected copies to be off the press by about the first of next December. In answer to questions, Dr. Robinson said that the survey would be published in parts and that they would be sold at a price to be fixed between now and the time of publication.

Mr. R. C. Aufderheide, of Indianapolis, then delivered an address on "Why the West Virginia Legislative Compaign Succeeded," his remarks being very well received but limited space prevents further elaboration here. The Year Book will publish his address in full.

Mr. Withrow, of Charleston, West Virginia, at the close of the address, warmly commended the campaign in West Virginia, in particular praising the part Mr. Aufderheide and the national Association had taken in it. He said that he foresaw as a result of the law much good o individual lenders and borrowers in West Virginia, and to the business of ndustrial lending as a whole. Since the enactment of the law, he said, the number of licensees in the State had jumped from a nucleus of 13 to 20.

Mr. Aufderheide's report created a most favorable impression upon the convention and a vote of thanks for his work in West Virginia, proposed by Mr. Kehr, was carried with a resounding chorus of "ayes." Upon motion of Mr. Harbion, seconded by Mr. Woll, the convention with an equally hearty will voted to award a gold medal to Mr. Aufderheide for his work. While the vote was being put, Chairman Aufderheide, father of the recipient of the honor, surrendered the Chair temporarily to Secretary Kehr.

Mr. B. E. Henderson, of Chicago, in peaking on the subject, "How the Michigan Law was Squared with the Uniform Law," said: In short it was an uphill fight but by united coöperation it nded in success.

When Mr. Henderson had finished peaking, Mr. R. C. Aufderheide arose nd stated his unwillingness to accept the gold medal voted him unless one also was awarded to Mr. Henderson for his xcellent work in Michigan, but Mr. Henderson laughingly refused the crown, uggesting that the convention instead hould vote an award of "A sleeping owder to anyone who engaged in a legislative campaign, for that is what they re most in need of after such strenuous work."

Mr. Leon Henderson, the newly appointed Associate Director of the Diviion of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, was then introduced to the convention by Chairman Aufdereide, and at the outset of his remarks stablished an entente by addressing those resent as "future associates." Mr. Henderson humorously referred to his rior acquaintance with Mr. Kehr and Dr. Robinson, and spoke of the many spects of credit which, he said, could ot be put into one room, with the door lammed upon it, but is an ever present ubject for new study. His experience in budget and personnel work, he stated, ad convinced him that there was an ever rowing tendency to demand certain nowledge about a subject and in any tudy of that subject to discard theory nd emotion. He stated it as his opinion hat the value of the coöperation of the Russell Sage Foundation with industrial ending was in the maintenance of the work initiated by the hardy pioneers for he rehabilitation of the business. In the evelopment of lending as a useful servce there was a need for a living body of statistics dealing with it and a standard practice, he said, and he promised to make this his especial field of endeavor. He spoke in appreciation of the wholehearted coöperation given to Dr. Robinson by the American Industrial Lenders, adding that while he had not yet won his spurs, he hoped to do so and thus earn an equal measure of support from the Association.

Dr. Robinson at the close of Mr. Henderson's remarks said that the latter's appointment to his present position with the Russell Sage Foundation was in part the result of Mr. Henderson's excellent work in connection with the survey of lending just completed. Dr. Mueller also congratulated Mr. Henderson upon the cordial tone of his remarks, the keynote of which was his greeting to lenders as "future associates," and declared that the Association was indebted to the Russell Sage Foundation for selecting a man of Mr. Henderson's training and background of scholarship and for supplying him with aid in his work. Dr. Mueller then offered a resolution pledging the coöperation of the Association with Mr. Henderson, which was seconded by Mr. Harbison and unanimously carried. The resolutions follow:

Be it Resolved, By the American Industrial Lenders Association and the several members thereof in convention assembled:

First, That a hearty welcome be extended to Mr. Leon Henderson, the new Associate Director of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation and our appreciation of his presence and his remarks to the Convention be recorded;

Second, That the Russell Sage Foundation be notified of our appreciation of their renewed and active interest in the field of small loans as evidenced by the appointment of Mr. Henderson and that we pledge our whole-hearted support and coöperation to the Foundation and Mr. Henderson in all things;

Third, That this Association and each State Association and all the several members thereof do hereby unequivocally endorse the Russell Sage Foundation's Uniform Small Loan Law in its present form and each and every provision thereof and do pledge themselves individually and as organizations to obey the letter and spirit of every small loan law in force approved by the Foundation and to do everything within our power to uphold and enforce such laws and all similar laws hereafter enacted and every part and provision thereof.

Chairman Aufderheide in declaring the resolutions carried said that he believed Mr. Henderson would prove to be a worthy successor to Mr. Arthur H. Ham.

Mr. Charles H. Watts, of New York, who was called upon for a report of the successful campaign in Tennessee this year for the enactment of the Uniform Small Loan Law, explained the inhibition in the constitution of that state against charging an interest rate of more than 10 per cent a year. To obviate a recourse to a constitutional amendment, the framers of the law just recently declared enacted had made the bill to read providing for an interest rate of ½ per cent a month on small loans, with fees of 3 per cent a month. The bill was passed by the Legislature of Tennessee, but it is reported that the salary purchasers in that State opposed it before the Governor, who vetoed it. The Governor, however, had overlooked the fact that the law requires that any veto to be effective must be returned within a certain time after the passage of the law enacted, and the Supreme Court of the State, to which the case was referred, had decided that the Governor's disapproval of the bill was not signed within the legal time limit and that therefore the law stood on the statute books of the State. Mr. Watts explained that the Supreme Court had not considered or passed upon the Constitutionality of the law itself, but solely upon the question whether its enactment by the Legislature stood.

Mr. Sam Burnley, Deputy Chief Examiner of the Virginia State Banking Division, delivered a greeting from Chief Examiner Bristol and in an eloquent address spoke of the healing of the sectional wounds in the North and South and the greatness of his native state of Virginia. Mr. Burnley's address will be published in full in the Year Book.

After Mr. Burnley's address, Mr. S. M. Edwards of Providence extended a formal invitation to the Association to hold the annual convention in 1926 in Philadelphia which next year will celebrate the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence by holding a Sesquicentennial International Exposition.

"The Value of Uniform Papers" was discussed by Mr. L. E. Pope of Richmond, Virginia, in a paper which will be published in the Year Book.

Fred B. Snite, of Chicago, followed Mr. Pope with an address on "The Loan Business as a Vocation." More good material for the Year Book.

After the reading of papers by several members of the contestants in the prize contests, descriptive of the "Hardest Collection I ever made," the session was adjourned until Thursday morning, and members and guests of the convention were free to follow their own inclinations as to spending the after-dinner hours. Many of them elected to go sight-seeing, and there were many reunions of old friends in the dining rooms and foyers of the hotel.

Immediately upon convening of the morning session, Thursday the Nominating Committee met, while the regular schedule of the convention was followed, the first event being the report by Mr. Arthur L. Wick, of Philadelphia, on the work of the Retail Merchants' Bureau Committee, of which he is chairman. Mr. Wick's report will be published in the Year Book.

"Converting Liabilities into Assets," was the subject of an address by Mr. David J. Woodlock, of St. Louis, Secretary-Treasurer of the Retail Credit Men's National Association. Mr. Woodlock's address will be published in the Year Book.

Further insight into the growing realization of practical efforts to build up relations between lenders and retail credit men was given in an address by J. F. Burwell, Secretary-Treasurer of the Dayton Industrial Lenders' Association, in which he described "The Genesis and Relationship" of the Dayton Association to the credit bureau and borrower. Mr. Burwell's address will be published in the Year Book.

Discussion of Mr. Burwell's address elicited from Mr. Badger of Newark the opinion that from 50 to 75 per cent of money loaned by industrial lenders goes to release the frozen credits of retail merchants, and Mr. O'Brien, of New Haven, in urging the value of a working alliance of lenders and credit men spoke in commendation of the coöperation given lenders of his city by the New Haven Retail Credit Men's Association and of its value to both lenders and merchants.

In his address on "Relations Between Headquarters and the Field Men," C. H. Hood, of Baltimore, Chairman of the Maryland Association urged greater freedom for the managers of chain organizations. His address will be published in the Year Book.

"The Bone of Discontention" was wittily identified by Mr. Charles J. Bernstein of Bangor, Maine, in an address which was frequently interrupted by the appreciation of laughter of his hearers. Mr. Bernstein's address will appear in the Year Book.

The report of the Nominating Committee was read by Mr. Harbison, its chairman, immediately upon the calling to order of the afternoon session. The Committee reported the following nominations: National Chairman, E. P. East, Richmond, Va.; National Treasurer C. H. Watts, New York City; National Secretary G. W. Kehr, Harrisburg, Pa., Chairman of Standing Committees, Auditing, H. T. Mattingly, Baltimore; Finance, W. P. Woll, Chicago.

Before the convention acted upon the nominations, Mr. Harbison suggested that the Nominating Committee's report be not regarded as final or closing the nominations for offices, and also proposed that the personnel of the Executive Committee be increased from seven to nine members. Mr. Walter Herron of Philadelphia, advocating the creation of a strong minority in the Executive Committee, recommended that it have a representation of one member from each state. Chairman Aufderheide, while agreeing that this might be desirable, pointed out that to increase the membership of the Executive Committee would require a change in the Constitution which fixes the number of members of the committee, and that the Constitution of the Association required that a ten days' notice of any proposed change in the Constitution must precede balloting on the proposal, which would effectively prevent any change at the present meeting. Mr. Herron, contending that representation on the National Council means nothing, advocated a suspension of the by-laws. Secretary Kehr suggested that the desired reform could be accomplished by a reference of all matters of importance to the National Council for ratification, Mr. Woll, asking who would decide what constitute matters of importance, declared that he was against increasing the number of members of the Executive Committee, that to do so would tend to make it unwieldy.

Mr. Herron, pressing his suggestion for an increase in the membership of the Committee, said that at present some states are without direct representation on the Committee, citing as an instance that Secretary Kehr, of Harrisburg, a member of the Executive Committee, being a national officer could not be considered as directly representing Pennsylvania on the committee.

Mr. Watts replied that Mr. Kehr, in addition to being a national officer of the Association, was an independent lender himself and represented independent lenders on the Committee. As instances where members of the Executive Committee were not chain lenders, he cited the names of Mr. Osborne of Ohio and Mr. Harrison of Iowa, both independent lenders. The Executive Committee, said Mr. Watts, is at the beck and call of the Russell Sage Foundation and of the State Associations, and its membership should be increased. He suggested that independent lenders should caucus for their selection of members of the Committee, around which "there was not and should not be a wall of Jericho."

Mr. R. F. Hartz of Indianapolis, supporting Mr. Watts' assertion that selection of the personnel of the Executive Committee is not confined to chain lenders, referred to his own selection by the nominating committees of the two prior national conventions as Chairman of the Committee on publicity, which selection had come, he said, out of a clear sky. Mr. Hartz added that he was an independent lender.

Mr. Young of Philadelphia moved that the personnel of the Executive Committee be increased to eleven members instead of nine, and that the National Secretary be instructed to submit the proposal for the constitutional amendment for action next year. Mr. Herron, stating that he was content to accept the nominating committee's report as submitted and have the committee increased next year, seconded the motion, which was carried.

JOHN H. AUFDERHEIDE,
Retiring National Chairman.

The report of the Nominating Committee was then adopted and on motion the secretary cast the ballot of the convention for the officers named, who were declared elected. Upon motion a rising vote of thanks was accorded to the retiring officers, and the newly elected National Chairman Mr. East, was escorted to the presiding officer's chair, where the retiring chairman, Mr. Aufderheide, introduced him to the convention, expressing the hope that members would accord him the same measure of support and coöperation that he had received from him in his administration.

Mr. H. T. Mattingly of Baltimore on behalf of the Maryland Association, greeted the incoming Chairman and pledged to him the loyalty and support of his State Association.

Mr. East in acknowledging the honor bestowed upon him in his election, asked the full support and confidence of the members of the Association for himself and the other newly elected officers, pledging to give the best that is in him at any time and anywhere in his administration of the Association's affairs. He expressed the hope that next year's convention would prove as successful as the present and said that it was an honor to be chosen to succeed a man of the able character of Mr. Aufderheide. He pledged his support to every officer of the Association in every right undertaking.

Mr. Watts then presented a handsome gold watch to Mr. Aufderheide on behalf of the Association, in a few words praising the high character of his services to the Association. It was a joy, said Mr. Watts, to have served under Mr. Aufderheide, who was always well up in the front to do his job and for whose efficient work in that job lenders had much to be thankful.

Mr. Aufderheide, who was unmistakeably surprised by the gift and moved by Mr. Watts' tribute, said that he would not attempt to do more than simply thank his fellow members for their generous remembrance of him, adding that "the Aufderheides seem to be getting more than their share of the honors to-day."

At the suggestion of the law committee the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The field of law involved in the small loan business, is a special one which is sometimes not thoroughly understood by lawyers in general practice, and

WHEREAS, Issues involving the validity or construction of approved small loan laws may be raised in cases otherwise of minor importance and such cases may result in erroneous decisions which are damaging to the small loan business generally unless the lawyers connected with the case are specially prepared in this branch of the law, and

WHEREAS, Eternal vigilance and faithful coöperation are necessary for the protection of our business in this respect as in all others,

Now therefore, be it Resolved:

1. That every member be and he hereby is urged to promptly report, in such detail as he is able, to the National Secretary all litigation with which he is connected or of which he may hear involving or likely to involve, the validity or construction of an approved small loan statute or considerations of general interest to the small loan business, including in such report the names of the plaintiffs and defendants, and their respective attorneys and also the name of the court and copies of the pleadings when obtainable.

2. Every member is urged, before starting any litigation affecting or likely to affect the small loan business generally to similarly report to the National Secretary.

3. The National Secretary shall, upon receipt of any such report, promptly bring it to the attention of the president or chairman of the State Association, where the litigation is pending or contemplated, and also to the attention of such additional person or persons as, in his discretion, shall be advisable, having in mind the locality, the parties to the suit and the nature of the proceedings reported.

The afternoon program of addresses was started by the address of W. R.

Hancock, of Indianapolis, on "Why the National Organization?", which will be published in the Year Book.

The Georgia publicity campaign was the subject of the next address, by E. M. Steinle, of Atlanta, secretary of the Georgia Association, whose interesting address will appear in the Year Book.

Mr. Tillou von Nunes, of Atlanta, who was on the program to discuss "The Relations of Legal Principles to the Economic Conditions of Industrial Small Loans," was unable to attend the convention, and his address was not presented. Mr. P. B. Reeves, of Pittsburgh, Chairman of the Pennsylvania Association, was detained in California and his address on "Limitations of Industrial Loan Service," was read by Mr. Herron. Mr. Reeves' address will appear in the Year Book.

When the question of the selection of a city for the convention in 1926 was taken up as the last order of business before the convention, it was found that there were seven cities in the field for this honor: Cincinnati, Cleveland, Ohio; Chicago, Indianapolis, Philadelphia, Niagara Falls, Richmond, Virginia.

Mr. Snyder, President of the Cleveland Industrial Lenders' Association, formally invited the Association to hold its 1926 convention in Cleveland, stating that letters of invitation had also been sent by the Mayor of Cleveland, the President of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce and the Presidents of the Cleveland and Ohio Industrial Lenders' Association.

Secretary Kehr read formal invitations from Chicago, Niagara Falls, Indianapolis, Cleveland, and Cincinnati, after which Mr. Burnette of Richmond invited the Association to meet in the Virginia city. Mr. Hancock said that Indianapolis desired the convention, but that he would not press the invitation in view of the fact that Cleveland was bent upon obtaining it. Mr. Hartz moved that the 1926 convention be held in Cleveland and the motion was carried.

At the request of the Chair, Mr. Henderson of Chicago told of a phase of a publicity campaign in that city undertaken by the Division of Industrial Lenders in the Chicago Association of Commerce. By assessing members of the division, Mr. Henderson related, $1,500 was raised for a series of advertisements in Chicago Commerce, published by the Association of Commerce. It was believed that the advertisements would be of value because of the contact of lenders with the Association. The only direct result of the advertisement that he could name, he said, was a letter received by publishers from an officer of the American Bank Note Company, criticizing the advertisement and the publication for accepting and running it. At this point, he said, Mr. Napier of Chicago, was requested to answer the objector, and Mr. Henderson requested Mr. Napier to take up the narrative.

Mr. Napier told how he had telephoned the vice president of the American Bank-Note Company asking for an interview which was granted. Equipped with documents, Mr. Napier called at the office of the objecting officer, and upon being admitted to his presence, he introduced himself and began the conference with the question, "What's the matter with the small loan business?"

"What isn't the matter?" the officer asked in turn.

Mr. Napier then explained to him the provisions of the law regulating the business and the rate of interest fixed by it. This rate, he admitted to the officer, was high, but not excessive. The objecting officer saw the distinction and said that the point was well taken. Mr. Napier then recounted the support and indorsement given to legitimate industrial lending by many economists, sociologists and students of social welfare of distinguished character and reputation throughout the country, and added that this seemed to impress the officer who at the close of the conference bade him good-bye with several degrees more cordiality than he had greeted him at his entrance into his office.

The next day, Mr. Napier continued, he received from this officer a copy of a letter he had written to the publishers of Chicago Commerce in which he expressed his regret that he had criticized the lenders' advertisement and hoped that his objection to it would be disregarded.

Mr. A. R. Snite, president of the Illinois Industrial Lenders' Association, then took the floor and after referring to the pleasure that those attending the convention had experienced in Providence and the cordiality of the hospitality extended to them by the people of Rhode Island, suggested that the members of the Association then present at the convention individually aid in the relief of the families of the victims of the Steamer Mackinac disaster at Newport several weeks before. These families, he said, were nearly all of the wage earner class and sorely needed the aid of those better off in worldly possessions, and Mr. Snite asked that tellers be named to go about in the convention hall and pass the hat for whatever contributions those present felt they could make toward the relief fund.

Chairman East appointed tellers who passed about the hall and within less than three minutes returned with their hats crammed with bills, which when counted amounted to $227, which was sent to the Providence Chamber of Commerce to be applied to the relief fund conducted by that body.

Upon motion by Dr. Mueller a rising vote of thanks to the retiring and present officers of the Association and all the local committees in charge was extended by the convention. Dr. Mueller also offered a motion instructing the National Secretary to send a telegram to Mr. W. G. Wood, former National Chairman of the Association, who is ill in North Carolina, expressing the regret of the convention at his illness and the earnest hope for his speedy recovery. The session then adjourned until the annual dinner of the Association at half past six that evening.

When the members and guests of the Association sat down to dinner in the evening the large ball room of the Biltmore was crowded with tables at which every place was occupied. The local committee had provided an excellent menu and while dinner was being served music was provided by the Honolulu Four, and Eva and Anna McMahon, harmony singers, who weaved in and out between the tables as they sang, and even invaded the speakers' dais. After service of dinner had been completed, handsome necklaces were distributed as favors to every lady present.

Tate J. Harrison of Waterloo, Iowa, was toastmaster, and by unanimous agreement he was a complete and unqualified success in the role. Mr. Harrison's unfailing and expansive good humor, which is so marked a characteristic in his everyday life, did not fail him in functioning as the presiding officer of the dinner and was evoked with such good effect that his task of introducing speakers on serious subjects and filling in the intervals between speeches with humorous comment was as enjoyable to the diners as it apparently was to Mr. Harrison.

The first after-dinner speaker of the evening, Mr. Charles P. Sisson, Attorney General of Rhode Island, was introduced by Mr. Harrison after several good natured and facetious remarks upon politicians, and lawyers, and in particular, one lawyer who dreamed he died and applied for admission within the pearly gates, but was denied admittance by St. Peter on the ground that he was a lawyer. The dreamer objected that he should not be denied, because he could look within the gates of Paradise and see a deceased friend who in life had been a lawyer. The guardian of the gates looking at the heavenly inmate indicated by the applicant for admission, replied that the inmate was no lawyer but had only thought himself one.

Mr. Sisson in his opening remarks showed himself to be in the spirit of the occasion and neatly countered the toastmaster's badinage by some of his own at Mr. Harrison's expense. Launching into his subject, he spoke earnestly and eloquently upon personal responsibility, with special application to the responsibility of parents toward their children, and finally applied this sense of responsibility to those in the business of industrial lending. Mr. Sisson's address, which visibly impressed his hearers by its vigor and earnestness, will appear in the Year Book.

Following Attorney General Sisson, Mr. Howard Bryant of Baltimore was called upon and in an interesting talk delivered without notes, he told of the evolution of industrial lending from the low plane of twenty years ago, before the era of progressive legislation, to its present status of a legitimate and beneficial business of necessary and valuable service to a great proportion of the public. Mr. Bryant's address will appear in the Year Book.

Dr. A. D. Martin, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Central Falls, Rhode Island, the last of the after-dinner speakers, greatly amused his hearers by relating several anecdotes illustrative of Scotch thrift and canniness, the clergyman's powers as a reconteur being greatly aided by his own Scotch accent. Dr. Martin expressed his sense of edification as a clergyman at the serious and helpful nature of the addresses delivered by the two speakers who preceded him, and made a plea for faith as against an attitude of agnostic criticism. Dr. Martin's address will appear in the Year Book.

After the program of speeches the ball room was cleared for dancing and to the music of a splendid orchestra the ball room was given over to this recreation until one o'clock Friday morning. Between the dances Baby Edna Sedgwick, of Providence, gave exhibitions of novelty dancing in costume.

Friday had been set apart by the Rhode Island hosts as Newport Day, and busses had been chartered to take the visitors for the drive to Newport, where an elaborate program for their entertainment had been arranged. Friday proved to be one of the wettest days in the annals of Rhode Island, but despite the pouring rain and every visible indication of an uninterrupted downpour for the rest of the day, about 250 passengers embarked for the trip that morning.

True to indications, the weather instead of improving became steadily worse as the day wore on and when the visitors arrived at Newport Beach about noon they disembarked under the protection of umbrellas for the few short steps from the busses to the shelter of the casino.

Mr. G. F. Lewis, of Newport, had arranged a program which completely filled the day, beginning at eleven o'clock when the visitors were scheduled to arrive in Newport. Due to the storm, the busses did not arrive until nearly noon and the trip around Ocean Drive, scheduled to occupy from eleven to twelve o'clock, was called off. Instead the visitors were ushered without delay into the dining hall of the casino where a most enjoyable shore luncheon was served. As the rain continued unabated during the luncheon and after it, hurried arrangements were made for the engagement of an orchestra to provide music for dancing which many elected to do, although others decided to brave the rain and take busses for a sight-seeing tour of the points of interest in Newport.

The culminating event of the day was the clambake in the beach dining hall at five o'clock. Everybody present had heard of the wide spread fame of a Rhode Island clambake, and after first hand experience with this gustatory triumph they were convinced that its claims to glory are well founded. Preceding the dinner, Mr. East introduced Mayor Mortimer A. Sullivan of Newport, who extended a cordial welcome to the visitors and apologized for the brand of weather that Newport had provided for the occasion, at the same time reminding them that "it is always fair weather when good fellows get together." Mayor Sullivan enumerated the historical and other attractions of Newport, which he hoped the visitors had seen and enjoyed, and again expressed his pleasure at the opportunity to welcome to the city these citizens of other States.

After the dinner, Mr. East called upon Mr. Walter C. Campbell of the Newport Chamber of Commerce and Mr. Harry A. Titus, of Newport. Mr. Campbell spoke very briefly, adding on behalf of the Chamber to the welcome extended by the Mayor. Mr. Titus spoke at more length, commending the American Industrial Lenders Association for its work in fostering a system of industrial lending by which men and women of small means are enabled to borrow on reasonable terms and are not forced in their necessities to submit to the exactions of unscrupulous lenders.

During the dinner an orchestra had furnished enlivening music and after the dinner a special hour in the dance hall was obtained and here a large number of the diners repaired to while away the time until the hour scheduled for the return to Providence. The return trip began at nine o'clock and by eleven the visitors arrived at the Biltmore hotel, ending a very rainy, but on the whole enjoyable day.

Many of those attending the convention left Providence Friday night or early Saturday morning for their homes or visits to other points in New England and the East. A goodly number of the visitors to Providence had motored there and many of them used the opportunity to visit places and scenes in New England famous in American history.

The silver trophy for the best percentage attendance at the convention was awarded to Rhode Island, with a record of 77 per cent. Connecticut was second with 65 per cent of its members registered. Maine third with 60 per cent.

REAL ESTATE LOANS

By Clarence Hodson

None of the experienced, successful, well established industrial lending concerns make small loans upon real estate secured by mortgage, deed of trust or conveyance. Their loans are made entirely upon guaranteed notes, or assignment of part of the wages to be earned in the future, or chattel mortgage, or deed of trust on principal articles of household furniture.

Since the anti-loan shark legislation has been enacted in a number of the principal states, a good many persons have been attracted to this field of business under operating conditions that make it especially attractive to them. As a rule they arrange with some young lawyer for the owners and directors to meet one evening a week in his office, at which time most of the loans are granted very much like a building and loan association works. In this way they can do a small business practically without expense, and the gross interest rate charged represents practically the net earning rate of capital employed.

A good many instances are found where these people deal with persons whom they know personally, and they are, therefore, in a position to obtain from them assignment of wages, confessed judgment (in some states), a note with one or two friends as guarantors, a chattel mortgage on stock of merchandise or household furniture, and a second or third mortgage on borrower's equity in his home property.

Moreover, as the atmosphere of such loan concerns is that of the lack of technical rights, with "professional" fees, we have found in a great many cases that failure to meet payments promptly seized as an opportunity for foreclosures, suits and expenses.

Moreover, these parties in various states have found something that was never found in the law before by state licensing officials or money lenders, and that is that in practically none of the states is there anything in the law which says a borrower must accept anticipation of payment and stop interest on such date. Therefore, if the party is able to pay in advance, these people accept the payment but do not stop the interest, and sometimes they have refused to accept the payment saying that the terms of the loan are that certain sums are to be paid at certain times with interest, and they will not waive the interest for that is the way they make their living.

As a rule, cases of this sort reported are people who are not American born and, therefore, are practically not the type of influence that would secure the enactment of any anti-loan shark legislation, but unfortunately they are in a position to cause the repeal of it and that happened in Connecticut where there is an Italian loan concern that has been making second and third mortgage loans, and has been refusing to accept payments in advance of due date. The Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce felt indignant about it, as to the various instances reported to them, and they and their friends had a 2½% a month amendment to the loan law introduced in the legislature, which at the close, slipped through the Senate and then passed the House with an amendment of 3% a month, but was later vetoed by the Governor.

Speaking of anticipating payments, it may be observed that the Arizona law alone makes provision for this. The suggestions made that similar provision be incorporated in the present draft of the uniform small loan law has never been approved by those with power to embody same, but in view of the amendment to the loan law of Connecticut definitely providing that every borrower shall have the right to anticipate payments due in the future, and stop the cost of interest on payment date, indicates that there is a demand for that sort of thing, and the people who violate it are the persons who do nothing to influence the enactment of remedial loan legislation, and yet do much towards its repeal or modification. No reputable money lender ever refused to accept advance payments when offered.

The New Jersey law is like the others which regulate loans of $300 or less, secured or unsecured. It does not say secured by real estate security or not, but it is the policy of the Department since the law was enacted in 1914 to frown upon the rate of interest which money lenders charge on the theory the loan is risky, and then permit them to be secured by real estate mortgage. Therefore, the state examiners of the Department of Banking and Insurance of New Jersey invariably submits to the manager of each loan office examined an affidavit which is required to be signed and sworn to to the effect that no loans have been made upon security or lien upon real estate. Therefore, in New Jersey while the law does not so read, by reason of the administrative policy of the Banking Department, real estate loans are practically forbidden.

Speaking further of anticipating payments, the Russell Sage Foundation in 1923 inserted a provision in the uniform law to this effect, but the Connecticut law had previously been enacted. The West Virginia and Florida laws contain this provision for anticipating payments, but do not provide that loans may not be made upon real estate security. It would seem the time has about arrived for amending the draft with other appropriate changes in the text to make it affective that real estate security cannot be accepted for loans at the maximum interest charges authorized by the small loan law.

ANY NEW OFFICES IN YOUR STATE?

State Secretaries who are advised by the State supervising officials of the licensing of new offices, can help the editor to make an interesting article each month if he will report to the National Secretary the names and local addresses of all new licensees. In states where there are no laws and no supervising officials, individual members can report this information to the same office.

It is believed that this information will serve many useful purposes, especially in the matter of locating and collecting skip accounts. The A. I. L. A. Year Book as you know, includes only members of the national organization in good standing. For the purpose of increasing our membership and locating and collecting skip accounts, this information should prove very valuable. Mr. State Secretary, your coöperation and that of other individual members in unorganized territory, is desired.

SOME PROMINENT MEN

You will be pleased to know that our people have sent out 10,000 "Some Prominent Men on the Necessity for Industrial Banking" pamphlets, throughout the United States, and some abroad.

We have endeavored to place them in the hands of the public whose education on this subject will be helpful to the loan business in general.

Our thought is that you might make mention of this in LENDERS NEWS, just so that it might serve as an example to others to go and do likewise.

A PERSONAL MESSAGE TO EVERY MEMBER OF THE RETAIL CREDIT MEN'S NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FROM VICE PRESIDENT LEOPOLD L. MEYER

The Retail Credit Men's National Association has decided that it's nation-wide Educational and Publicity Campaign shall officially open October 25th. Whereas, the entire program of the Educational Committee has not been arranged, the details of "PAY YOUR BILLS PROMPTLY WEEK" have been worked out and exceptional results are anticipated.

It is planned that in every community in the United States in which there is an organized Retail Credit Men's Local Association or Retail Merchants Association there shall be published in one of the leading newspapers a series of four ads to appear on alternate days beginning with Sunday, October 25th. The same ads shall appear simultaneously in all newspapers. In the larger cities full page ads are contemplated. However, in no instance shall an ad be less than three columns, ten inches. The ads decided upon to be used in this Campaign have been attractively prepared by one of the leading national advertising agencies of the United States. In an effort to make this campaign most successful appeals are being made to the merchants themselves, through ads appearing in the leading trade papers, urging co-operation with the credit men in putting their Campaign across.

It is planned that on the night preceding the appearance of the first newspaper ad of the Campaign, talks will be made over the radio by prominent men throughout the country calling the public's attention to the Campaign and vividly enlarging upon the thought behind the publicity.

A complete circulation of the entire membership of the Association is being undertaken, in orden to insure full co-operation in this publicity and educational undertaking. Placards and posters are to be distributed by the Retail Credit Men's National Association. Inserts and enclosures are being distributed also to accompany all statements mailed out on October 31st.

Whereas, the full details of the Campaign are being planned by the National Association it is of course expected that each Local Association shall pay the expense of the advertising appearing in it's local paper. In this latter respect, the newspapers of the country are being requested to get in touch with the various Local Associations and lend a necessary hand in making the Campaign successful.

LEOPOLD L. MEYER, Chairman,
Educational and Publicity Committee.

THE INSTALMENT SALES LAW

A new Act of the Legislature, which goes into effect to-day, requires registration at the Prothonotary's office of all contracts of instalment or conditional sale, with copies of agreements, within ten days after made, and makes the records public property. It is evidently intended to remove ground for argument and to provide every buyer with a certificated cancellation of contract, when its terms shall have been fulfilled.

The act apparently is broad enough to cover all kinds of goods, household, personal, mercantile and automobiles and railroad equipment. Incidentally, it protects the buyer of goods from anyone who has them under instalment, by obligating the seller to notify the buyer by filing the copy of contract of sale, under penalty of voiding the seller's interest in the goods.

The new law is a complicated affair, with provisions in case of removal of goods, damage to them, malicious injury of them, conditions of resale when instalments are defaulted, and many other conditions. And it defines a conditional sale in such terms that there will very likely be divided opinion, and a lot of lawsuits, over whether disposal of goods by bailment or lease, which is the process usually followed in this State, must be registered under its provisions.

In the absence of a chattel mortgage law, such as exists in most States, Pennsylvania has followed the bailment or leasing plan quite generally.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

CONVENTION NEWS

Providence, R. I., Sept. 3.—"Limitation of industrial loan service to certain classes of applicants, based on property qualifications, is bad in morals, doubtful in law, and is poor business policy," declared P. S. Reeves, of Pittsburgh, in an address this afternoon before the convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association at the Providence Biltmore Hotel.

Mr. Reeves' statement was made in the course of a plea for a broader conception of service to borrowers, in which he said that lending is essentially a business of service, of the total charge for which, according to Professor Ryan of Harvard, only about one-eight is pure interest.

Describing the limitations placed by lenders upon their service. Mr. Reeves said that some extend their loans on various kinds of personal property, while others base their service primarily on the ability and character of the loan applicant. He held that no worthy applicant should be refused credit, whether or not he is able to give property security for the loan.

"It is your duty to take the risks naturally incident to your line of business," he declared. "The law has given you a return for your service that is presumably ample to enable you to take some risk. If you are to demand actual visible security in every case, where is the risk? The more you restrict your service greater will be the cost of operation. If you stand ready to consider all worthy applicants you inevitably lower the cost of new business. The office that is open to all classes of business may show more losses but it will also show less overhead in operation."

Pleading for a finance service "as broad as you can possibly make it and not limited to mere lending of money." Mr. Reeves said that an ideal loan service is one that takes care of all worthy necessitous applicants, but that this ideal had not yet been reached.

The time must come, he said, when all the States must pass legislation similar to the Russell Sage Foundation Small Loan Law, thus permitting small loan service to all the millions of necessitous people throughout the country.

"When that day comes," he concluded, "the old-time high-rate lender will be as extinct as the dodo and his name only a memory."

Providence, R. I., Sept. 3.—Contending that public ignorance regarding any one business is the fault of those engaged in that business, E. M. Steimle, of Atlanta, Georgia, this afternoon before the convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association described the results of an information campaign in Georgia.

"When the ignorance of the industrial loan business on the part of the credit men and merchants slapped us in the face," he said, "we got busy with our educational publicity campaign, using the three Atlanta papers."

The Georgia Industrial Lenders' Association Mr. Steimle said, concentrated its campaign on the education of credit men and merchants, the State judiciary, the big industrial executives who employ the class of people who borrow and the actual borrowers themselves, as to operations of legitimate lenders and the nature of the supervisory law under which they conduct their business.

As a result of this information campaign, he said, the Southern Conference of the Associated Retail Credit Men at its convention in Atlanta unanimously adopted a resolution favoring the enactment of the Russell Sage Uniform Small Loan Law in every state in the Union, and the following week the Associated Retail Credit Men of Atlanta asked that the membership of the Georgia Industrial Lenders' Association affiliate with them and the National organization, which has been done.

Mr Steimle, said that Georgia lenders had discovered that the State judiciary was not conversant with the methods and principles of legitimate lenders, and was unaware that there was any distinction between their business and that of salary buyers or outlaw lenders. As a result of a campaign in a daily law journal, judges made many inquiries of the State Association's attorney, and Mr. Steimle quoted the Chief Judge of the Atlanta Municipal Court as commending the information campaign for having clarified the situation and drawn the line of distinction between the two classes of lenders, the legitimate and the illegitimate.

Similarly, as a result of efforts to inform industrial heads and the borrowers themselves, a better understanding of the small loan business and the law under which it operates was brought about, Mr. Steimle said, and an appreciation of the difference between legalized lending and outlaw lending had become more general.

Providence, R. I., Sept. 3.—Borrowers were divided into three classes by Charles J. Bernstein of Bangor, Maine, who in a business talk before the American Industrial Lenders' Association convention this morning at the Providence Biltmore Hotel said the three kinds of borrowers are; the man who borrows and pays, the man who borrows and tries to pay, and the man who borrows.

The last class, the man who borrows with the "try and get it" idea, said Mr. Bernstein, was the subject of his discourse, "The Home of Discontention." In particular, he said, "the international and dishonorable brotherhood of Auto Acrobats—so called because they have national or acquired ability to jump through any hole, legal or otherwise—were the fly in the lender's ointment.

"These flivverers must have gas, oil, tires, and parts, no matter to what extremes they go. These disciples of Munchausen can fill out an application for a loan without a visible flaw. They come to you with real tears and a dramatic story of a new baby at their home, which an investigation turns out to be a Baby Paige, commonly called a Jewett."

However, Mr. Bernstein said, loans to automobile borrowers who are responsibly entitled to credit should not be denied, because that would defeat the purpose of the Uniform Small Loan Law to aid legitimate and worthy borrowers, driving them to recourse to extortionate lenders.

The risks involved in this class of loans present a greater hazard than any other, Mr. Bernstein said, for the lender must satisfy himself that the automobile is free from incumbrances, that it is properly insured, and that the owner is engaged in a legitimate business.

"I find that a large class of men," he continued, "who invariably state they want money to clean up some small debts, have an installment due on their cars. The man who says he must pay his taxes does not inform you it is for license plates and state taxes on automobile, and after cross-questioning some applicants will finally admit that the money is needed to buy tires.

"To those of you who are looking for absolutely safe risks on automobiles, I would suggest that you attach a new device—patent pending—to each mortgaged automobile. This is called a return radio, and on the occasion of an unpaid mortgage at maturity a button is touched in the lender's office, whereby the automobile is headed direct to the office automatically, without injury to car or pedestrian on its return."

Providence, R. I., Sept. 3.—Bolsheviks are made by oppression, poor wages, bad living conditions, and most of all by living continually in an unhappy frame of mind, said C. Howard Hood, of Baltimore, in an address this afternoon at the convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association in the Providence Biltmore Hotel.

Mr. Hood's remarks were in the course of his talk on relations that should exist between headquarters and field men, and he added: "Bolshevism is nothing more or less than the result of unhealthy thinking. The happy worker thinks no unhealthy thoughts. The happy loan man will never be a Bolshevik. He will always be a credit to the business, a useful member of society and a good American citizen."

Repression of the employe by his employer, who does not allow him to have a thought of his own, is a short-sighted policy, said Mr. Hood, and is reflected in conduct by the employe which reacts unfavorably upon the entire lending business.

"Any matter that touches vitally upon our business as a whole," Mr. Hood concluded, "is most assuredly of the deepest concern to the business as a whole."

Providence, R. I., Sept. 3.—That the national body of lenders is the custodian of the good repute of the business was the tenor of an address by W. R. Hancock, of Indianapolis, this afternoon at the convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association at the Providence Biltmore Hotel. Mr. Hancock in reciting the advantages of organization said that the various state banking departments depended upon the Association largely to help police the business and eliminate abuses.

Through the efforts of the Association, he declared, a change in the attitude of the public, as well as of various organizations and the courts, toward the business had been brought about. A well deserved favorable public opinion, he asserted, was vital to the progress and stability of industrial lending, and this could be attained by strict adherence to the "Declaration of Principles" formally adopted by the Association.

Mr. Hancock attributed directly to the Association's influence the development of a better general understanding of the methods and problems of industrial lending, and declared that by joining forces with the Russell Sage Foundation for the enactment of well-considered legislation abuses had been corrected and conditions helpful to borrower and lender alike had been promoted.

Also through organization, he said, industrial lenders had won the confidence and coöperation of business concerns with whom they came in contact, citing particularly the affiliations with the national and local chamber of commerce and credit organization.

Providence, R. I., Sept. 3.—Results of a plan to establish contacts between industrial lenders and credit men, merchants and bankers, whose credit problems are identical, were described at this morning's session of the American Industrial Lenders' Association convention at the Providence Biltmore Hotel

Arthur L. Wick, of Philadelphia, Chairman of the Retail Merchants Bureau Committee, reported that the plan would reciprocally accomplish three objects: save the making of an account to an unreliable prospect who had already proved himself unworthy of credit, locate delinquent debtors, and save the merchant losses by loaning to his slow customer an amount sufficient to pay off his transaction, thereby permitting the merchant to reinvest his capital.

To put the plan into practice chairmen of the various state associations where industrial lending has been legalized have been requested to appoint a sub-committee in every city in their territory where lenders are actively engaged. Fifty per cent of the state associations thus far have appointed these sub-committees, Mr. Wick reported.

Providence, R. I., Sept 2.—A fourteen year struggle to legitimatize the small loan business in Michigan was described by B. R. Henderson, of Chicago, in a talk this afternoon at the convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association in the Providence Biltmore Hotel. Efforts to enact equitable loan legislation in that State began in 1911, culminating this year in the enactment of the Russell Sage Foundation small loan law which became effective last month.

The loan shark evil in Michigan had become so acute by 1911, said Mr. Henderson, that in that year the legislature passed a law that put most of them out of business, causing a few, however, to "bootleg" it. The maximum interest rate permitted by the law was so low that the law-abiding lenders found it impossible to do business at even a small profit and in 1913 the law was declared unconstitutional.

As a result of the coöperation of the Russell Sage Foundation and the Provident Loan Society of Detroit with the lenders, another law was passed in 1915 in which the legal interest rate was raised to 3 per cent. In this case also it was found impossible to do business at a fair profit and in 1916 the Sage Foundation and reputable lenders, after a survey of the entire lending field by a commission of experts, drafted a Uniform small loan law providing for state supervision of lending and fixing the maximum rate on unpaid balances at 3½ per cent.

An effort to have the bill passed was unsuccessful in 1919, but two years later it was enacted, except for the interest rate, which was put at the former figure of 3 per cent. In 1923 another attempt to change the rate was unsuccessful.

This year the campaign to amend the law to permit interest rate of 3½ per cent was successful, as was also an amendment to prohibit so-called salary buyers from operating in Michigan.

Providence, R. I., Sept. 2.—The economy in cost and efficient operation of the small loan business through standardization of legal papers was stressed by L. E. Pope of Richmond, Va., in an address this afternoon at the convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association at the Providence Biltmore Hotel.

Acceptance of state supervision and a low rate of interest, Mr. Pope said, had proved no deterrent to the progress of the business. This progress, he said, has been possible by coöperation, standardization, and individual systematizing of the business, but not enough thought has been given to the value of adopting uniform papers. Only seven states have had the matter under consideration, and of this number only four have taken any action.

The adoption of uniform security papers, Mr. Pope asserted, had a value from an economical, practical and legal standpoint, as it enabled printing to be done at one central point, facilitated the work of the supervising departments in the various states, and in the event of any court decision requiring changes, these changes could be made simultaneously on the uniform documents in use.

Providence, R. I., Sept. 2.—That the borrowing public to-day can absorb a hundredfold the capital now invested in the industrial lending field was a statement made by Fred B. Snite, of Chicago, in an address this afternoon at the convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association at the Providence Biltmore Hotel. He quoted statements that 85 per cent of the adult population are without banking facilities and in emergencies requiring loans must obtain them outside regular banking channels, saying he believed 99 per cent of the people are honest and will pay their just obligations unless misfortune prevents.

The younger generation also found a defender in Mr. Snite, who said there was a need for young men of ideals and vision in the small loan business, that the ideals of the young men of to-day are far superior to those of the old men and that the modern young man himself is superior to the old business man.

"The younger man who chooses for his vocation the industrial loan business," said Mr. Snite, "and who keeps ever in mind the idea of service first to a borrower, and makes profits secondary, will eventually have the largest and best organization, paying in return the highest dividends. The loan business of the past fell into disrepute because of the lack of young men with ideals.

"The loan business to-day calls for men who would refuse a loan to a man or woman when they desire to use it for some unnecessary purpose, where the borrower is likely to become involved, thereby diminishing his productive ability, or forcing him to deprive himself and his family of the ordinary things of life."

COMMUNICATION

Richmond, Va., Sept. 12, 1925

To the Members of the American Industrial Lenders Association.

Permit me to take advantage of this opportunity to give expression to my feeling of profound gratitude to you for the honor which you have conferred upon me by making me National Chairman of our Association. In a busy life which has been crowded with many events and during which the partiality of my friends has brought to me more coveted honors than I deserve, there has never been an occasion on which I have felt more truly grateful than the hour in which I was made National Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders Association. But profound as is my feeling of personal pleasure at this great honor, it is surpassed by my keen sense of appreciation of the responsibilities which it entails and my recognition of the many and arduous duties which must be performed in order to make my administration creditable and serviceable to our organization.

The business in which we are engaged has passed through the most difficult stages of its development and is now recognized as a necessary element in our country's economic life. However, the final battle for existence is never won and only by the exercise of constant vigilance and sustained endeavor can our present position be maintained and further progress made possible. I pledge to you my most earnest efforts and unsparing diligence to advance in every way the best interests of our Association. No sacrifice of my own time and no effort that I can put forth will be too great to be cheerfully made whenever necessary, but however great may be the devotion to this cause and though my qualifications for this position were far greater than they are, I cannot accomplish the work to be done alone. I, therefore, call upon the entire membership of this organization for unstinted coöperation and support. With that assured, success is certain and without it, failure is inevitable. The success of regular troops on the field of battle over raw and untrained collections of men is due, not to any fundamental differences in the quality of the men engaged but to that precision of action which is the result of coördination of effort. This is no less true in the world of business, and if our organization can attain to that high degree of discipline and coöperation which it should strive for, the success of our efforts is a logical and natural consequence.

Remember that my services are at your disposal. Let me hope that your services are likewise mine to command. With this happy understanding, for I assume that what I ask is already granted, let us address ourselves to the work of the coming year cheerfully and confidently.

Very truly yours,
Edgar P. East,
National Chairman.

THE VILLAGE RHYMESTER

By Carlyle Emery

Shelby Synd

Dear Folks:

I know a man who has the gift of speech that's soft and sweet, and when he's up against a thing he knows he cannot beat, he'll start to pour excuses out and make you think he's right, instead of rolling up his sleeves and getting in the fight.

He makes mistakes and covers them with talk that's mighty smooth, there's something in his tone of voice that seems to lull and soothe. He looks accusers in the eye and then he starts to purr, and proves mistakes are little things that often must occur. He'll owe some bills for many months and when for funds he's pressed, he'll go and tell his creditors how deeply he's distressed. He'll lay it on so smooth and slick, his creditors will sigh, and ask him if there's something else that he would like to buy.

He always has a ready tongue that drips with honey sweet, and yet in justice to the man, he's really not a cheat. He knows the power that he holds when in a risky place, and so there's nothing in the world that he's afraid to face.

That's why he's careless in the things that should have lots of care, but nothing lies ahead of him excepting deep despair. For talk is cheap and cannot last forever and a day, and time will bring him to the place where he will have to pay.

Cordially yours— T. V. R.

SMALL LOANS BILL VETOED BY GOVERNOR HELD CONSTITUTIONAL

Saves Big Sums

Loan Shark Case

The decision in the loan shark case was rendered by Associate Justice Frank Hall, the style of the case being State exrel, vs. Dixie Finance Co. The case was filed against the company by the state commissioner of finance and insurance and the attorney-general, and enjoined the Dixie Company from engaging in lending money at rates more than 10 per cent. Judge Hall held that the last loan shark bill which the legislature passed was now operative because the first bill, Senate Bill 355, known as the small loans, was operative because the governor failed to return it with his veto within the five-day period allowed by the statute. The vetoed bill, now held valid, repealed the loan shark law of 1917.

The legislature then attempted to pass another loan shark bill (Chapter 76, Acts 1925) based on the 1917 law, and since the court held the first bill knocked out the 1917 law the second bill was, of course, void. Thus a bitter fight between two classes of small money lenders is brought to a close. The law now operative by the court decision permits monthly interest of 3½ per cent on unpaid balances on loans and will lower loan shark interest rates if carried to maturity, it is claimed by proponents of the measure, who staged a brilliant parliamentary and legal battle for the law which appeared doomed when the governor's veto was sustained in the general assembly.—Nashville, Tennessean, August 1, 1925.

SUPREME COURT REVERSES THOMAS ON USURY APPEAL

Holding that the charging of more than three and a half per cent interest per month on a loan is usury in the state of Georgia, and the borrower under such conditions is under no obligation to repay the loan, the state supreme court on Thursday handed down a decision reversing Judge E. D. Thomas and the Fulton Superior Court in dismissing on a general demurrer the case of G. M. Davis against the Atlanta Finance Company and several other loan brokers.

This action arose when David filed a petition in the superior court alleging that he had borrowed money from the Atlanta Finance Company and other small loan concerns on salary assignments, and that the brokers, by manipulation of fees and brokerage charges, had charged him more than three and a half per cent per month interest. He also alleged that during a period of months he had repaid to the lenders for more than the original loan, plus the legal interest charges, and on that basis he fought release from further obligation.

The defendant loan companies filed a general demurrer to the petition, which sought to prevent them from presenting the salary assignments to Davis' employers. Judge Thomas upheld the demurrer and dismissed the petition.

The supreme court holds that the petition on its face shows that Davis had been forced to pay more than the legal three and a half per cent per month interest, and that if this were proven in the trial of the case it would be sufficient ground to relieve the plaintiff from any further obligation to the loan companies involved. It also is held that the allegations set out in the petition constitute a legitimate cause for action and the petition should not have been dismissed on demurrer.

The loan brokers involved in the litigation are the Atlanta Finance Company, the Bristol Finance Company, the Fulton Purchasing Company, the Grant Trading Company, the Dollar Supply Company, Henry & Co., the Salary Investment Company, the Edgewood Finance Company and Jackson, Chestnut & Lawrence.

GEORGIA

The legislature adjourned without passing any legislation affecting the small loan business.

EFFORTS REWARDED

During the Providence Convention, Chairman Aufderheide appointed Messers Stroup, Moss and Beyer to act as judges in the contest to determine the three best papers describing "The Hardest Collection I ever made." The first prize of $25 was awarded to J. C. Lewis, of the Household Finance Corporation, of Norristown, Pa. The second prize of $15 went to J. G. Keiser, of the Beneficial Loan Society of Paterson, N. J., while J. B. Lafferty of the Community Finance Service, of Pittsburgh, Pa., captured the third prize of $10.

BLAMES CREDIT FOR LOSS

Judge Says $250,000,000 Annually Granted to "Beats" Could Be Cut

The annual loss of $250,000,000 to credit "beats" in this country could be materially reduced if business interests would take proper precautions, according to Judge J. Whitaker Thompson, of the United States District Court for Eastern Pennsylvania. Judge Thompson's statement is given in a bulletin issued by the American Institute of Accountants, by whom he was invited to file his findings on the subject.

"I think I am safe in saying," he declared, "that in all such cases tried before me, where it has appeared credit was extended to a person on strength of false statements, the falsity of the statements might have been discovered had the creditors made even a slight effort to learn the truth.

"GET YOUR MAN!"

The National Association of Credit Men has an emergency slogan—"Get Your Man," which means a drive to check the big credit crime wave that has swept over the United States in recent years. LOAN CO. SUES TO BLOCK EX-EMPLOYE BREAKING SILENCE

Suit to enjoin Gilbert J. Eigelbach from divulging any information obtained while in their employ, was filed to-day in the Circuit Court by the Boone Loan and Investment Company by its attorneys Doolan & Doolan. According to the petition Eigelbach, when employed by the concern three years ago, signed an agreement, in which he certified that he would neither divulge the names of the clientage, nor any information obtained while employed and also agreed that he would not enter a similar business in the event of terminating his employment.

The petition alleges that for the past six months Eigelbach has divulged information relative to the business to one customer. It is charged the information was of a confidential nature and that Eigelbach violated his contract. The petition seeks an injunction to enjoin the plaintiff from divulging further information.

CITY WORKERS DEBT RIDDEN

Two Thousand Seattle Employes Are Victims of "Loan Sharks"

Seattle, Wash., (A. P.)—Two thousand of approximately 5,000 municipal employes here are victims of loan agencies commonly called "loan sharks," a recent check of payroll sheets in Comptroller Harry W. Carroll's office disclosed.

The majority of these debt-ridden workers never see their pay checks, which are assigned to the agency when a loan is contracted. After the agency deducts its interest charge the debtor receives what remains.

Though this state has a drastic usury law, making the maximum legal interest rate one per cent a month, investigation shows as high as 36 per cent is collected in some instances. To the high interest rates city officials attribute the fact that some borrowers cannot free themselves from debt.

The agencies operate under a pawnbrokers' license law, which permits a greater interest charge, though they are not actual pawnbrokers.

Chief of Police Severyns estimated amounts owed by his patrolmen ranged from $50 to $600, with $100 the average.

A DIFFERENT TYPE OF ADVERTISING

How to Be Distinguished

A Program Based on Four Simple Points

1. Keep your word; promises are promises, lightly or deliberately given.

2. Pay your debts; the man who borrows a dollar or is granted credit and pays it back when he said he would is nothing more or less than a phenomenon.

3. Be punctual; to be on time for one's appointments and to dispatch them on time is to appreciate the other fellow's time as well as one's own. Meeting engagements, paying one's debts and keeping one's word are all of a kind and hang together in the foregoing of a reliable citizen.

4. Return what you borrow; in a measure this principal rises and falls with number two, "Pay Your Debts," but it also includes the principle of borrowing anything from a magazine to a lawnmower.

These four cardinal points are everyday virtues, common as sunshine, and the individual who practices keeping his word, paying his debts and being on time is a distinguished man among men.

If you owe a number of small bills and want to pay them and keep your credit good, we will make you a loan on your furniture, piano, automobile or other personal property and you can repay it in small monthly installments.

Usury and Usury Laws. A Juristic-Economic Study of the Effects of State Statutory Maximums for Loan Charges upon Lending Operations in the United States. By Franklin W. Ryan. Hart, Schaffner and Marx Prize Essays, Vol. 39. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin and Company. 1924. pp. xxxi, 249.

Here is a clear book on an obscure subject,—one might say a sensible book on a foolish subject. The obscurity and folly have been heaped upon it by churchmen and lawyers, by exponents of philanthropy and exponents of greed, by clever theorists and stupid men of action. The appearance at least of clarity is given to the present day problem through an attempt to reconcile the notoriously contradictory views of the lawyer, or rather legislator, and the economist.

Mr. Ryan has a very definite thesis which can be stated, briefly and without either legal or economic technicality, somewhat as follows. The real, though perhaps inarticulate, purpose of anti-usury legislation has been to protect the weak, the ignorant, the hard-pressed, from the unconscionable bargains that are likely to be driven by shrewd and grasping money lenders. With this reasonable and laudable motive the legislators have generally shot at the wrong mark and set a maximum rate for interest in general. In fixing a rate they have thought rather of those business situations in which the element of duress or undue influence or fraud or overreaching had no bearing. They have failed to make any distinction between loans for productive and loans for consumptive purposes, between large loans and small loans, between loans involving little risk and loans involving great risk, between loans involving practically no cost to the lender and loans involving high cost to the lender, between long-time loans and short-time loans. In short, they have tried to make a single rule for the multiplicity of business elements obscured, rather than expressed, when we speak of a rate of "interest." They have, as Mr. Ryan puts it, hoped to prevent "moral usury" by establishing an inflexible rule of what he calls "legal usury," and have failed. Mr. Ryan's remedy is as simple as his diagnosis. He proposes the adoption of the so-called Uniform Small Loans Law and the repeal of the existing usury laws. In fact, he believes that legislatures will turn a deaf ear to the economist's demonstrations of the futility of usury laws until their consciences are soothed by some provision against "moral usury."

There is much opportunity afforded by such a thesis to go into economic theory and history, and Mr. Ryan makes the most of it,—for this is primarily a thesis in economics. Some of the economic theory is probably unorthodox. Bentham's classic demolition of the usury laws is criticized for its failure to make adequate allowance for moral usury. Some very fine tackling against the wind is necessary to vindicate the uniform Small Loans Law, which, after all, makes its measure of usury purely quantitative,—albeit the quantitative measure is raised from six per cent a year to three and a half per cent a month,—after the author's wholehearted rejection of existing quantitative tests on the ground that they exclude the question of moral usury from the court's consideration. Mr. Ryan sees the difficulty, but he also sees the difficulty in the alternative plan of adopting the system of some European countries, which leaves to a tribunal the broad question of whether a particular bargain is oppressive. A more interesting economic contribution is the clear analysis of the return called "interest." We are too apt to think of a return expressed in terms of percentage as a profit. A return of forty-two per cent a year or even half that amount sounds outrageous. But how much of this is profit? Let us assume that the money is loaned by a corporation. How much of this percentage will find its way into dividends, after office expenses and salaries, license fees and taxes, are paid, losses deducted, and claims prosecuted? The small loan business is an expensive business,—perhaps, as conducted under present laws, a wasteful one. Whether it can be a profitable business at one rate or another can hardly be determined by one's assuming that the net cost to the borrower represents the average return on capital to investors, without allowing for any difference between gross and net return. Perhaps a more important economic proposition is the author's statement of the function of the money lender who makes small loans to the needy. Mr. Ryan's position is this: "The man who loans $100 to his fellow-man who desperately needs it for a month, and who charges him $3.50 therefor and makes a profit of less than a dollar on the transaction, is not a 'usurer' in any true sense of the word." On the contrary, he fills a gap in our credit structure and performs a highly important social and economic function.

The validity and importance of Mr. Ryan's thesis for the lawyer is by no means dependent on his economic theory. It turns rather on this question of fact: Is a dividing line of three hundred dollars a satisfactory basis for distinguishing those cases of interest-taking of actual concern to the legislature from those of no concern to it, but in which it has intermeddled by reason of its failure to recognize any such classification? Experience is the best basis for an answer, and so far experience seems to favor Mr. Ryan's proposition. Will it be possible to maintain the propriety of such a classification in the face of constitutional requirements in the several states? It is precisely in connection with the question of the reasonableness of the classification made by small loan laws that Mr. Ryan's discussion may be drawn upon most effectively for argument in court.

There are other matters of interest to the lawyer. The discussion of the historic failure of usury laws, of the methods of evasion that have developed both in cases involving "moral usury" and in others quite free from it, furnishes an excellent contribution to the study of "the law in books and the law in action." The discussion of the rule that corporations cannot plead usury is interesting. It is interesting to note the effects of the principle that exempts the Federal Reserve Banks from state usury laws. Finally, it is interesting to perceive that the almost inevitable outcome of putting forth a standard, such as is involved in the term "moral usury" as used by Mr. Ryan, in place of a fixed precept establishing a maximum rate, is a tendency to resort to administrative discretion instead of automatic legislation. The significance of the recent grant of power to the Massachusetts supervisor of loans enabling him to fix rates is emphasized. A considerable grant of power to such officials and bodies is involved not only in the matter of licensing but also in the settling of minor disputes.

To the legal historian there is food for reflection in the progress of the usury idea through the ages from one type of civilization to another with the apparent lack of realization of its changing significance in new environments. The biblical prohibitions, undoubtedly, were highly humane in an agricultural society, where all loans were to consumers and money could not be said to "breed." The mediæval Church prohibited all interest taking in a very different society, on this biblical basis. As the various states took over from the Church complete jurisdiction over ordinary contracts, they adopted the Church view of usury. Very gradually did they make the concessions that have produced the condition prevailing to-day, in which the usury law consists generally of an arbitrary maximum for lawful interest. Incidentally, the rigor of the penalty for usury has been relaxed, though there are states in which a usurious stipulation works a forfeiture of part of the lawful interest, or all of it, or even of the principal. Meanwhile the law has permitted the growth of devices under which there is practically no limit to one's return on one's capital, so long as it is nominally invested rather than loaned. There is still entirely too much virtue in a name. Borderland studies between the law and the facts of life, such as the present study by Mr. Ryan, may do much to overcome the "jurisprudence of conceptions."

SHYLOCK'S CLAIM

Lord Darling's Questions to a Witness

Amusing Passages

"There is a famous case, not heard in this country, in which a person named Shylock was the plaintiff and one named Antonio the defendant. You may have heard of it. What do you think should have been done in that case?"

The question was addressed by Lord Darling, when presiding yesterday over the Joint Committee of the House of Lords and the House of Commons on the Money Lenders' Bill, to a witness—Mr. Barry Cohen, solicitor, of Salisbury House, City of London—who replied: "The case is not in the law reports, my lord." (Laughter.)

Lord Darling: But you are not now concerned with the law reports.

Witness: We are not supposed to read anything else. (Laughter.)

Lord Darling: Well, what would you have done in that case?

Witness: Well, I should have allowed that case to be reopened, giving the judge power to reconsider the whole case and, if need be, fix the amount of the award. (Laughter.)

Lord Darling: You know that in that case the money, the capital, and heavy interest were tendered half through the hearing.

Witness: I remember the case, but it is not in the law reports. Renewed laughter.) But still I think the court should have inquired into the transaction, referred it to a judge in Chambers, or a tribunal, and the tribunal should have prescribed a fair rate of interest. There would have been no reason then for the young lady's eloquence. (Loud laughter.)

SUGGESTED TRIBUNALS

Witness had previously suggested that in any further legislation there should be provision for referring difficulties between a borrower and a money lender to a tribunal which should be set up, or to a judge in chambers, thus avoiding the publicity which occurred when bankruptcy proceedings took place. When a young man got into bankruptcy he was sometimes approached mysteriously by a second money lender to take out a loan. He had no doubt that the money lenders acted in collusion in such cases. Repayment of interest should be according to the debtor's means, and not according to the size of the debt.

Witness further said that money lenders with whom he had principally been concerned dealt with middle-class people and with public school boys. Something should be done to save these foolish young men and the taking away of the lever of publicity would be in that direction. Witness did not propose to punish these young borrowers for entering into an improvident undertaking. He would place the lender in the same position as a bookmaker. It was a gamble, and a man could not recover money lent as a gamble. Witness said he would allow to the lender 25 per cent interest at the outside.—London Morning Post, June 20, 1925.

IOWA

A meeting of the Iowa Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Hotel Ft. Des Moines, Des Moines, Iowa, August 20, 1925.

The meeting was called to order by the Chairman, Mr. T. J. Harrison of Waterloo. The following member representatives and licensees were in attendance:

B. E. Henderson of Chicago, C. G. Liggett of New York City, T. J. Harrison of Waterloo, Fred L. Wright of Chicago; W. L. Glessner, Cedar Rapids, H. L. Leidig, Burlington, Ed. L. Roth, Ottumwa, J. M. Kelso, Ft. Dodge, John F. Miller, Burlington, Thos. H. Meickley, Marshalltown, W. E. Steely, Waterloo; Frank S. Dunshee, Council for the State Association, Des Moines, M. Aliber, Des Moines, E. I. Levitt, Des Moines, Sol Gottlieb, Des Moines, Julius Gottlieb, Des Moines, Wm. De Beaulieu, Des Moines, Harry Davidson, Des Moines, C. M. Dehnert, Des Moines, H. A. Hulling, Des Moines, W. C. Marquis, Des Moines, R. H. Collette, Des Moines, V. V. Boehm, Des Moines, Mr. Amos, Des Moines, J. B. Morris, Des Moines.

The purpose of the meeting was to outline a program of procedure in opposition to the present increased levy of taxation on concerns conducting Small Loan Businesses.

Mr. Dunshee, having given this matter an unusual amount of time and having made extensive investigations, covered the situation in a very complete and able manner. He said in part, that as a final result in order to bring about a successful ending, it would undoubtedly be necessary to take the case to a higher court.

To accomplish this, if decided upon that this action be taken, it is obvious that funds must be available to carry on the battle. In connection with this there was a very favorable response from all those present, and an actual underwriting took place. However, this was not sufficient, and since the situation was of vital interest to every licensee, a motion was made and seconded to make direct appeal for funds to all licensees. The motion as carried also appointed a Committee to solicit this fee. The Committee consists of Ed. L. Roth, Frank S. Dunshee, and C. M. Dehnert.

Mr. Henderson made motion and it was seconded that a committee of five, and to have chairman, be appointed to confer with Attorney and others, if any, upon any matter that might come up for discussion. The Committee consists of Wm. De Beaulieu, Chairman, Ed. L. Roth, W. L. Glessner, C. M. Dehnert and B. V. Boehm. Resolution made and adopted that letter be compiled by Mr. Dunshee, outlining the situation in general, and copy sent to each and every licensee.

Continuing in the tax situation there was a resolution made whereas the Attorney General of Iowa has issued a ruling to the effect that the Small Loan Companies of Iowa are in direct competition with the banks of our state. And, whereas under this new ruling your assessment would be changed from moneys and credits to moneyed capital; and under this ruling your taxes would be increased from five to six hundred per cent. And, whereas this ruling will apply to you and every other lender in Iowa during the ensuing year, we deem it of vital importance that all the lenders of Iowa unite and coöperate to defend our mutual interest and protect and preserve our present rights.

During the afternoon session some open time was available and so one or two other matters of importance were brought up for discussion.

There was a resolution made that members in the future, in all their advertising and other printed matter omit any and all reference to the Banking Department. It was recommended that this practice cease before it become necessary for the Iowa Legislature to act upon it. The words, "Under State Supervision" are unobjectionable and equally useful.

Mr. Liggett gave a talk on an Exchange Bureau or Clearing House for Des Moines Lenders, making clear of what paramount importance this aid would be to local organizations, and that the ultimate outcome if Bureau was to be adopted would prove a very valuable asset. Mr. Liggett further stated that if a local association were formed in order to absorb and place in readiness some of the elements of detail which naturally would arise, he would accept the responsibility by coming out and putting it across.

Upon motion of Mr. Levitt which was unanimously carried Tate Harrison was delegated to represent the Iowa Association at the National Convention in Providence, September 2d to 5th. Mr. Harrison serving in this capacity has won the admiration of all and we are indeed happy to know that it has been possible to have this representation.

The meeting adjourned and the evening spent at the Harris-Emery Tea Room, all the out-of-town boys having been invited to a dinner by the local members.

V. V. BOEHM,
Secretary.

ARE INDUSTRIAL LENDERS SERVICES APPRECIATED?

Here is an exact copy of a letter received by one of our members which shows the services of our members are appreciated:

My dear Sirs:

Kindly find enclosed a money order for twenty dollars. I'll catch up next month by paying double payments.

I thank you so much for letting me have the money last summer.

My mother was ill for eight weeks and died September 8th.

Your money helped to tide me over a good bit, so I'll promise you I certainly shall pay you every cent and pay you promptly.

I am enclosing an addressed and stamped envelope for the return of the receipt book.

Yours very truly,
GRATEFUL CUSTOMER.

No doubt other members have received similar letters or have listened to verbal expressions of gratitude. The Editor will be pleased to publish more experiences like the above.

Bulletin No. 7

Your Secretary earnestly requests that when you have a "skip" into another city in Ohio, that as soon as you learn of where he is or where you have good reason to believe he is, that you advise the Secretary, giving his and his wife's name, in order that the members of The Ohio Loan Association in that city may be advised to be on the lookout for him and avoid making him a loan on security already covered by your mortgage.

We are face to face with the task of drafting a new Constitution and by-laws for our Association. Your suggestions and coöperation are solicited. It will be up for the Mid-Winter meeting in January. Don't put it off until then, but sit down to-day and send in your ideas. Also your choice for a new name, if one is advisable.

The laws of Ohio relating to property exempt from execution and attachment have been so amended by the last session of the legislature that 10% of the personal earnings may now be reached for any lawful debt. Formerly this was confined to necessaries. This is of value to the small lender in a case where the security has disappeared either properly or improperly and you still hold the note, which formerly you considered good for a judgment, but bad for a collection. Now you can sue on the note and take 10% of the wages of the debtor each thirty days. In this connection you are referred to Sections 10271-10272-10253-11721-11725-11738 and 11781 Gen. Code of Ohio.

Your Executive Committee is of the opinion that the proposed taxation amendments to the Ohio constitution are worthy of adoption. To this end sample ballots will shortly be mailed to you for distribution to your customers.

Eighty-three per cent without bank credit.

This Certificate identifies the Members of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association.

It appears in Member-offices.

It safeguards the interests of every individual needing financial assistance.

It is estimated that 83% of the people of the United States have no banking credit.

Many of these have no occasion to borrow money, but a great number of them do as is indicated by the fact that approximately 2,500 000 small loans are negotiated annually.

Most of these loans are made to meet emergencies such as the need for necessities during illness or to meet obligations that must be paid on a specified date like rent and insurance.

These people are entitled to have available a loan service at interest rates prescribed by law as being fair to both borrower and lender.

The members of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association lend sums of $10 to $300 to families needing money to meet emergencies or to take advantage of opportunities that present themselves.

The business of our members is under the supervision of the Georgia State Banking Department in much the same manner that banks are under State or Federal supervision.

This service is available to your friends and employees and on a basis that in no way obligates you personally.

Making expansion possible.

It appears in Member-offices.

It safeguards the interests of every individual needing financial assistance.

A woman who has a boarding house near the university came into the office of one of our members some time ago.

She saw an opportunity to make a profit instead of just breaking even by enlarging the dining room.

Three hundred dollars was needed but she couldn't make the loan from a bank for lack of proper collateral. Her reputation was good and her reasoning sound. We didn't hesitate to lend her the necessary amount.

As evidence of the success of the project she recently asked us if we could use $1 000 to loan out for her.

The number of loans we make to people who use the money to take advantage of some opportunity that presents itself, convinces us that there must be many more that we could help on the road to success if they were acquainted with our members.

If you are among these or have friends whose progress is being impaired for the lack of a small amount of money—let us know. We lend from $10 to $300.

FOREIGN ACCOUNTS WELCOME

Some managers or their companies do not seem to relish the handling of foreign accounts. The Capital Loan Co., 29 Ruggery Bldg., wishes to go on record and will be glad to handle any and all accounts sent to us, whether they are skips from some other city where their collateral has been disposed of or whether they move their chattels to Columbus.

We are pleased to receive such accounts for two reasons. First, if they should be moving to Columbus, and their business is at all desirable, it gives us an opportunity of adding a customer to our business, and if they are no good, we have the opportunity of completing our records so that we would be able to fortify ourselves against a bad account for the future.

Since we must all depend some on the members of our business, in other cities, I feel that everyone should stand ready to lend a helping hand. In Columbus we have a corporation whose slogan is: "We grow better by service." This of course is not new, but it appeals to me and I will be glad to receive any accounts that come this way.

Yours truly,

IMPORTANT DECISION RENDERED AUGUST 13, 1925

No. 4918 Supreme Court.

Davis v. Atlanta Finance Company. By the court.

Hill, J. 1. Section 13 of an act approved August 17, 1920 (Acts 1920, pp. 215, 219), provides: "Every person, copartnership, and corporation licensed hereunder may loan any sum of money not exceeding in amount the sum of three hundred dollars ($300), and may charge, contract for, and receive thereon interest at a rate not to exceed three and one-half (3½) per centum per month.

Interest shall not be payable in advance or compounded, and shall be computed on unpaid balances. In addition to the interest herein provided for, no further or other charge, or amount whatsoever for any examination, service, brokerage, commission or other thing, or otherwise, shall be directly or indirectly charged, contracted for, or received, except the lawful fees, if any, actually and necessarily paid out by the licensee to any public officer for filing or recording in any public office any instrument securing the loan, which fees may be collected when the loan is made or at any time thereafter. If interest or charge in excess of those permitted by this act shall be charged, contracted for, or received the contract of loan shall be null and void, and the licensee shall have no right to collect or receive any principal, interest, or charges whatsoever. No person shall owe any licensee, as such, at any time more than three hundred dollars ($300) for principal."

2. The petition in the case under consideration, which sought to enjoin a loan company from "filling out the blank forms herein referred to; and that said defendant company be enjoined and restrained from presenting said paper to the employer of your petitioner; and that said defendant company be enjoined and restrained from undertaking to collect any amounts from your petitioner as interest or principal which it may claim by virtue of any salary assignment which it holds or claims to hold and signed by your petitioner; and that said defendant company be enjoined and restrained from transferring any paper or papers held by it with petitioner's name signed thereto to any party or parties," etc., showed on its face that the defendant charged the plaintiff, contracted for, and received interest in excess of three and one-half (3½) per centum a month on the loan. In these circumstances the petition alleged a cause of action for the equitable relief sought, and was not subject to general demurrer. Fulwiler v. Atlanta Finance Co., 158 Ga. 859 (2).

3. The foregoing ruling does not violate the principle that "he who would have equity must do equity and give effect to all equitable rights in the other party respecting the subject-matter of the suit," as embodied in the Civil Code of 1910, 4521; and applied in Lyles v. Bank of Camden County, 151 Ga. 483; for the reason that inasmuch as the Act of 1920, quoted above, prohibits the collection of any part of the principal, interest, and expenses, the borrower is not required to pay back anything, and consequently owes no duty in equity to the lender.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT DECISION HANDED DOWN

On August 1st, the Supreme Court of Tennessee handed down a decision stating that the slightly modified form of the Uniform Small Loan Law enacted by the legislature in 1925 session is the law of that Commonwealth, notwithstanding the veto of the Governor, which, according to the terms of the Constitution was filed too late. This also has the effect of declaring the Act of 1917 regulating chattel and salary loans in Tennessee repealed and that the 1925 amendment thereto enacted on the recommendation of the Governor in his veto message of the Uniform Act is also not in effect. There are at least eight industrial loan offices in Tennessee, the owners of which strongly favor the Uniform Small Loan Law and gave its enactment their moral support. These are expected to form a Tennessee Industrial Lenders Association at once.

DECISION RE VIRGINIA LAW

William Blue appealed it to the Circuit Court on the ground that the Uniform Small Loan Law in Virginia was unconstitutional.

Judge Hankel of the Norfolk Circuit Court took the case under advisement, and about a week later gave judgment for the National Small Loan Society. He did not hand down a written opinion.

The defendant took the stand that this is a special law, and the only thing we could find in the Virginia Constitution is where the Constitution reads that no special law can be granted to any private corporation wherein they can charge more than the legal rate of interest of 6% per annum.

All the defendant did was to cite a few cases which follows: 126-Virginia-Page-610-Paragraph-3, "A law is special in a constitutional sense, when by force of inherent limitations, it arbitrarily separates some persons, places or things from those upon which, but for such separation it would not operate." Mat Et Al vs. Commonwealth, 120-Virginia-Page-841-Last Paragraph Com. Et Al vs. United Cigarette Machine Limited, E. D. 5-Page-887. "The test of a special law is the appropriateness of its provisions of the objects it excludes. It is not the subjects included that makes it special, but what it excludes." Budd vs. Hancock.

PENNSYLVANIA

The regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Glen Valley Club on Neversink Mountain, Reading, at 2 P. M. Thursday, July 30, 1925.

Forty members were present.

On motion by Mr. Lyons, seconded by Mr. Mitchell, Dr. Mueller was elected chairman of the meeting due to the absence of Chairman Reeves (in California) and Vice-Chairman Young.

Upon instruction of the Chair the roll call was dispensed with.

Report of Officers

Dr. Mueller, reporting progress for Chairman Reeves, advised the members of the Chairman's visit to California.

Treasurer Devine, reported all bills paid as of June 30, 1925, and cash on hand of $1,312.04. On motion of Mr. Bachofer, seconded by Mr. Kehr, this report was approved. Carried.

Secretary Watts reported a membership of 121. One hundred and eighteen in good standing as of July 1, 1925; 71 members are members in good standing of the American I. L. A. as of August 1, 1925. There are 288 licensed lenders in Pennsylvania. On motion of Mr. Davis, seconded by Mr. Bachofer, this report was approved. Carried.

COMMUNICATIONS

Toronto, Ont.,
January 29, 1925.

Dear Sir:

I am in receipt of your generous supply of literature in respect to industrial loans which I shall read with a great deal of interest.

As you state, no provision is made in Canada for taking care of a man without banking connections or adequate security should he desire a temporary loan. The attention of the Ontario Government has been directed to this matter and it is just possible that during the year it will be fully considered by the Government.

At present, investing and savings are confined to Banks and Trust Companies. A Trust Company must have at least $100,000 paid up before it may commence business, and a Bank $500,000 paid up, so you will see there is no opportunity for savings and loans being made along the line which has proven so successful with your people.

I appreciate the contribution and desire to thank you for the attention given.

Sincerely yours,
Alexander Stewart.

MARY SPECULATES ON SCOPE OF LENDERS' MEETING HERE

Writer Hopes to Induce Association to Do Something About Abuses Practiced by Umbrella, Book and Silver Borrowers—Also Stamp Acquirers

By Mary E. Bostwick

Whether we can arrange it or not, we don't know, but our intention is to see whether we can't take to-morrow and Thursday off, and attend the annual convention of the Indiana Lenders' Association.

This is the first we knew that lenders were organized, and heaven knows it is about time, and ever since we read about this coming convention in the papers, we have wondered how it was we never heard of it before, and who was the lender who lent something and didn't get it back, just once too often, and who hence organized this association, and we hope they will let us become a member.

Moreover, we do not know what their program is, but we have been thinking the matter over, and without a bit of effort bring to mind any number of matters that the association of lenders ought to take up—that is, if it expects to be a success, and inspire all its members to pay their dues, etc.

We do hope the association will take up the matter of umbrella lenders. The world is divided into two parts—those who borrow umbrellas, and those who lend them—and this means that all the umbrellas in the world belong to half the population—and borrowers—and is this fair? We should say not.

Backs Umbrella Lenders

We intend to see, personally, that at this meeting something is done to help umbrella lenders, who for a long time have been absolutely defenseless, to say nothing of getting wet when it rains. Right this minute, we can think of five umbrellas belonging to ourself that are scattered around to the four winds, and not doing us a bit of good. One of these umbrellas was given to us, and the others we acquired, as one might say, from friends, and from time to time persons borrowed them from us, and now we haven't got a single, solitary umbrella.

What is the best way for an umbrella lender to get his umbrella back? Or should he give up trying to get it back, and simply square things in his own conscience by making off with the first umbrella he finds alone and unprotected? That is one of the finer points of umbrella lending that we should like to see taken up. And we would also like to have a medal fund established for any one who is brave enough, when out in the rain without an umbrella, and they see somebody carrying one that formerly belonged to them, to go right up to that umbrella borrower and snatch it away.

Book Lenders Also

Book lenders have suffered long and silently.

The bookshelves of almost any one reveal frequent vacant gaps, like those in the jaws of the little ones when they are beginning to shed their first teeth and haven't got their second ones yet, or like a picket fence that has had a lot of pickets heartily kicked out.

What is the best way to get back a borrowed book? To go right up to the person who borrowed it, or to go to his house some time and after a searching glance around the library, if any, say:

"Well! I see you've got a copy of 'Memoirs of a Glue Bottle.' Mind if I borrow it?" If he remembers that it was originally your very own 'Memoirs of a Glue Bottle' he won't have the nerve to say anything, and if he doesn't, he'll say sure, take it along, and you'll have it back. Is or is not this the best method? We should like to see the Lenders' Association take this matter up and settle it once for all.

Take car lenders. Does or does not the fact that you lend a friend your car make it also necessary for you to provide the gasoline, and should you be responsible for the chickens, flivvers and other flora and fauna that he may destroy in the course of his trip?

Would it be ethical to drain the gas tank of all but a pint or two just before lending your car to a friend, and then tell him about it, or let him find it out for himself? So far as we know, no one ever borrowed a car and forgot to bring it back, so this matter needn't be taken up right now, but we would like to have this matter of the gasoline settled.

When people borrow our silver candlesticks and our silver pie platters, when they're giving a party, and we shine them all up so that they will look well and do us credit, is it fair to us lenders that the borrowers should hang on to them for three or four weeks after the party, only returning them when the polish has begun to dim? Isn't it the least that the borrowers could do for us lenders to let us enjoy the shine on our own candlesticks and our own pie platter? We think so. Or, at least, if they keep them for weeks, they ought to give them another shine before sending them on the return trip.

On Lending Money

And greatest of all—how much money do we have to lend a person before we can ask for it back? If anybody borrowed $100 from us—which they never have, for reasons best known to ourself—we would go boldly up to them, if they showed signs of being forgetful, and ask them to please come across—same as the United States just did to those none European nations.

But if a person just borrows 50 cents off us, and forgets to pay us back, what then? Are we allowed to hint a little, if not ask outright? And what about lending stamps? Has the Lenders' Association any way of fixing it so that a person can collect stamps that other people have borrowed, and thus get together so many stamps that he might almost be accused of having stuck up a post office?

It seems like a person always waits until a letter is finished and addressed before he thinks of stamps—then he says, "Got a stamp?" No one ever seems to have the impulse to write a letter and a stamp at the same time. Can't the Lenders' Association do something about this?

If it wasn't for it all having happened so long ago, we should certainly ask the association to take some mighty serious action about that gent in history who said, "Friends, Romans, countrymen—lend me your ears!"

We have heard of people asking to borrow just about everything else in the world, and getting it too—but to ask a group of friends to lend you their ears certainly seems going pretty far. However, we suppose it is too late to do anything about this.—Indianapolis Star, May 19, 1925.

MORE ABOUT RYAN'S BOOK

Are our present usury laws adequate? Should legislature attempt to fix the maximum rate of interest?

Franklin W. Ryan in his book USURY AND USURY LAWS attempts to work out the answers to these perplexing questions. The value of his effort is expressed in part in the following telegram sent to Colonel Hodson by Reginald Heber Smith: "I have just examined the page proof of Ryan's book. Every member of the American Industrial Lenders Association will enjoy reading it because it is a statement of the truth by an impartial scholar."

Several dynamic questions are involved. The business man wants to get rid of the old anachronistic usury laws now on the statute books of forty-three of the States. The social worker and legislator wants to get rid of the loan sharks. The legitimate small lender wants to make a fair profit on his operations. The abstract economist wants to know why usury laws are still kept in force in spite of the generally accepted theory of interest that money rates are determined solely by economic laws. After a brief historical approach and an analysis of the problem of usury into its constituent elements, the author works out the answers to all these questions.

Mr. Ryan advocates the Uniform Small Loan Law as the remedy which will eliminate loan sharks and moral usury and yet still allow the uninterrupted interplay of economic forces. He shows how successful this law has been in those states which have enacted it. And he points out how this law with its administrative features satisfies not only the economic theorist but also the expert in legal practice and governmental science.

USURY AND USURY LAWS won the first prize of $1,000 in the Hart, Schaffner and Marx competition of 1923. It is an exhaustive, authoritative, and constructive discusssion of a vital problem. Everyone interested in the eradication of the loan shark evil will find this book indispensable to his library.

It was voted to adjourn until January 21, 1926.

REPORT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS DELEGATE TO THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL LENDERS ASSOCIATION

When I started to Providence to the Convention I felt that I had had a heavy responsibility shoved off onto me and consequently I strained my ears during the whole convention to catch every word that was said, thinking I had to come back to Boston and write a detailed report to be read at this meeting. But when I read the LENDERS NEWS, a few days ago, I found that it had stolen all of my thunder by giving an excellent account of the Convention, so if you want to see what my report was going to be, you can read it in the NEWS.

However this is the first opportunity I have ever had to make a speech and now that you are all in a good humor, after this generous lunch, I feel that this is as safe a time for me to make my maiden attempt as any I shall ever have; I always said I'd try most anything once—so am going to give you my impressions of the Convention.

I felt a good deal like a freshman at college, down there with all those old timers and their earnestness and evident desire to improve our business in every way made a deep impression on my plastic mind. They convinced me that the destinies of our National Association are being shaped by most competent men and that the work being done by them is of great value to every one of us here. I was particularly impressed, in the private sessions of the Nominating Committee, by the earnest effort of all members to pick the most capable man for each position, regardless of his affiliation, nationality or creed.

Our National Association is a strong, healthy organization and is growing better every year. During the past year 62 new members were enrolled. The Publicity Committee caused to be published 111 educational articles on our business, totaling 18,000 lines, appearing in 72 cities in papers with a circulation of 5 millions.

The National Treasurer reported that he had $9,300 on hand after having spent $13,000 for legal services and advertising.

Mr. Kehr reported that there were 471 members in the Association.

Three state legislatures adopted the Uniform Law during the past year and largely because of the work done by the National Association.

We are likely to feel that the National Association is of little direct benefit to our own little business but I am convinced that the Small Loan business would not be what it is to-day if it had not been for the consistent work done by the Association and I feel that the future safety and progress of our business is largely dependent upon the strength and activity of the Association.

The next convention will be held in Cleveland and if you will take my advice you will meet me there, not only to hear of our business from a national standpoint but also to have a good time.

I thank you.

Respectfully submitted,
J. R. WATSON.

TENNESSEE

Here is copy of the opinion of Attorney General of Tennessee to the Governor, written while the bill was pending for signature, in response to inquiry of the Governor.

It occurs to us that this may be a matter of special interest for you to publish, but be sure and return this paper to us as it is the only copy we have.

The cities of Memphis, Knoxville, Nashville and Chattanooga are splendid cities. If any desire to enter there, Beneficial Operating Bureau will be glad to furnish forms and otherwise coöperate with any reputable lenders. In such event we feel those who do enter the state ought to make some contribution towards the legitimate expense of securing enactment of the small loan law. That is a fair way and it seems to us none ought to object to it.

Very respectfully,

Clarence Hodson, President,
Beneficial Loan Society.

Nashville, Tennessee,
March 30, 1925.

Governor Austin Peay,
Executive Chamber,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Dear Sir:

I have your letter of March 27th, enclosing a copy of Senate Bill No. 355, which is a bill to regulate the loan business and known as the "Small Loan Law." In your letter you say:

"Will you be so kind as to look carefully into this bill and let me have your opinion as to its validity, and your opinion in general regarding it, I will be obliged to you."

You then say you have until Wednesday.

After you submitted the bill to me, Mr. Sam E. Whitaker, of Chattanooga, and Mr. Thos. A. Shriver of this city, both came in and discussed the bill with me, and Mr. Shriver has just notified me that this is the last day you have. Mr. Shriver also submitted to me a letter and a brief, which I hand you herewith. The letter gives somewhat of a history of the causes which led up to the passage of a similar bill to this in other states. The brief deals with the constitutionality of the Act.

I have examined all of the cases cited in Mr. Shriver's brief. Article XI, Section 7 of our Constitution provides:

"The legislature shall fix the rate of interest, and the rates so established shall be equal and uniform throughout the State, but the legislature may provide for a conventional rate of interest not to exceed ten per cent (10%) per annum."

A law similar to this was passed in 1905, applying only to counties of 50,000 population or more and, because of this constitutional clause, it was held to be void; that is, it did not apply equally and uniformly throughout the entire State.

This Act is not subject to that infirmity. I think the crux is to be found in section 13. This permits the charging of one-half per cent (½%) per month on all loans of $300 and less, which would be six per cent (6%) per annum, or the regular rate of interest prescribed by law in this State. But the section provides that the licensee may charge and receive for investigating the moral and financial standing of the applicant, investigating the security, title, etc., and for other expenses and losses of every nature whatsoever, and for closing the loan, a fee equal to three per cent (3%) per month of the principal sum loaned over the term of the loan, but both interest and fee to be computed upon the unpaid balance of the principal due at the end of each month over the life of the loan.

The sole and only question as to the constitutionality of this Act is whether the Court would hold that the charging of these fees was merely a cloak for usury or a subterfuge to avoid the usury laws of the State.

It seems to me that in loans of this character a reasonable fee might be allowed for the investigation of the moral standing of a man as well as his financial standing, and also the security or want of security which he would be able to give as well as the title to any property which he would put up as security. In other words, while there may be some doubt as to the constitutionality of the Act, yet I do not think it sufficient to justify its veto. In other words, in my judgment, you would be warranted in giving the Act the benefit of the doubt, and requiring the question to be determined by the courts.

Now, as to the other features of the Act. What effect it would have in the smaller counties or, rather, counties where there are no large centers of population, I am unable to say. In my opinion it would have a very beneficial effect in the four larger counties because the Act subjects those engaged in the business to rigid investigation by the Banking Departmnet of the State, as well as heavy penalties. I know of but one other place in the State where, in my opinion, it would have any appreciable effect and that would be in Paris, Henry County, where the L. & N. Shops are located and where there are a large number of railroad employes. While I am not familiar with that local situation, it seems to me that the Act would apply very beneficially as it would here at Nashville.

I am also handing you herewith copy of a General Form of Uniform Small Loan Law from which, I assume, this Act was copied, changed, of course, to meet our constitutional requirements. I am sending these papers to you by hand.

Yours very truly,

Frank M. Thompson,
Attorney General.

WEST VIRGINIA

The semi-annual meeting of the West Virginia Industrial Lenders Association, was held in Charleston, at the Hotel Ruffner, Thursday, October 8th.

There were sixteen in attendance including visitors from other states who were, C. G. Liggett, Dayton, Ohio, A. K. Dolliver, Baltimore, Md., and R. C. Aufderheide of Indianapolis, Ind.

Members present were: F. H. Withrow, Capital City Loan & Investment Co., R. L. Bibby, Peoples Loan Co., W. B. Grimes, Commonwealth Loan Co., W. P. Gore, United Loan & Realty Co., C. E. DeLotell, Personal Finance Co., all of Charleston, Lloyd Rice, Community Finance Service, A. M. Arthur, Personal Finance Co., L. C. Withrow, Commonwealth Loan Co., Glen Meadows, Monarch Loan Co., Citizens Loan Co., all of Huntington, Delmont Jeffers, Community Finance Service, Parkersburg, and H. L. White, State Loan Co., Wheeling.

The secretary reported thirteen members in good standing and all dues paid to January, 1926. The treasurer reported total receipts for the year 1925 as being $325. Total disbursements to October 8, 1925, were $236.78, leaving cash balance of $88.22.

With reference to the last ruling of the Attorney General on the License Tax question, namely that the lenders would have to pay the tax, this was in direct conflict with the first ruling obtained from the Tax Commissioner. The Law which provides for a tax on Money Brokers and Private Bankers, does not, in the opinion of our members, cover the small lender, therefore it was decided to withhold paying this tax until further notice from the Tax Department.

The Chair appointed Mr. F. H. Withrow as Chairman of the Membership Committee. The following were selected by Mr. Withrow to assist on this committee, Delmont Jeffers, H. L. White, Sam Wormser and L. C. Withrow.

The morning session was then adjourned for luncheon, after which the meeting was again called to order promptly at 2:00 o'clock P. M. The afternoon session opened with an interesting report on the National Convention by Delegate Withrow. Following the report to Mr. Withrow, Short talks on the different phases of the small loan business were given by C. G. Liggett, A. K. Dolliver and R. C. Aufderheide, which proved instructive and interesting.

In view of the fact that the association's funds are very low, it was moved by R. C. Aufderheide, that the secretary write each member, asking that they pay more than the present minimum dues, ($20.00) for the year 1926, but not to exceed $50.00. It was voted that this idea be followed out and the following pledged to pay the maximum dues of $50.00 for each office operating in West Virginia: R. C. Aufderheide, Commonwealth Loan Co. (2 offices), C. G. Liggett, Beneficial Operating Bureau (3 offices), Lloyd Rice, Community Finance Service (2 offices). Others pledged to pay over Twenty Dollars.

It was voted that our next meeting would be held in Charleston, Thursday, March 18, 1926, at the Hotel Ruffner. It was also voted that after the business session, a banquet would be held and entertainment furnished. It was suggested that some of the public officials be invited to the banquet, the object being to promote a mutual understanding and friendly relationship with the heads of the departments. The Chair appointed W. B. Grimes as Chairman of the Entertainment Committee.

Under the business of nominating and electing new members, the secretary presented R. L. Bibby, Peoples Loan Co. of Charleston, who was duly elected to membership.

The following members were elected to the Executive Committee: H. L. White, Sam Wormser, W. P. Gore, W. B. Grimes, Lloyd Rice, F. H. Withrow, A. M. Arthur. Officers for the ensuing year were: H. L. White, Chairman, Sam Wormser, Vice-Chairman, W. B. Grimes, Secretary, W. P. Gore, Treasurer.

NOTE CORRECTION

I wish to make a correction of the item appearing on page 12 of the September issue of the News, relative to the ruling of the State Tax Commissioner. I have the original letters from the Tax Commissioner and also from the Attorney General, and it is the opinion of both that the lenders will have to pay the State and City Tax. The first ruling obtained from the Tax Commissioner exempted us from the tax, but a later ruling reversed opinion number one. Wm. B. Grimes,
Secretary,
West Va. I. L. Assn.

A meeting of the National Executive Committee will be held at the rooms of the Russell Sage Foundation, in New York, Monday, November 16th.

LOAN GOUGERS ROB POOR OF $100,000

Col. D. H. Pond, President of Ohio Lenders, Calls for War on Usury

Illegal loan agents are robbing Cleveland poor people of at least $100,000 a year.

This charge was made yesterday by Col. D. H. Pond, president of the Ohio Industrial Lenders' Association.

In coöperation with the Legal Aid Society, the state department of securities, the Better Business Commission and the city law department, the association has declared war on persons who lend money at illegal rates of interest.

There are fourteen licensed chattel loan agencies in Cleveland and these make approximately 24,000 loans a year, according to Col. Pond. The average loan is for $125. These companies are allowed to charge 3 per cent. interest a month on loans over $25 and 5 per cent. on loans of $25 or less.

Scores of instances have come to the attention of Col. Pond and the Legal Aid Society of unlicensed lenders exacting as high as 100 per cent. interest on short term loans. These are some of the devices used to collect exorbitant interest, according to Col. Pond:

BUYING the borrower's automobile and selling it back to him at a higher figure.

DEMANDING bonuses.

REQUIRING the borrower to buy stock in the loan company or take out life insurance from the agent making the loan.

TAKING assignments of salaries, generally at a 10 per cent. discount every two weeks.

Complaints to the Legal Aid Society have been so numerous recently that H. L. Kime, examiner in the state securities division, has been assigned to make an investigation in Cleveland.

Walter T. Dunmore, dean of Western Reserve university law school and president of the Legal Aid Society, believes extension of credit is responsible for the increase in complaints of illegal interest.

THE LIBRARY OF THE

Dean Dunmore called attention to a law passed at the last session of the legislature which permits 10 per cent. of a debtor's wages to be attached on any kind of a claim and 20 per cent. where the claim is for necessaries. Previous to July 21st, when the law went into effect, a 10 per cent. attachment could be made only on a claim for necessaries.

"Thousands of people who before could not be forced to pay now find they must pay if they work," said Dean Dunmore. "At a time when there is every encouragement for the man of small means to over-extend his credit, the seller is given a more powerful weapon to compel payment."

Col. Pond said the licensed loan agencies are expecting a big increase in applications for loans next spring as a result of the new law.

Persons who obtain chattel loans can protect themselves by demanding to see the licenses of the individuals they are dealing with.

A firm or individual who has no license may not legally ask more than 8 per cent. interest a year. If an unlicensed lender makes loans at a higher rate, he can recover the principal in a court action, but only 6 per cent interest.

If a licensed loan agency charges more than 3 per cent. a month, the lender loses interest and principal, according to Col. Pond.—Cleveland Plain Dealer, Oct. 20, 1925.

WARNS AGAINST LENDING MONEY ON DEBT SLIPS

Banking Superintendent Says Ohio Concerns Violate Law

(TIMES-STAR SPECIAL DISPATCH)

COLUMBUS, O., September 15.—H. E. Scott, state superintendent of banks, has opened fire upon individuals and corporations in Ohio, not under supervision of the banking laws, accepting money from the public in return for certificates of indebtedness, interest-bearing notes or other evidences of debt. Mr. Scott warned the public against buying such evidences of debt.

"It recently came to our attention," he said, "that several corporations, engaged in the business of lending money upon chattel or wage security, or upon second mortgages, were soliciting money from the public to use in its operations and were issuing, in receipt for its deposits with them, certificates of indebtedness, interest-bearing notes or other evidences of debt. The department obtained several such certificates and the advertising matter issued by these concerns, and submitted the entire proposition to the attorney general. He ruled that such practice constituted accepting deposits in violation of the banking law.

"Not authorized to do a banking business, nor organized nor conducted under the safeguards which the law throws about the banking business in this State, these concerns have been operating banks. The law on this point is clear. The only institutions authorized by Ohio law to accept deposits are banks, building and loan associations and title guaranty and trust companies.—Cincinnati Times, Sept. 16, 1925.

[It should be understood that members of the Ohio and American Industrial Lenders Associations are not guilty of the practice referred to above.—ED.]

COMPANY HOLDS ITS CONVENTION

Legal Loan Company Has Interesting Program

Twenty-three years ago the Legal Loan company was organized in Marion, with a single office and assets of approximately $10,000, and to-day the same organization has twenty-two offices and assets of approximately two million dollars, and this astounding record of achievement was strongly illustrated by the size of the seventh annual meeting of the organization which opened in this city yesterday.

Many in Attendance

More than sixty representatives of the company are here for the meeting, which opened Thursday noon.

Erle S. Kinnear addressed the visitors in the afternoon, giving a most eloquent and forceful talk on "Opportunity." The speaker spoke of the individual chance for success.

Thursday evening Attorney Allan Messick spoke at a dinner on the subject, "The Merit Badge of Service." Mr. Messick emphasized the rewards and satisfaction which come from service well performed, and gave a most entertaining and helpful address. The Doc Peyton orchestra furnished music, and Lew Tukey sang beautifully.

This morning at a business session President Charles E. Hutchins of the Kiwanis Club speaks on "Personality,"

COMMUNICATION

312 Guaranty Bldg.,
Indianapolis, Ind.
October 22, 1925.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

I was agreeably surprised to receive the gold medal awarded to me at Providence for "Distinguished Legislative Service." It is indeed a beautiful medal and I wish, at this time, to express my sincere thanks and appreciation to the Association and to the Executive Committee.

At the time Mr. Harbison asked the convention to award me with a gold medal because of the success of the West Virginia legislative campaign, I was under the impression that it was done in a spirit of levity; otherwise I should have objected strenuously because I know that I did not do any more than has been done many times before and by men deserving greater credit than will ever be due to me.

I think a leather medal would have been more appropriate, but if I am entitled to a gold medal, I am sure that there are some in our national organization who should be awarded a diamond medal. However, I appreciate this high honor more than I can express, and I hope that this is the nucleus of an idea which will result in awarding many more gold medals for "Distinguished Legislative Service."

Will you kindly convey to the Executive Committee of the American Association my appreciation.

Yours very truly,
R. C. Aufderheide.

[Who will be the next to receive the D. L. S. Medal?—Ed.]

COLUMBUS LENDERS ORGANIZE

The loan men in Columbus, Ohio now have an Association which to this time is only about an 80% organization. We have ten lenders in Columbus who make a business of chattel loans. There are three or four who do auto and industrial financing and who also make some chattel loans, all of whom we expect to get into our Organization a little later on.

We are known as the Columbus Industrial Lenders Association. We are to meet monthly at the offices of the Ohio Finance Co., 43 W. Long St.

Even though we are only about two months old we already have enjoyed considerable benefit from our meetings. The Ohio State Journal is carrying a serial story styled "The Man with Three Names." When we loan men got to exchanging information we found there were quite a few of that kind in Columbus, and that most of them had a loan under each name.

Some of the companies were patronizing one credit agency and others obtaining information through a second, and still others were using no credit ratings at all. It is our aim in a very short time to all gather information through the same credit bureau which will be the best substitute for a loan exchange, which we really hope we can have a little later on as soon as the boys are all sold on the proposition.

Our Wednesday noon luncheons are bringing us all closer together which is helping the loan business in Columbus considerably.

O. G. Robinette of the Beneficial Loan Society is our secretary. Would like to exchange ideas and information with other organizations of a similar nature with a view of bettering ourselves if possible.

AN UNSOLICITED LETTER FROM A SATISFIED CUSTOMER

Dear Sir:

I have your favor of this date for which I thank you.

I appreciate the opportunity which your wonderful service has held out to me.

After one has established an approved credit with you, it gives one a feeling of security. It is a banking system much better for the people who are in need from time to time in business than savings account. One just will not systematically save the same amount and when business is poor and trouble and illness come they draw on the reserve and soon it is gone.

I cannot thank you sufficiently for what assistance you have rendered me.

I have one friend who may send in a request when I come to see you a month hence. I shall not recommend any save those whom I know can and will promptly meet the notes.

Gratefully yours,
Satisfied Customer.

THAT RAINY DAY

When the need for money arises it usually is very urgent—for necessities during a period of illness—to meet obligations that must be paid on a specified date—for cost of transportation to go to the deathbed of a relative—or for any one of numerous perfectly good reasons.

They cannot get the money from a bank. They have no collateral.

After we have loaned them the necessary amount they express their heartfelt thanks that they can get money to meet such emergencies at a rate of interest prescribed by law as being fair to both borrower and lender and thus obviate the necessity of patronizing loan sharks.

We want executives to know that the members of this association are organized to meet the needs of your employees requiring financial assistance in sums from $10 to $300.

Every transaction is handled on a straightforward business basis by men of high character and under the supervision of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Illinois.

For list of members refer to Sub-division 55 [page 695] of your Chicago Association of Commerce Blue Book.

We are sending you herewith copy of Florida loan license issued to the Personal Finance Company of Jacksonville, which please return to us without fail as it is the only copy we have. We thought this would be of interest to you.

It might be well to publish the fact that Florida is an attractive field, and the Beneficial Operating Bureau, New York City, would be very happy to furnish copy of forms and other details. The rate is 3½%.

It seems to me any who do enter it should give a contribution to us towards legitimate expenses in securing enactment of the bill.

AUTO FINANCIER CONVICTED

The case of the Commonwealth vs. Horace L. Oppenheimer, President, Auto Security Company, Inc., 214 North 15th Street, Philadelphia, Pa., was called for trial before Judge Stern on Monday, October 19th, and, after a plea of nolle contendere had been entered and all of the evidence submitted, a fine of $250 was imposed for engaging in the small loan business without a license, which is required by the Pennsylvania Small Loans Act of June 17, 1915, as amended June 4, 1919. The defendant was also ordered to pay back all money charged in excess of six per cent per annum on the transactions involved.

This case was prosecuted by the Department of Banking and is of special interest because it is the first case pressed by the Department against an officer of a company making loans on automobiles as security. The defense endeavored to show that in each transaction the automobile was purchased by the company and re-sold under lease to the borrower. This subterfuge, however, had no weight whatsoever with the court.

We are indebted to W. F. Buck for the following account of the case:

"I have for acknowledgment, your letter of October 20th asking information, relative to the case of the Banking Department of Penna. vs. The Auto Security Corporation, 220 N. 15th Street, Philadelphia, H. L. Oppenheimer, President.

"On March 10, 1925 I called at the office of the above Corporation, and requested information as to whether they made loans on automobiles to residents of New Jersey (I living in that state) and was told that they did, and to bring my car over for them to see.

"On March 11th I took my car over, and after comparing my car number and motor number, was told that I looked all right and they would make the loan of $150, the amount asked for. I was told that I would be required to pay back $210 in 21 weekly installments of $10.00, to which I agreed.

"On March 17th I mailed them a check for $10.00, and on March 24th another check for like amount, marking on same, first and second payment on loan respectively. On March 31st I mailed a check for $190 marking "Final payment on loan," all of which were accepted and deposited in their bank.

"This made $60.00 interest which I was required to pay for a loan of $150 for three weeks, being overcharged $56.54 at 3½% per month or at the rate of 680% per year.

"Oppenheimer was arrested and appeared before Magistrate Fahnestock on April 28th at which time he waived a hearing. Some time in June I appeared before the Grand Jury, along with two other parties who were appearing against him for the same offense, and a true bill was found against him.

"The trial was held on Monday, October 19th before Judge Horace Stern in the Court of Oyer and Terminer and at that time through his counsel pleaded nolle contendere. After hearing all testimony Judge Stern ordered Oppenheimer to return all interest in excess of 6% per annum on $450.00 of loans (the amount of the three) which amounted approximately to $150.00 and fined him $100.00, admonishing him that the next offense would call for a prison sentence.

"During the noon recess, Oppenheimer's counsel made an effort to have the charge withdrawn, which was refused, he stating later at the trial that these were the three isolated cases on their books where they had loaned money on cars already paid for, but we know of another case to the contrary.

"One of the witnesses against Oppenheimer, stated that he had made an effort to have his interest reduced, which was refused and that his car had been seized on the street.

"He also stated that at the time of his application, he requested a loan of $200.00 and was told it would cost him $40.00, which he refused to pay, and a week later when he went back to get the loan, was told that it would now cost him $75.00."

MONEY LENDER FINED FOR TAKING ILLEGAL INTEREST

Horace L. Oppenheimer pleaded guilty before Judge Stern in Quarter Sessions Court yesterday to engaging in the money-lending business without a license and charging a rate of interest of more than six per cent per annum. The defendant, it was testified by William F. Buck, 32 North Fiftieth Street, was president of the Auto Security Company, Inc., 214 North Fifteenth Street, and Buck borrowed $150 from the company, which he had to pay back, with interest, in sums of $12.00 a week for 23 weeks or $126 as interest.

This being the defendant's first offense, Judge Stern fined him $250. The law provides for a term of imprisonment for a second offense of the kind.—Phila. Record, Oct. 20, 1925.

SKIP ACCOUNTS

Endorsing Mr. Thuma's lead, the Dayton, Ohio lenders welcome skip accounts of all members of the A. I. L. A. The Dayton lenders are continuing their publicity campaign on credit which Mr. Burwell, the secretary of the local association, says has proven worth many times its cost.

CONNECTICUT

The fall meeting of the Connecticut Association was held at Hotel Taft, New Haven, October 21st. Vice Chairman O'Brien, presided, owing to the illness of Chairman Lovegrove.

At the suggestion of the Chairman, Mr. Zimmerman made a motion, which was seconded by Mr. Carlson, that the Waterbury members of the Association act as a committee and call on Mr. M. J. Connors, at the hospital where he is confined, and extend sympathy to him,—as well as to present him flowers, which are to be paid for by the Association.

The Chairman introduced C. C. Coleman, Secretary of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce, who spoke of the exchange service with loan companies, and that it could only be worked successfully by each having confidence in the other.

Mr. Stephenson of the legislative committee reported that nothing had transpired since the last meeting.

The Chairman of the Membership Committee, T. C. O'Brien, wrote all non-members regarding the meeting, but only had replies from six,—four of whom were present. On motion of Mr. Zimmerman, which was duly seconded, the report was accepted and placed on file.

The Chairman called upon the following as to new members in their cities: A. L. Carlson, Waterbury; H. G. McMullin, Hartford; D. W. DeGray, New Britian; J. A. Brennan, Stamford; F. W. Hawkinson, Meriden.

Under Unfinished Business—Mr. Scarpa stated that nothing had been done regarding the two unlicensed lenders at Stamford, as he did not know the names or addresses of same.

Those present included the following: H. P. Stephenson, New England Equity Corp.; A. G. Zimmerman, Beneficial Operating Bureau; H. J. D'Esormaux, Chairman, Mass. Ind. Lend. As.; C. C. Coleman, Secretary, Chamber of Commerce, New Haven; Mr. Riccio, Silver Loan Soc., New Haven; Mr. DeSanto, Fair Haven Co-Op., New Haven; A. Rosario Giaimo, Sons of Italy, New Haven; T. C. O'Brien, Equit. Ind. Loan S., New Haven; H. G. McMullin, Equit. Ind. Loan S., Hartford; R. W. Roberts, Equit. Ind. Loan S., Bridgeport; A. L. Carlson, Equit. Ind. Loan S., Waterbury; H. M. Dunbar, N. E. E. Corp., Norwich; A. J. Burchard, N. E. E. Corp., Waterbury; E. A. Sanderson, N. E. E. Corp., Hartford; L. Scarpa, N. E. E. Corp., New Haven; R. Bumsted, N. E. E. Corp. Bridgeport; L. Merritt, Beneficial Loan Soc., New Haven; A. Murchie, Beneficial Loan Soc., Bridgeport; S. Sterry, Beneficial Loan Soc., New London; D. W. DeGray, Beneficial Loan Soc., New Britian; J. S. Farrell, Beneficial Loan Soc., Waterbury; F. W. Hawkinson, Beneficial Loan Soc., Meriden; J. F. Brennan, Beneficial Loan Soc., Stamford; Miller, Beneficial Loan Soc., Hartford; Pape, Beneficial Loan Soc., Norwalk; D. Johns, Personal Finance Co., Ansonia; A. Plummer, Personal Finance Co., Bristol; R. C. Bernhardt, American Loan Co., New Haven; J. G. Reuter, Newark Cash C. Co., New Haven; A. Berman, National Loan Co., Hartford; A. Kanter, United Loan Corp., Bridgeport; J. Miller, Fidelity Loan Corp., Bridgeport.

Under New Business—A discussion on credit clearing bureaus was brought before the meeting. A. G. Zimmerman, representing the American Loan Co., Beneficial Loan Soc. and Personal Finance Co., spoke on the good that they had received from same, and pledged the support of all their offices in starting exchanges where they have none at the present time, also in coöperating where exchanges now exist.

Mr. Berman, of the National Loan Co., Hartford, spoke of having located skips through the bureau there, also saved money by finding that parties had loans elsewhere. The rate in Hartford is $100 per year for unlimited number of reports, which included not only the information regarding loan companies, but also all information they have on files from other sources.

In answer to questions by Mr. Stephenson, it was brought out that the cost in Philadelphia was $16.35 per month for maximum offices, but that they could pay on the outstanding balance. In Providence they have not settled on a rate yet as the exchange was only recently started. Mr. D'Esormaux stated that in New Bedford they pay only $25.00 per year for unlimited number of reports which includes all information from the 175 members of the Bureau.

Regarding an exchange in Bridgeport, Mr. Murchie stated that they have had no success as yet, as the members do not seem to have faith in each other. He had taken the matter up with the Chamber of Commerce, who had agreed to operate the exchange for $100 per year, which included only the loan service.

Remarks were made by A. G. Zimmerman, T. C. O'Brien, H. J. D'Esormaux, and C. C. Coleman in reply to question of Mr. Stephenson, "How the exchange would affect the small lender?" It was the unanimous opinion of all speaking that he would derive as much, if not more benefit than the large lender, as it would protect him from making loans to those who were already tied up with large amounts in other companies.

Mr. Dunbar stated that there were but two companies in Norwich, and that they frequently call each other up regarding applications.

Mr. Fasano spoke of the work they had been doing trying to have the different Italian companies exchange all applications, so as to keep the borrowers from being overloaded.

Mr. Riccio expressed his pleasure at being present, but as he was there in place of Mr. Silver, was not very familiar with the exchange system.

An invitation for all members having skips and collections in Massachusetts to send them to the Massachusetts secretary, was given by Chairman D'Esormaux.

The Secretary read a telegram from the National Chairman, Edgar P. East, expressing his regrets as being unable to be present with us.

The question of having a Tri-State meeting was brought up by Mr. O'Brien.

Mr. D'Esormaux stated that the reason for voting against it in Massachusetts was that "in summer they had vacations, and in winter, pressure of business." Also that most of the offices had a limited force, and could not attend the meetings.

Mr. Stephenson did not favor the Tri-State plan, and stated his men would not be present.

Mr. Zimmerman stated that the Beneficial Operating Bureau would have all their men present, if such a meeting was held.

Mr. D'Esormaux stated that he would take it up again with the executive committee of the Massachusetts Association.

H. G. McMullin, Secretary.

In the absence of the Secretary, the Chairman appointed Lee H. Pumphrey to act in that capacity.

The following members were present: E. E. Hougham, Atlas Loan Society; W. P. Hancher, J. E. Turner, S. R. Sutton, Glenn S. Knapp, Community Finance Service, Inc.; V. D. Moss, People's Loan Society; H. T. Gatter, A. E. Potter, Household Finance Corporation; E. F. Moore, G. W. Holden, J. E. O'Neill, Jr., Beneficial Loan Society; P. T. Baseman, L. E. Fugitt, J. F. Sommer, People's Loan Society; C. H. Hood, Industrial Loan Society; R. L. Smith, R. A. Long, C. L. Smith, and Lee H. Pumphrey, The Master Loan Service, Inc.

The most important topic for discussion was the Semi-Annual Banquet and dance to be held at the Southern Hotel on November 10, 1925. Chairman Hood reported that our Ex-Mayor Honorable William F. Broening had accepted his invitation to address us, and that he had hopes of securing other prominent speakers for the occasion.

The menu, dance music, and other incidentals necessary for the banquet were decided upon and Chairman Hood was congratulated for his untiring efforts to make the Semi-Annual Banquet a successful affair.

The discussion of the banquet was closed to the satisfaction of everyone present when a motion by Mr. Moss seconded by Mr. Hougham that $5.00 per plate be charged was approved.

Chairman Hood recommended that the application for membership to our Association of the Reliable Loan Service Company, be accepted. On motion by Mr. Hougham seconded by Mr. Gatter, the Chairman was instructed to advise the Reliable Loan Service Company that their application was happily accepted and to request their Manager Mr. I. E. Horowitz to attend our regular meetings and take an active part in our Association.

On motion by Mr. Hougham seconded by Mr. Moss a letter from Mr. Orem, proprietor, Lend-U Money Bankers with reference to closing all day Saturday during summer months in lieu of a two week vacation, was ordered tabled.

Chairman Hood gave a brief talk on his visit to the National Convention. He was deeply impressed with the sincerity and frankness of the members to coöperate with each other. He considered it a splendid thought that our next convention be held at the same time and place as that of the National Remedial Loan Association, and spoke of the delightful personality of Mr. Leon Henderson of the Sage Foundation.

Since our October 13th meeting, an application for membership from our good friend C. A. Gardner, General Manager of the Commercial Service and Credit Company has been approved.

LEE H. PUMPHREY, Acting Secretary.

MICHIGAN

The Semi-Annual Meeting of the Michigan Industrial Lenders Association scheduled to be held in Kalamazoo was transferred to Detroit by the Chairman. The Detroit meeting was held October 15th, at the Detroit Union League Club.

The morning session consisted of the election of officers for the ensuing year, and the transaction of regular business. At the noon luncheon the speaker was Mr. George A. Roe, Managing Director of the Detroit Union League Club.

The afternoon session was given to further business. A question box which proved very interesting and educational. Mr. J. J. Bentley of Detroit, President of the Detroit Lenders Clearing House Association explained the workings and the good that has come from the organization of this Exchange for the Lenders of Detroit.

Henderson of Chicago, acted as Toastmaster and first introduced Mr. Norman Buckner of Pontiac, newly elected Chairman of the Michigan Association. He was followed by Mr. Charles E. Boyd, Assistant Secretary of the Detroit Board of Commerce, who told something of the great growth of Michigan and particularly Detroit, and told of the advantages of ones interested in their Local Board or Chamber of Commerce.

The speaker of the evening was Honorable Roy Herald, State Senator from Detroit. Senator Herald is the father of the Uniform Small Loan Law in Michigan, which was passed at the last session of the legislature and became effective August 28th of this year.

The following were elected as officers for the ensuing year:

Chairman, Norman Buckner, 5 S. Saginaw St., Pontiac; Vice Chairman, Louis Bettlon, 928 Detroit Savings Bank Bldg., Detroit; Secretary, W. G. Stevens, 2003 First National Bank Bldg., Detroit; Treasurer, J. J. Hanes, 121 Washtenaw St., Lansing, Mich. The next meeting is to be held in Saginaw, Michigan, the third Thursday in April of 1926.

Mueller, President of the Community Finance Service, Inc., of Philadelphia, Pa., Mr. William Young, Vice-President of the Community Finance Service, Inc. of Philadelphia, Mr. V. D. Moss of Philadelphia and W. S. Herron, former Chairman of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders' Association. The speaker of the day, Mr. Leon H. Sullivan, was introduced by Mr. William Young. He gave us a wonderful talk on coöperation and general topics of the day. While not directly connected with the industrial loan business, Mr. Sullivan seemed to have an unlimited knowledge of our business and injected in his talk a most friendly spirit towards our association and the work carried on by it. At the termination of Mr. Sullivan's talk, upon motion by Dr. Mueller, the association tendered a rising vote of thanks.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Chairman Alberse reports that the association is advancing in a very prosperous way and progress is being made in all directions.

Treasurer Long offered a written report which was read and order turned over to the newly elected Treasurer for attention.

Secretary reports the death of two of our members, to wit: Mr. David Arms of Paterson and Mr. John J. O'Toole of Jersey City, and,

WHEREAS, It has pleased Divine Providence to remove from our midst the late members of the New Jersey Industrial Lenders' Association, and,

WHEREAS, The intermittent relations long held by our deceased friends with the members of this association, render it appropriate that we place on record, our appreciation for their services to the association and their merits as men, therefore, be it,

Resolved, by the New Jersey Industrial Lenders' Association, that while we humbly submit to the will of the Most High, we none the less mourn for our friends who have been called to their eternal rest.

Resolved, that in the deaths of David I. Arms and John J. O'Toole, the association loses two members who have always been loyal and prompt to advance its interests; devoted to its welfare and prosperity. Two men who were wise in counsel and fearless in action, sincere friends, honest and upright men, whose virtue endeared them not only to their immediate associates but to all their fellow citizens.

Resolved, that the association tender its heartfelt sympathy to the families and relatives of our deceased friends in this said affliction.

Resolved, that these resolutions be entered upon the minutes of the association to-day, and that a copy of them be sent to the families of our deceased associations.

Report of entertainment committee was accepted as reported by Mr. J. C. Van Horn of Trenton, the Chairman ordered that in the future, the entertainment committee will make a monthly report on the yearly meeting.

A written report of the auditing committee was read by Mr. Don Cameron of Newark, which was accepted and ordered placed in the minutes. It was ordered that the recommendations as made by the committee be considered and the committee was then discharged with thanks. Upon motion a committee consisting of Mr. Irish, Mr. Igoe, and Mr. Long were appointed as a committee of three to call on delinquent members and discuss the matter of retaining their membership in the association.

Upon motion the appointed Finance and Security Corporation of Jersey City, who have gone into bankruptcy was dropped from the roll.

Membership Committee

Chairman, William Young, reports progress and Mr. Van Horn volunteered to contact the department of banking and insurance at Trenton in securing the names and addresses of new licensees as licenses are issued, which will assist the membership committee materially in securing new members.

New Business

A letter received by the Secretary from Mr. Charles H. Watts, President of the Beneficial Operating Bureau was read to the membership regarding automobile lenders who advertise by mail to make automobile loans. The Secretary reported that he personally made a visit to the office of the Auto Owners' Finance Corporation and explained the procedure and method used by the said company in obtaining a loan. Dr. Mueller then introduced Mr. Herron, Chairman of the Pennsylvania Association, who explained a similar case in Philadelphia and advised the members that action was being taken by the Pennsylvania Association against these automobile lenders, and was now before the courts. Several similar cases were cited in various parts of the state and after a lengthy discussion, it was regularly moved and seconded that a Vigilance Committee be appointed to handle just such matters as was now before the house. Mr. Simonson of Newark was then appointed Chairman of the Vigilance Committee and he in turn is to appoint his own assistants and report at the next meeting.

A letter from Mr. Pope relative to uniform papers was read and Mr. Moss of Philadelphia explained the best procedure to obtain a uniform set of papers. He said in Pennsylvania that all members send to the Executive Committee a complete set of all security forms as used in their offices to the Secretary, which was to be forwarded to the Executive Committee for perusal and to be reported upon at the next meeting. Upon motion of Mr. Young, this action was carried by the association. Upon motion by Mr. Badger, it was ordered that the Executive Committee be empowered to incur any necessary expense to draft uniform papers.

The Secretary then took up the question of handling skip accounts outside of the state of New York as several members had expressed unwillingness to go into the state of New York to collect any foreign skip accounts outside of their own, and after considerable discussion by the association, it was decided that the New Jersey association will reciprocate with the other state associations and handle accounts irrespective as to location, and that the Secretary be empowered to accept and place such accounts as may come to him for attention anywhere in the state of New Jersey and New York.

Mr. Lambert of the Guarantee Loan Company of Camden N. J., spoke on the Mercantile and City Tax as in effect in the city of Camden, and warned the members that unless some action was taken collectively, this would spread all over the state, and upon motion by Mr. Young, a committee of three was appointed to go into the situation and submit a report as soon as possible whereupon the chair appointed Mr. Watts Chairman, Dr. Mueller and Mr. Badger.

The Secretary then read a letter of resignation by Mr. Long, the Treasurer and it was with much regret that the association accepted this resignation, a copy of which is placed on the minutes, after which upon motion by Dr. Mueller a rising vote of thanks was tended to Mr. Long for his untiring efforts. An election was then ordered to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Long and the names of Mr. Eugene Woodburn and Mr. Don Cameron both of Newark were offered to the members as candidates. After appointing Mr. Young, Sergeant-at-Arms and Mr. Boullt and Mr. Herron Tellers, nominations were ordered closed and upon the counting of votes, it was found that Mr. Woodburn had been chosen to fulfill the unexpired term of Mr. Long until the next annual meeting of the association.

Six applications were presented for membership for approval. They were all elected to membership.

Upon motion by Mr. Badger, Mr. Montgomery was appointed a committee of one to call upon the Monmouth Finance Company of Asbury Park and assist them to become familiar with the fundamental principles, of the small loan business.

There being no further business before the meeting, said meeting was adjourned until Thursday, January 21st to be held in Trenton, N. J.

W. P. Hansche,
Secretary.

TENNESSEE

While the small loan law was pending in the Spring of 1925 in the legislature of Tennessee, a pamphlet was issued in support of the bill, by ex-Judge W. C. Cherry, of Nashville, containing the following sound observations upon the principles involved:

There has been for a long time three widely different theories as to small loan legislation. First, that non-bankable small loans should pay only the same rate of interest as bankable loans. Second, that there should be no legislation upon the subject because such loans will find the proper rate by competition. Third, the last theory is between the first two and is to the effect that there should be legislation restricting the rate, but that the rate should be higher than bankable loans.

It may be confidently asserted that there exists and always will exist a vast number of non-bankable loans which are necessary to the borrower.

Now, small loans cannot be made under as low rates as bankable loans for many reasons.

First, the bank does not lend merely its own money.

Second, the bank loans are made on what is known as fluid collateral. On the contrary, the small loan business necessarily deals in non-fluid collateral.

Third, the investigation as to collateral and the collection of the loan is much more expensive than in the case of banks. The bank accepts only such collateral as has a known market value and which can be readily realized on. The small loan man must investigate the proposed collateral.

Fourth, it must also appear that the collateral is more often worthless than in the case of bankable loans, and loan rates are, of course, always based upon the element of loss in the business.

STATE OF TENNESSEE EX REL, FRANK M. THOMPSON, ATTORNEY-GENERAL, ET AL. vs. DIXIE FINANCE COMPANY.

Opinion

The bill in this cause was filed by the State, on relation of A. S. Caldwell, its Commissioner of Insurance and Banking, J. D. Senter, its Commissioner of Finance and Taxation, and Frank M. Thompson, its Attorney-General, on May 13, 1925, against the defendant, Dixie Finance Company, a Delaware corporation, having an office and agent and doing business in the City of Nashville, Davidson County, Tennessee.

The bill was filed for two purposes:

1. To enjoin the defendant from engaging in the business of lending money on wages and salaries, at interest rates in excess of 10% per annum, unless and until it should obtain the proper license required by law for engaging in said business.

2. To collect delinquent privilege taxes alleged to be due from the defendant to the State and County.

The Revenue Act of 1925, which became effective May 1, 1925, imposed a privilege tax and required a license for lending money on salaries or household furniture, and also imposed a privilege tax and required a license for lending money at rate of interest in excess of 10% per annum. Chapter 62 of the Public Acts of 1917, as amended by chapter 75 of the Public Acts of 1925, required an additional license of persons and corporations like the defendant engaged in the business of lending money on wages or salaries.

The bill alleged that the defendant was doing business without the required licenses, and sought:

1. A decree against the defendant for the amount of privilege taxes with interest, penalties and costs.

2. An injunction restraining the defendant from collecting or attempting to collect any money from any person to whom it had hitherto made illegal loans, or from bringing any suits or procuring any judgments for such loans, and from taking any steps or procuring others to take any steps to collect any judgments already taken.

3. That an injunction issue restraining the defendant from lending money on wages or salaries, except as authorized by the Public Acts of 1917 and 1925, unless and until the defendant complied with said acts in every particular and has paid privilege taxes and obtained a license as a loan company.

The writ of injunction was granted, as prayed for, in the nature of a stay order, until application for an injunction could be made on May 20, 1925.

On May 20, 1925, defendant filed its demurrer incorporated in an answer to the bill. The demurrer set up numerous defenses—among them that chapter 76 of the Public Acts of 1925, which attempted to amend chapter 62 of the Public Acts of 1917, was unconstitutional and void, in that:

A bill being a complete act of legislation upon the entire subject matter of chapter 62 of the Public Acts of 1917, was regularly passed by the General Assembly of 1925, the same being Senate Bill No. 355, known as the "Small Loan Bill," and the same became a law as shown by the Journal of the Senate, the Governor not having returned the same with his veto within the time prescribed by the constitution of the State.

The cause was heard by the chancellor May 20, 1925 and, of his own motion, he modified the injunction so as not to prevent the defendant from collecting the principal sums loaned to its customers; but the court otherwise granted the injunction prayed for in the bill, holding chapter 76, Acts of 1925, which attempted to amend chapter 62, Acts of 1917, valid and in full force and effect; and further holding that Senate Bill No. 355 did not become a law of the land, and declined to further modify the injunction, to which action the defendant excepted.

Then the cause came on to be further heard, upon motion of the defendant to dispose of its demurrer, whereupon the court overruled the demurrer, except to that part of the bill which prayed for a forfeiture of the principal sums loaned by the defendant.

From this decree defendant appealed to this court, and has assigned errors.

It is conceded by counsel for complainants in their brief in the cause of State of Tennessee ex rel Frank M. Thompson, Attorney-General, et al. vs. J. B. Hatley, a companion cause also appealed from the Chancery Court of Davidson County, and heard by this court along with the instanto cause, that if Senate Bill No 355 became a law by reason of the alleged failure of the Governor to return the bill with his veto within five days as required by section 18 of article 3 of our Constitution, then chapter 62 of the Public Acts of 1917 was repealed by implication, and chapter 76 of the Public Acts of 1925, being an amendment of a non-existing act, is void and of no effect. The question then is, did Senate Bill No. 355 become a law by reason of the failure of the Governor to return it with his veto within the time required by the constitutional provision above referred to?

Section 18 of article 3 of our Constitution provides in part as follows:

"If the Governor shall fail to return any bill with his objections, within five days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall become a law without his signature, unless the General Assembly, by its adjournment, prevents its return, in which case it shall not become a law."

With reference to Senate Bill No. 355, the Senate Journal contains the following recital:

"Thursday, April 2, 1925.
Sixty-Fifth day.

"The Senate met at 9:30 a. m. and was called to order by Mr. Speaker Hill.

"The proceedings were opened by prayer by Chaplain R. J. Craig.

"On call of the roll 33 senators were found to be present.

"On motion the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

"MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR

"Mr. Speaker: I am directed by the Governor to return herewith the following Senate Bill without his approval; and the message in writing. Senate Bill No. 355. J. D. TALLEY, Secretary.

"On motion the message was received, ordered read by the Clerk and spread upon the Journal, which is as follows: (Then follows the Governor's message.)

In John City v. Eastern Electric Co., 135 Tenn. 632, it appeared that the Governor failed to return the bill there involved with his veto within five days, but that before the expiration of the five days the legislature had taken a recess for thirty days. The bill was returned with the Governor's veto immediately after that body again assembled pursuant to adjournment. This Court held that the bill became a law for the reason that it was not contemplated by the constitutional provision above quoted that the return of the bill be to the house in open session. On the contrary, it held that a proper return of a bill can be made to any proper agent of the House in which the bill originated, such as a Clerk, or some member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills. The word "adjournment" as used in the Constitution, means a final adjournment of both Houses, not a temporary adjournment.

To the same effect is the holding of the Court in Harpending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 189. In that case the Governor sent a messenger with the bill and his veto message to the House in which the bill originated, on the afternoon of the fifth day. When the messenger arrived, the House had adjourned. He thereupon carried the bill back to the Governor. The Court held that the bill became a law, for the reason that the Governor should have sent the bill finally and definitely to some agent of the House, it not being necessary that it be returned to the House in open session.

The recitations of the Senate Journal hereinbefore quoted are affirmative, clear and unequivocal. They show when and how Senate Bill No. 355 was returned to the Senate without the Governor's approval. The Journal entry recites that it was present in person by the Secretary of the Governor on the 2d day of April, 1925. The entry then proceeds: "On motion the message was received," etc. Therefore, it can not be presumed that it was returned to either of the other parties authorized to receive it, to wit—the Clerk of the Senate, or the Chairman on Enrolled Bills. There is no room for any presumption that such was the case, because, as before stated, the recitals of the Journal entry are affirmative, clear and plain that it was returned by the Governor through his Secretary on the 2d day of April, 1925, which date, it is conceded by complainants, was the sixth day after the bill was received by the Governor.

A stipulation of counsel is relied on by complainants to explain the Journal entry hereinbefore set out. This stipulation, it seems, was filed by counsel for the respective parties after the cause had been appealed to this court. It reads as follows:

"In this cause, it is agreed, subject to objections for competency, that the message of the Governor vetoing Senate Bill 355, at the last session of the legislature, and the bill itself were delivered in his behalf to the Clerk of the Senate a few minutes before midnight on April 1, 1925, and was then receipted by the Clerk, Hunt, signing his name thereto.

"Further, that the Supreme Court may, if it will, consider this stipulation as a part of the record and as though set forth as a part of the original bill."

"(Signed) WM. WALLER,
SETH WALKER,

Counsel for complainants.

W. C. CHERRY,
THOS. A. SHRIVER, JR."

This stipulation of counsel is a direct contradiction of the recitals of the Senate Journal and cannot be considered by the Court. It was held in Heiskell v. Knox County, 132 Tenn. 180, that the recitals in the Journals of the Legislature are conclusive. They are entitled to absolute verity, and cannot even be impeached on the ground of mistake or fraud. If there are errors in them, the House itself is the only tribunal authorized to correct them. Therefore, the recitals of the Senate Journal above set out affirmatively showing that the bill was not returned by the Governor with his veto within the time prescribed by the Constitution, it became a law of the land and repealed chapter 62 of the Public Acts of 1917, because it was a complete revision of the subject matter dealt with by that act. It also follows as a necessary consequence that the amendatory Act of 1925 is void and of no effect, because the act which it attempted to amend did not exist, having been repealed by the passage of Senate Bill No. 355.

The case of United States v. Allen, 36 Fed. 174, which is relied upon by complainants in support of their contention that extrinsic evidence can be introduced to explain the entry appearing on the Senate Journal and show the true facts, is not in point. In that case the House Journal of February 25, 1887, to the effect that the Speaker on that day laid the President's message before the House, did not state when the message was received, and was in no respect inconsistent with the explanation furnished by the Journal Clerk, which the court held was competent in such circumstances.

It results that the chancellor's decree will be reversed; the injunction dissolved, and complainants' bill dismissed with costs. HALL, J.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, ex rel. FRANK M. THOMPSON, ATTORNEY-GENERAL, et al. vs. DAVIDSON EQUITY, J. B. HATLEY, doing business as the HERMITAGE INVESTMENT COMPANY.

OPINION

The bill in this cause was filed by the state on relation of A. S. Caldwell, its Commissioner of Insurance and Banking, J. D. Senter, its Commissioner of Finance and Taxation, and Frank M. Thompson, its Attorney-General, against J. B. Hatley, doing business as the Hermitage Investment Company.

The bill was filed for the following purposes:

1. To enjoin the defendant from engaging in the business of lending money on wages and salaries at interest rates in excess of ten (10%) per cent per annum, unless and until he should obtain the proper licenses required by law for engaging in said business.

2. To collect delinquent privilege taxes due the State and County under the Revenue Act of 1925, which became effective May 1 1925, and chapter 62 of the Acts of 1917, as amended by chapter 75 of the Acts of 1925; the bill alleging that defendant was doing business without the required licenses, and sought to enjoin and abate his business as a public nuisance under the provisions of chapter 158 of the Acts of 1919.

The bill also prayed for a decree for the amount of the privilege taxes due with interest, penalties and costs.

The chancellor, upon the filing of the bill, granted a temporary injunction restraining defendant from collecting any moneys and from procuring any judgments growing out of his said business, and restraining the further conduct of said business by the defendant.

The chancellor subsequently enjoined defendant from further engaging in business until he took out the license prescribed by the Act of 1917, and paid the privilege tax required of loan agents, but modified the former injunction to the extent that collection of the principal of loans made by him was not restrained.

The defendant filed a demurrer and answer to the bill challenging the constitutionality of chapter 62 of the Public Acts of 1917, and chapter 76 of the Public Acts of 1925, and setting up substantially the same defenses as are relied on in the cause of State ex rel. Frank M. Thompson, Attorney-General, et al. v. Dixie Finance Company, from Davidson Equity, which cause was heard with the instant cause in this court, except he did not present the defense that chapter 76 of the Public Acts of 1925 is invalid because another bill, to wit, Senate Bill No. 355, known as the "Small Loan Bill," which is a complete act of legislation upon the entire subject of chapter 62 of the Public Acts of 1917, was regularly passed by the legislature at its session 1925, and the same became a law as shown by the Journal of the Senate, the Governor not having returned said bill with his veto within the time prescribed by our constitution.

Upon the hearing the chancellor held the Acts of 1917 and 1925 valid and constitutional, and passed substantially the same decree as that rendered in State of Tennessee ex rel. v. Dixie Finance Company, from which decree defendant has appealed and assigned errors.

While not expressly raised by the defendant in this cause, it is conceded by counsel for complainants that the question necessarily arises and must be decided whether or not the "Small Loan Bill," introduced in the Legislature of 1925, as Senate Bill No. 355, became a law because of the failure of the Governor to return the bill with his veto within the five days prescribed by the constitution. This question being expressly raised by the defendant in the cause of State ex rel. v. Dixie Finance Company.

We have fully discussed this question in an opinion to be filed in this cause and have reached the conclusion that Senate Bill No. 355 became a valid statute by reason of the Governor having failed to return said bill to the Senate with his veto within the time prescribed by section 18 of article 3 of our constitution. This bill, having become a valid statute, had the effect of repealing chapter 62 of the Public Acts of 1917. It necessarily follows, therefore, that chapter 76 of the Public Acts of 1925 is void because it attempts to amend a statute which did not exist.

It results that the decree of the chancellor will be reversed; the injunction dissolved, and complainants' bill dismissed with costs. HALL, J.

TENNESSEE

The first meeting of the Tennessee Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Patten Hotel, Chattanooga, Tennessee, Wednesday, November 4, at 12:00 o'clock noon.

Those present were: John and W. B. Richards, Richards Loan Company, Knoxville, Tennessee; O. H. May, O. H. May Company, Knoxville, Tennessee; W. G. Brightwell, Sea Board Security Company, Knoxville, Tennessee; G. B. Love, Personal Finance Company, Knoxville, Tennessee; G. R. Fox, American Security Company, Chattanooga, Tennessee; H. C. Humphreys, Personal Finance Company, Chattanooga, Tennessee; C. E. Beebe, Chattanooga, Tennessee; C. M. Rice, Personal Finance Company, Memphis, Tennessee; Paul A. Appleby, Memphis Security Company, Memphis, Tennessee; P. A. Hodge, Personal Finance Company, Nashville, Tennessee; C. G. Liggett, Representing Beneficial Operating Bureau, New York City; L. C. Dunn, Representing Beneficial Operating Bureau, New York City; Allan K. Dolliver, Beneficial Operating Bureau, New York City; A. D. Bennett, Beneficial Operating Bureau, New York City; George S. Knapp, Memphis, Tennessee.

Luncheon was served at 12:30. Immediately after luncheon, the meeting was called to order by C. G. Liggett, representing Beneficial Operating Bureau, who made a very interesting and enlightening address as to the purposes and benefits of an Association. After Mr. Liggett's address, he suggested that the meeting proceed with the nominating and electing of officers for the ensuing year and suggested for a nominating committee, L. C. Dunn, Beneficial Operating Bureau; G. R. Fox, American Security Company, and Alan K. Dolliver, Beneficial Operating Bureau. On motion of G. B. Love, this committee was elected by acclamation and submitted the following officers and committees for approval of the Association:

Officers: President, O. H. May; vice-president, Paul A. Appleby; treasurer, W. B. Richards; secretary, G. B. Love. Executive Committee: O. H. May, G. B. Love, Paul A. Appleby, C. E. Beebe, P. A. Hodge, C. R. Fox. Vigilance Committee: C. M. Rice, W. G. Brightwell, P. A. Hodge, C. R. Fox, P. A. Appleby. Membership Committee: P. A. Appleby, W. G. Brightwell, P. A. Hodge, C. R. Fox.

By motion of Mr. Hodge, officers and committees submitted by nominating committee were elected by acclamation. Mr. Dunn, in submitting the report of nominating committee remarked that it had been the aim of the committee to give representation to all companies represented and to make it as near equal as possible as it was not the aim of any of his committee to allow any one company to dominate. His remarks were very enthusiastically received. Mr. Dolliver of Beneficial Operating Bureau, addressed the new officers stating that the committee had selected them because they believed they were capable and would put the Tennessee Association on equal footing with the other Associations throughout the States.

On motion of Mr. Liggett, membership dues were set at $20.00, to run from November 1, 1925, to November 1, 1926. Each member present pledged to pay the treasurer this amount immediately.

Mr. Hodge read a paper entitled the Duties of an Outside Assistant Manager, which was very instructive and was received very favorably by those present.

On motion of Mr. Rice, it was voted that the next meeting of the Association would be held at the Claridge Hotel, Memphis, Tennessee, Friday, January 15, 1926, at 10 o'clock, and that after business session, a banquet would be held and entertainment furnished. It was also suggested that some public officials be invited, the object being to promote a mutual understanding and friendly relationship with the heads of departments. The motion carried and the chair appointed the following as Entertainment Committee: C. M. Rice, P. A. Appleby, G. S. Knapp.

The first meeting of the Tennessee Association was indeed a success, as out of twelve licensees in the State, ten were in attendance and were enthusiastic.

Due credit for the successful meeting should be given Mr. Liggett and Mr. Dunn of the Beneficial Operating Bureau, for the excellent missionary work among the lenders of this State as reflected by the attendance.

There being no further business to transact, on motion duly made and seconded, the meeting was adjourned.

G. B. LOVE, Secretary.

Tenth Annual Meeting of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association

THE LIBRARY OF THE DEC 16 1925
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Every requirement of a successful meeting was met at the tenth annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association on November 18th at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, and the convention was a going concern from start to finish. Even the elements, which can not be guaranteed by the most careful convention planners, were propitious. A glorious day, with the crisp, snappy weather of late Fall, welcomed some 300 lenders to Philadelphia, and the program of interesting talks, exchanges of experiences and opinions, with the closing event of the annual dinner and its accompanying entertainment, amply repaid those fortunate enough to be present.

The meeting was called to order Wednesday forenoon in the Clover Room by State Chairman Reeves, whom Secretary Watts introduced because, he said, Mr. Reeves' enforced long absence during the year made it almost necessary that he should be introduced.

The morning session was devoted to the routine business of the meeting, with incidental discussion of the concurrent problems of the lending business, prominent among which was the activity of salary buyers. Reports were submitted by Chairman Reeves, Secretary Watts, E. F. Moore, chairman of the Committee on Publicity; A. S. Ezekiel, chairman of the Executive Committee; F. R. Farringer, of Pittsburgh, chairman of the Vigilance Committee; William Young, Philadelphia, chairman of the Committee on Membership; and George W. Kehr, Harrisburg, chairman of the Committee on Legislation. All of the reports were adopted.

During the order of unfinished business Mr. Buck, of Philadelphia, related an experience he had early in the year with a Philadelphia concern which advertised loans on automobiles. Mr. Buck said he obtained a loan of $150 on his car for which he paid in interest the sum of $60 in three weeks. He laid the case before the District Attorney and the evidence was presented to the grand jury and an indictment returned against the company. The trial in October resulted in a verdict of guilty against the company, whose president was fined $100, with a warning that a second offense would mean a prison sentence.

Mr. Kehr said that he considered the case of salary buyers as analogous to that of the case related by Mr. Buck, as the automobile financing company had employed the subterfuge of claiming that they did not in fact lend the money on a car but bought it from the owner, subsequently releasing it to him at a fixed weekly rental.

Mr. Watts warned against the aggressiveness of the salary buyers, who were full of fight and whose pugnacious attitude must be taken into consideration by industrial lenders in their efforts to make them comply with the laws.

During the morning session there were a number of visiting lenders from other states present, among them Edgar P. East, of Richmond, Virginia, National Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders Association, and C. Howard Hood, State Chairman of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association. Chairman Reeves called upon Mr. East to take the floor, welcoming him to the meeting on behalf of the Pennsylvania Association.

Mr. East spoke of the purpose to increase the membership of the national body and asked the coöperation of the Pennsylvania Association in this. The ranks of the national association could be very materially swelled, he said, if there was perfect team work among all those now in the association, and he urged that nothing be left undone to accomplish this coöperation.

Mr. Hood of Baltimore was accorded a welcome by the meeting, and in a brief response he said that he had come to the meeting to see how the largest State Association conducted its annual gathering and what he could bring back to Maryland from Pennsylvania.

Leon Henderson, of New York, director of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, was then introduced to the meeting. Mr. Henderson expressed the hope that no lender would ever visit New York without including his office as one of the ports of call, saying that while he could not hope to compete with the Follies, he would guarantee that the chairs in his office were not uncomfortable and that the welcome would be wholehearted.

There was an overflow attendance at the midday luncheon when Mr. Watts introduced State Representative Benjamin H. Ludlow, of Philadelphia, Chairman of the Federation Welfare Drive. Mr. Ludlow devoted the greater part of an interesting talk to the problem created by the anthracite strike, which he said might at any time progress from its present stage of a "private fight" to a "public fight."

Where a public commodity is concerned, he said, any controversy between those owning and those producing such a commodity ceases to be a purely private fight when the rights of the public are prejudiced because of these private differences. In the present instance, he said, a body less than 200,000 individuals are engaged in a struggle that conceivably might be disastrous in its effects upon 9,000,000 people not directly engaged in the controversy.

The time for any intervention in the quarrel, he said, would not arrive unless and until adequate supplies of bituminous coal were not forthcoming or could not be made available to meet the requirements of fuel users.

Upon convening the afternoon session Mr. Reeves moved that $300 be appropriated by the State Association to the Welfare Drive and the motion was passed unanimously.

George H. Orth, of Harrisburg, Chief of the Department of Private Banks, Department of Banking of Pennsylvania, was introduced to the meeting and in a few brief remarks acknowledged the welcome given him and his pleasure at being present. P. L. Alberse, of Paterson, New Jersey, chairman of the New Jersey Industrial Lenders Association, also was introduced and responded similarly.

Dr. Louis N. Robinson, of Swarthmore, who was called upon by Chairman Reeves, spoke briefly about the survey of the field of industrial lending made by him under the auspices of the Russell Sage Foundation. The survey, he said, had been completed some months ago and is now in the hands of the printers, with the prospect of being off the press in a month or so. Two definite results of this survey had already taken place, he said, one being the pamphlet on pawnbroking, and the other the appointment of Leon Henderson as director of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Foundation. Dr. Robinson explained that Mr. Henderson's fine work as an aid in the survey had been his chief recommendation for his appointment to his present responsible post.

There has been an agreement between the lenders and the Foundation, Dr. Robinson said, as to campaigns to be undertaken for the extension of the Uniform Small Loan Law, and he assured his hearers that they could count on the Foundation for real help in any crisis. He spoke in warm appreciation of the coöperation of industrial lenders in his work of investigation, declaring that he had found them "without guile or intent to deceive" or mislead him when he sought information about the lending business from them.

When Chairman Reeves called upon the nominating committee for its report the following slate was recommended:

Chairman, William Young, Philadelphia; vice chairman, E. B. Webster and Arthur L. Wick, Philadelphia; Secretary, Walter S. Herron, Philadelphia; Treasurer, J. F. Devine, Philadelphia; Chairman Executive Committee, Charles H. Watts, of New York and Philadelphia; Members Executive Committee, A. V. Hart and V. D. Moss, Philadelphia, and Martin Hartman, Pittsburgh.

The meeting first ballotted for executive committee members, unanimously electing all those subsequently elected as officers in the positions recommended by the Nominating Committee.

Mr. Young was welcomed to the chair by the retiring chairman, who turned him over to Secretary Watts for formal introduction to the meeting. This office Mr. Watts performed with apparent relish, promising Mr. Young that the prospects were for an administration ahead of him during his tenure of office more strenuous than probably had ever fallen to the lot of a chairman of the Pennsylvania Association. Mr. Young, in responding, professed himself as undismayed at the outlook forecast by Mr. Watts and assured his fellow members that whatever business of the Association lay to hand would receive from him his most faithful and conscientious attention, and he bespoke the coöperation of the entire membership of the Association.

The first of the addresses of the program for the afternoon was delivered by Richard McHugh, of West Philadelphia, on "Breeding Good Will." In any business or profession, the speaker declared, good will was the most important factor. It is the Association's biggest and best asset, he said, and one which is never out of style and whose face value never changes. Breeding good will, he said, is in effect building good business, and it contemplates the tremendous power of well directed coöperation plus public sentiment. Good will, Mr. McHugh concluded, is of more importance than mere merchandise.

"The Greatest Need of the Pennsylvania Association," as viewed by J. B. Otey, of Pittsburgh, is group advertising, the advantages of which were interesting stated in his address. Industrial lending, he declared, is one of the most misunderstood of businesses. To how great an extent business in the present age depends upon a favorable public opinion is proved, Mr. Otey said, by the large sums annually spent by large corporations in advertising and creating good will.

As an instance of the comparative lack of development of the lending business, Mr. Otey cited that with an estimate of 170,000 families in Pittsburgh, which he used as an instance with which he was familiar, it is doubtful if all the lending offices combined in that city are carrying 17,000 open accounts, or less than 10 per cent of the potential borrowers in the city. He believed this condition to be due to lack of understanding of the business on the part of the general public, and that this lack of understanding could be overcome by a campaign of coöperative advertising.

He suggested that a campaign of this kind, using display advertising, could be carried on without the expenditure of more money than is now being spent by lenders, by using part of the total spent in classified advertising, reducing the amount expended for the latter in the sum required for the coöperative display advertising.

The paper by Christian Gillen, of Philadelphia, on "Duty," was read by Mr. Herron in the absence of Mr. Gillen who was unable to be present. The duty of the manager of a loan office was described as fourfold, being to his investors, employees, borrowers and payors. Saying that if the lending business is not based on service to the needy, it would be difficult to say what is its reason for existence, Mr. Gillen placed the duty to borrowers first on the list. It is the duty of the manager, he said, to find some way to finance the honest person in need of money. He also said that duty to all four of the classes enumerated as those to whom the manager owed a duty, required that he should insist upon regular payments from borrowers, and that by this insistence he fulfilled a duty to the payor who might need another loan and whose prompt payments put him in a position to obtain it and also tended to encourage him in habits of thrift.

George M. Crouse, Jr., of Philadelphia, in his paper on "Educational Publicity and its Needs" said that there had been little progress in the education of the public as to the truth about industrial lending. Despite all the publicity and efforts to bring about a correct understanding of the business, in the absence of well defined results, he believed that much remained to be done. When it is generally known what industrial lending does as a useful and necessary service, he said, those who now condemn it will welcome industrial lending to their communities.

As a constructive program for bringing about this general understanding, Mr. Crouse enumerated the following: Straightforward and intelligent conduct of their duties by everyone in the lending business; judicious lending, not hesitating to withhold credit where its extention would be harmful; the avoidance of lending in amounts out of proportion to the borrower's income; a one-loan policy through the use of exchange bureaus; a course of continuous rather than sporadic and occasional publicity; a well defined state-wide publicity plan; the use of publications other than daily newspapers, such as the journals and publications of chambers of commerce; an organized plan for putting educational pamphlets in the hands of representative business men, lawmakers, courts and clergy; a percentage of the dues paid into the Association to be appropriated for educational publicity.

In concluding, Mr. Crouse said that he believed that an appropriation of 25 per cent of the dues paid would not be too great to devote to the purpose of a campaign of education, if it were judicially expended.

In the discussions which followed the set program, Mr. E. F. Moore of Philadelphia spoke of the advisability of obtaining a definite heading in the classified advertising columns for industrial lenders, to distinguish them from a class inclusive of salary buyers, automobile financing concerns, and others of a like character. Mr. Holloway supported the suggestion made by Mr. Moore and a motion made by Mr. Holloway to instruct the Publicity Committee to select the proper heading was carried.

Mr. Herron, after quoting from a newspaper account of a suicide in which the inference was that it was prompted by financial troubles consequent upon a loan obtained on the suicide's furniture, suggested that all news articles in which reflections upon loan companies appeared be investigated.

Mr. Holloway suggested that industrial lenders word their classified advertisements to omit any mention of loans made on furniture, emphasizing the fact that such loans are made on notes. Mr. Watts commented that in Pennsylvania the law made this entirely permissible, and Chairman Young advised that every member of the Association constitute himself a committee of one to aid the Vigilance Committee.

Before adjournment of the session for the annual dinner a motion by Mr. Buck that the Entertainment Committee be thanked for its work was unanimously carried.

The grand ball room of the Bellevue-Stratford was crowded to capacity by Pennsylvania lenders, and their guests, among whom were many ladies in brilliant costumes. Charles G. Mueller of Philadelphia was toastmaster and he was in more than customarily good form as such, distributing his verbal bouquets and brickbats in even measure to the great delight both of his victims and his audience.

Before introducing the first after dinner speaker Mr. Mueller referred to the absence of Judge John M. Patterson of Philadelphia, whose death occurred on Election Day as he was about to be chosen to a high office by the suffrages of the people of Philadelphia. Mr. Mueller spoke feelingly of Judge Patterson's worth, the loss to the community in his death and the regret of the members of the Association. At his request everyone in the ball room arose and stood for a moment in silence as a tribute to the speaker whom death had called.

Charles H. Watts spoke to the toast "To Our Ladies," modestly explaining that on this occasion he was a "pinch hitter" to fill out the speaking program. His address, while very brief, was a beautiful and touching acknowledgment of the great and good influence of women upon men, an influence which he said began at the very earliest age of the man who as a boy revered his mother and whose character was molded by her love and counsel. Mr. Watts' talk was a little jewel of wit, humor and genuine feeling and visibly impressed his hearers.

Dr. Carl Wallace Petty, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Pittsburgh, the only other speaker of the evening, gave an address on "The Anatomy of Character," which was replete with sparkling epigrams, hard-hitting facts, delightful anecdotes and a sane and timely philosophy. Dissecting character, he bared only three of the bones of its structure—the funny bone, the backbone and the breastbone—but this exposition of their functions left no doubt in the minds of those who heard him that they were the principal and indispensible girders of character.

The funny bone Dr. Petty described as the sense of humor which is necessary in business, in the home, in the ministry and, indeed, in every walk of life. The backbone, he said, was sadly lacking to-day. In this division of his subject he strongly defended the younger generation from the attacks made upon them, and while he was unable to concede that they possessed backbone, he laid the blame for the deficiency upon their parents who also lacked backbone.

Breastbone, as described by Dr. Petty, was the sentiment of friendship for our fellows, and he deplored the absence of this essential part of the anatomy of character as exemplified in the present hostility shown by certain elements toward the alien in this country. He spoke for the right to friendly fellowship of the alien who came to this country in good faith to become one of its citizens, asking by what right any American could sneer at him as an alien, since only a few generations back the ancestors of those of native stock were themselves aliens. Dr. Petty's talk was most attentively heard and his many and telling points were quickly and heartily applauded by his audience.

After the speaking the floor was cleared for dancing, which continued until one o'clock in the morning. The entertainment features of the dinner were so elaborate and enjoyable as to deserve special mention. The program, an artistic example of printing bound in gold embossed board covers, contained an excellent half tone of Mr. Reeves, the retiring chairman, and a list of the officers and executive committee of the state association, besides giving the menu, the list of entertainers and appropriate quotations from distinguished men on the industrial lending system.

Between the courses there was dancing to the music of an inciting jazz band directed by Isadore Senator, who also led his novelty singing orchestra of fifteen men in songs in which the diners joined. Other enjoyable numbers on the program were novelty blues by Miss Emma Woppler, a monologue on topics of the day by Harry Webb, a blackface comedian, and dances by Kelly and Roop, who gave the Charleston, the tango, the waltz and the rather strenuous Apache dance.

The dancing star of the evening, however, was conceded by all to be Baby Mary Homoiselle Moss, whose pirouetting, toe dancing and rhythmical tumbling were so enthusiastically received by the diners that the graceful youngster was obliged to give several encores.

THE GREATEST NEED OF THE PENNSYLVANIA INDUSTRIAL LENDERS ASSN.

By J. B. Otey

It has been my pleasure to be a member of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, for eighteen months and it is my sincere belief that we have here in Pennsylvania, an organization second best to none both in its accomplishments as well as the spirit of coöperation that is so manifest among its members. This no doubt is true due to the fact that we have perhaps the largest membership of any State Association, but more important I believe is that we have been very fortunate in numbering among our members some of the ablest and most experienced men in the loan business. Men who have given freely of their time to the upbuilding of the loan business in Pennsylvania, and through leadership our Association has gone forward until to-day I seriously doubt that it would be possible to find in any organization regardless of its size or kind, where there is a more friendly feeling or coöperative spirit than we have in the Pennsylvania Association. This being true it would seem that we have very lttle else to ask, but I feel that we as an association have permitted some of the smaller and younger Lenders Associations to surpass us in one very important and in my mind the most important phase of industrial lending; and that is Educational Publicity.

I believe we all thoroughly appreciate the fact that the industrial loan business is one if not the most misunderstood business in the financial field to-day. I have felt this for sometime, but it was only a few days ago that it was very forcibly brought home to me just how misunderstood it is. I was appointed one of a committee to interview the credit managers of the larger department stores of Pittsburgh, to acquaint them with the small loan business. So far I have talked to three of these gentlemen and while they were very friendly personally, they were very antagonistic to the loan business in general. After going into detail as to the purpose of my call and explaining to them the loan business as it is now operated, I believe I was able to create a more favorable opinion and prove to them that the industrial loan service is just as necessary to the communities we serve as any other business. This antagonism was not due to any well grounded facts as I found out during our conversation, but was caused by just what they had pictured the loan business to be and I assure you their picture was anything but favorable. If men of this type holding the positions they do and having the advantage of getting the facts by their continual contact with the public and the business world felt as they did, what is the opinion of that great class of people who do not come in contact with the public of business enough to get a true conception on any question relating to any business, but depend solely upon what they read or hear to form their opinions? Unless they have had reasons to come in contact with the loan business their opinions are just the same or worse than these gentlemen mentioned above, and we have only ourselves to blame for this condition. We surely cannot expect or hope for the public on their own initiative to dig in and find the good points about us and our business unless we offer some incentive on which to work.

There has never been an age like the present in which business almost in its entirety depended more upon public opinion or has striven harder to favorably impress the public with its importance and necessity. This is proved by the money being spent annually by large corporations in advertising to create public goodwill towards the corporation and its product. This being true I can think of no business that has done less to sell itself to the public or needs an unbiased public opinion more than the small loan business, and I know of no better way of creating this favorable opinion than that of an extensive advertising campaign, whereby we can lay the facts before the public and prove that we are rendering the communities we serve a very necessary and legitimate service.

It is not necessary for me to show you the advantages of advertising, because it is almost an accepted fact that advertising is the greatest force in the business world to-day, however, in passing I would like to mention what one of the larger corporations in Pittsburgh did last year. Each year the Street Railways Association, gives a prize of $1,000 to the street railway having the most notable achievement during the year. Last year the Pittsburgh Railways won this prize. If I understand correctly this company at the beginning of the year was in the hands of the receivers, but by the end of the year it showed a substantial profit. The executives of this company attribute their success in this achievement to the fact that they were able to create a more friendly feeling and a better understanding between the public and its employees. This was done by a very extensive and I presume costly advertising program. The point I would have you get from this illustration is that while the Street Railways are one of the most important cogs in the life of a community, it is one that would have less reason to advertise its business or care what the public thought, inasmuch as no competition exists and everybody must ride. Still this company seems to have been fully repaid for the time and money spent in their efforts for a better conception of the street railway business.

When we stop to consider the amount of money invested in the loan business in Pittsburgh and then take into consideration the number of people we have to draw from, you will find that we are sadly behind some of the other localities in the volume of business handled. I understand that Indianapolis, with a population of 350,000 has invested in small loans approximately $1,500,000 and Atlanta, Georgia, with 230,000 has something over $1,100,000. I appreciate the fact that Pittsburgh is supposed to be the wealthiest city in the United States, per capita, still I cannot feel that we are rendering the service we are capable of rendering when we stop to consider that with a population of 1,000,000 people to cater to we have approximately only $1,700,000 outstanding. This means using the U. S. Government estimate of five people to the average family and deducting the 15% who have bank credit accommodations, we have approximately 170,000 families that are prospects for our service, yet I venture to say that all the offices combined are not carrying 17,000 open accounts or 10% of the prospective borrowers. This I think is due to the unjust prejudice that we are now having to combat, and we are undoubtedly losing considerable business that we should and would be handling if it were not for the misunderstanding of the business on the part of the public.

I am not unmindful that to put on an advertising program of any importance costs considerable money, but I firmly believe for every dollar expended in educational publicity, the industrial lenders will receive two in return in new business alone to say nothng of the immense good that will have been done in an educational way among those we could never hope to serve but whose good will is desirable and in a sense necessary. It is my opinion that with a little coöperation on the part of the lenders, this could be done in every city in Pennsylvania, where there are as many as three offices without the cost of an additional dollar to any of the offices, by using part of the money now being spent in classified advertising.

As an example, we have in Pittsburgh fourteen offices, which are using approximately $2,100 in classified space each month. Is this a wise investment? Are the results secured commensurate with the expenditure? I do not think so. What I would suggest is that all of the offices pool an agreed amount each month and run a display ad similar to what some of the other State Associations are doing and at the bottom of this ad give the names and addresses of the local members. We could then cut our ads in the classified section to take care of the additional cost of the display. In this way we would not only have the advantage of advertising to those who know about us, but in my opinion would sell the business to thousands of people who now know nothing about us or our service.

Inasmuch as Pittsburgh is the only Pennsylvania city in which I have worked in the loan business it has been necessary for me to refer entirely to that locality, however, from attending the meetings and hearing the discussions as well as talking to the managers from the other sections, forces me to believe that conditions are practically the same throughout the state as they are in Pittsburgh. This leads me to say to you; that the greatest need of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association is Educational Publicity.

And now in conclusion may I not quote that old axiom, "We cannot hate those we understand." This is as true to-day as when it was first spoken, and also as true collectively as it is individually, therefore I hope that the Pennsylvania Association, will take some steps to the end that we as a business will not continue to be misunderstood and misrepresented. The truth is, if we seriously think the subject through and analyze the future we will realize that we cannot do less than devise some means whereby the industrial loan business can be placed at the bar of public opinion in its true light. It is then and only then that we can hope to render the real service we are capable of rendering, or will have reached our highest point of efficiency in the loan business.

DUTY

By C. Gillen

It is an honor greatly appreciated to be asked to contribute something worthy of consideration to a convention of this calibre.

Shakespeare said, "And first of all to thine own self be true, then it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not be false to any man." Selfish as these words may seem, they radiate justice, equality, loyalty, service and duty, the last of which is our consideration.

Duty being the cornerstone on which the home, society and business is built, is a very essential part of a manager of a loan office's life.

The manager of a loan office is eternally confronted with that word "duty." He owes it to himself, to his investors, to his employees, to the borrower, to the payor, to everyone.

A man's duty to himself is always with him. His performance or non-performance of that duty is best known to his own conscience.

The duty we owe to an investor is serious. It is one to which many long and useful hours could be devoted. Every dollar that is loaned represents the hard earnings, the thriftiness, of someone. All of us are anxious to reach the pinnacle of success. In viewing the field of loans, we see it studded with eminently successful men. I feel certain that their success is largely due to the confidence which their supporters gave them in the beginning. This confidence could not have been betrayed, otherwise their success would be very short lived. To defraud the laborer of his hire, is, in my estimation, parallel to homicide. While not properly protecting the funds given you in good faith, is not depriving the laborer of his hire, is it not parallel with it; as it is impossible for us to ever know what pains and toil and long weary hours, days, and years were spent in accumulating the thousands or the hundreds of dollars, which it is our privilege to loan. It is my sincere belief that this part of a manager's duty is worthy of long and frequent meditation.

His duty to train assistants, to render quick, accurate, and above all, just service to the patrons of his office is paramount.

His duty to the borrower includes all other duties heretofore mentioned, and then innumerable others. The borrower justifies mine, yours, our existence. If we were to cast aside the three and one-half per cent per, and view our business as its founder must have done, its whole aspect would be philanthropic. If our business is not based on service to the needy, then on what is it based? Hence a manager's first duty is to the borrower. When an honest person applies for a loan and substantiates his or her application with reasons for that loan, then it is the manager's duty to find a means of making the loan. Loans are as different as the people who apply for them. Ambition compels a man to make all the loans that he can. His duty is thereby discharged to the borrower, but his duty as a manager only begins.

His duty to the payor is now predominant. For the protection of everyone and especially for the protection of the borrower, a manager's duty is to insist that all payments are to be made according to schedule. What greater injustice could a man do, or in what way could he be more oblivious to his duty than to allow a payor to become delinquent or to pay only the interest. As we have seen, persons borrowing money do so with a reason. The reasons for borrowing money are almost as numerous as the people who borrow. The inception of the loan business, was to provide funds for people in immediate need of money. How can we tell at what moment an occasion will present itself when the same people will need more money. If we allow delinquency, how can these people make further loans? Regardless of security or how sure we are of eventually getting our money, we should at all times insist upon regular payments. A manager defaulting in this duty is not only unfriendly to the patrons of his office and unsafe for the investors, but he is also a menace to the business of loaning money. Our troubles, our difficulties and the apparent ruthlessness of loan offices are entirely due, first of all to the delinquent accounts, and secondly to a public not educated in our business. While we are not primarily engaged in educational work, we can, by discharging our duty, educate the public to the justice, the usefulness, and the indispensibility of loan offices. The manager of a loan office can do more for or against the business than all the newspaper writing and conventions put together.

If we are universally insistent on loans being repaid in amounts and at times agreed upon at the time of making the loan, we are encouraging thrift among our patrons. Again I repeat the evil effects that delinquent loans must eventually have on our business. You can readily see when a delinquent customer looks over his receipt card and there sees the apparently exorbitant interest that he or she has paid for a loan, the attitude of that customer. You know well, that that customer will be a detriment, not only to the office at which the loan was made, but to all offices regardless of where situated. This customer is justified in being resentful towards loan offices and only for one reason, and that reason is that someone failed to discharge their duty towards the customer, the company, and the business.

Having served your country—mine by adoption—for twenty-two months, eighteen of which were spent in France, I am fully acquainted with the ninety-six articles of war. It is my belief if some of these were adopted in the formation and running of our lives and business, that we would have attained a much higher plane than that on which we now are.

While duty is very essential in all of our lives, and while absence of duty will wreck any individual, any home, or any institution, nevertheless, we should assume our duties with a spirit of cheerfulness and not with fear. Our greatest results will accrue from work done cheerfully, yet not frivolously.

Within ourselves must begin the revolutions and the reactions to affect any changes in our lives. Let us stimulate ourselves to the discharge of all our duties.

"He profits most who serves best," is an adage that has served many to a good need. The employee who is solicitious about the affairs of the office is always sure of a position, advancement, and of appreciation. This is merely an inducement that you may discharge your duties faithfully and cheerfully.

Service and duty are in this case synonymous terms. That we were all born to serve challenges, successful contradiction, therefore let us serve the cause of justice by discharging whatever may be our duty to all with whom we come in contact.

BREEDING GOOD-WILL

By Richard McHugh

Sometimes the power of suggestion brings about better results than the plain spoken truth, therefore I shall start by telling you a story of a gentleman who was carrying a very expensive silk umbrella, when he encountered a friend who said, "Hello, 'Jim.' Where did you get that beautiful umbrella? Did you steal it?"

"Jim" was stumped for a moment, scratched his head and said doubtfully, "Well, I'm not quite sure, but I'll tell you how it happened. Yesterday morning when that sudden downpour took place I was going up Broad Street on a rather important appointment and as the rain came down I didn't want to get drenched, I stood inside of a cigar store, thinking I'd wait until some friend came along with an umbrella going my way. Just then a young man came along and I called to him: Say: Young man! Where are you going with that umbrella? He dropped the umbrella and ran. I picked it up and now the question is, did I steal it?"

We all do a lot of things that may deserve criticism or arouse suspicion until all things are fully explained. Sometimes we are right and sometimes others are wrong. My point is to try and clear the atmosphere and avoid so much suspicion or unfair criticism.

I have selected for my subject, "Breeding Good-Will" for "Good-Will" is the most important factor in any business or profession and means more to this Association than we probably think. It is our biggest and best asset. It never goes out of style and never changes its face value.

By the use of the word, "Breeding," I mean more than just inspiring—I mean actually creating "Good-Will"—creating "Good-Will" among our own members and "Breeding Good-Will" in the mind of the public.

"Breeding Good-Will" means more than simply promoting the interests of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association. "Breeding Good-Will" is nothing more or less than building good business. It is just as practical to say this, as it is to say, that enough ill-will, will destroy any business or profession.

"Breeding Good-Will" contemplates the tremendous power of well directed coöperation among members of our Association—plus public sentiment.

In one of Æsop's Fables, we find a trite illustration that I shall frame and quote in my own language: Flying low, an eagle felt the sting of an arrow and as the bird fluttered to earth it looked at the fatal arrow and found that the arrow had been feathered with one of its own plumes. "Alas!" cried the dying eagle, "We often give our enemies the means for our own destruction."

And how well this fable points out our own position. In the past, our enemies were given the deadly arrow, or at least, they feathered the arrow with one of our own plumes.

Not so to-day, for we are all trying very hard to live down past mistakes. Each and every member of this Association is committed to a Code of Ethics and this Code of Right Business Principles, Plans and Purposes, deserves the respect and confidence of the public.

Our objective as an Association is to advise the public as to the service that we can render—to make the public understand that we want to obey and will obey the uniform loan laws—that in our advertisements or letters we shall always be found faithful to the truth—that we shall always be found ready and willing to comply with State and National Laws—that we shall always regard our Service as an important and necessary factor in the economic life of the country—that we shall always show the spirit of fraternity and helpfulness as expressed by James Whitcomb Riley:

"When a man ain't got a cent, and he's feeling kind o' blue,
An' the clouds hang dark an' heavy, an' won't let the sunshine through,
It's a great thing, O, my brethren, for a feller just to lay
His hand upon your shoulder in a friendly sort o' way!

"It makes a man feel curious, it makes the teardrops start,
An' you sort o' feel a flutter in the region of the heart:
You can look up and meet his eyes; you don't know what to say
When his hand is on your shoulder in a friendly sort o' way.

"Oh, the world's a curious compound, with its honey and its gall,
With its cares and bitter crosses, but a good world after all.
An' a good God must have made it—leastways, that is what I say,
When a hand is on my shoulder in a friendly sort o' way."

But bigger and better that any written rules, regulations or Code of Ethics, is our willingness, each and every one of us to give an individual example of how to treat others as we would have others treat us and this is "Breeding Good-Will."

The thoughtless may say that "Breeding Good-Will" is a beautiful theory and that it will not work out in regular, everyday practice. Surely, no sane man can expect to build a business permanently on the plan of creating ill-will.

But before we consider the ethical side of this subject, suppose we weigh carefully the commercial meaning of the two little, but big words, "Good-Will."

From the highest authority, I find this statement: "The Good-Will of a business is property as much the subject of valuation and transfer as any tangible chattel. It is an asset of a business, and may be taken into account in deciding whether a business establishment is solvent or insolvent.

"The United States Circuit Court of Appeals has decided that the Good-Will of a corporation organized under the laws of another State, but having its place of business in Philadelphia, is taxable in Philadelphia as property employed there by the corporation."

"Upon the dissolution of a partnership, as in case of death of a partner, Good-Will must be converted into cash and its proceeds distributed, precisely as though it were tangible property so it must be understood that Good-Will is a subject of valuation and transfer just as much as any tangible chattel."

"Good-Will" includes every advantage or benefit of business standing, personal or common reputation and without doubt is of more importance than mere merchandise, for be it remembered that enemies do not patronize us unless they have to.

"Good-Will" as it relates to the social side of life is the faculty of the mind by which one chooses or determines the many honorable and friendly things we should do. Ill-will is, of course, the contrary complex and brings back the natural consequences.

The tendency of most men, is to be honorable, but we must all remember that when a customer's confidence or friendship has been mistreated, there is sure to spring forth a form of resentment and you know, resentment strikes back.

I can conceive of no greater human handicap than that of being compelled to carry a load of ill-will or resentment toward others, neither is it possible to place a bigger stumbling block in the way of business than to have the ill-will of others always ahead of us.

To personally harbor ill-will, makes a man malicious and malice is a venom that chills and curdles the warm current of life in man.

To have others despise us, sets up a defense that keeps us busy fighting fire. Therefore, one of our big problems is to "Breed Good-Will."

The man who gets the most good out of life and the man who gives the most good to the lives of others, is the man who has "Good-Will" in his heart.

Creating "Good-Will" and then holding it, is a very vital part to play in any position in life. It pays in so many ways.

Permanent prosperity cannot come, lasting success will not come on the mere plan of cold competition. There must be "Good-Will" in any deal else there is sure to be some ill-will, and enough resentment will sink the most successful individuality, industry or organization.

A business that fails to hold the "Good-Will" of its customers may go along, but it will never go as long as the business that is conducted on the lines of fellowship and service.

Some men feel, that they can get along without the "Good-Will" of a few people, but these "few people" have a faculty of going about gathering up their friends and telling these friends why certain people do not deserve their confidence and respect, and we all know that it requires much courage and a great deal of capital to compete with these kind of tongue-advertisers.

The very nature of our business, lends us a wonderful opportunity to treat others as we would have others treat us, if the tables were turned. You may say what you like, but the basic foundation of all business is The Golden Rule.

It is a compliment to a man's character, a tribute to his common sense for him to try and "Breed Good-Will" for the sake of his own business, but how much bigger and broader the idea is, when we help to "Breed Good-Will" for all concerned.

We are here to-day for the express purpose of observing faithfully and well our Declaration of Principles as adopted in Convention at Atlantic City in September 1916 as well as our Code of Ethics adopted at Baltimore in September 1924 and these "Principles" would do honor to any class of business men in this country.

Mind you, I am speaking of "principles" and not of motives. Principles are the ideas we form of things, so as to regulate our conduct. Motives are the things that impel us to action.

A man with right principles will always have right motives and a man with good motives will attract plenty of patronage though his place of business be on a side street. "Good-Will" is the answer to good business. It is the respect we earn and the confidence we command. It will bring a customer several blocks out of his or her way to trade with us. It works on rainy days and on dull days.

A deep-down desire to do the right thing by all, all of the time, is the sensible and only successful way of "Breeding Good-Will." Any other plan will prove Lincoln was right.

"Good-Will" is the direct descendent of being fair and square always and those who help to "breed" it have a self interest, not just a selfish interest. "Good-Will" only comes to those who deserve it and as long as they deserve it, it will remain and no longer. It is the indispensible indestructible interest in industry.

Let us continue to "breed Good-Will" and thereby deserve the confidence and respect of the public and more business will come just as sure as the sun shines on a clear day.

PROTECTING THE BORROWER

The main points in this most valuable contribution to the insufficient literature on an important subject are: data on usury laws, arranged to offer maximum service to the student; the logical presentation of historical matter; the completeness and scientific order of the informative material; a well-arranged summary chapter at the end; and a fine index. This book is probably the most important recent contribution to the discussion of usury and related problems. Its facts add to our materials and its conclusions are stimulating.

The book probably was not intended to serve as a signpost, showing the way to the end of a definite road; it leaves questions and doubts in the mind of the reader; it contains suppositions of fact that seem less certain the more they are examined. The book, possibly without that purpose directly in mind, indicates clearly that the problem of usury is undergoing an evolutionary treatment and that the world "solution" cannot yet at any rate be applied to it. For example Mr. Ryan points out very clearly and accurately the difference between "usury" (a) that consists simply of the violation of a usury law so-called and (b) "moral usury" practised on the "necessitous" borrower, seeking a "consumptive" (as distinguished from a "productive") loan of relatively small amount. He assumes that if we can eliminate this latter type of "moral usury," all usury laws, so-called except as they may be incidental to this elimination, may be repealed. He bases this conclusion on the assumption that the interplay of economic forces is sufficient to eliminate anything which might fairly be classified as usury—except in the case of the small, necessitous borrower. So much depends on the accuracy of this suppostion that it is to be regretted the supporting data is not more impressive.

In an evolutionary way the author is doubtless right in his conclusion as to the great value of the uniform small loans law, so-called; it is a very long step in the right direction. The development of coöperative credit in both Europe and the United States and the potential value of this development, now in its infancy in this country, do not seem to be given here the consideration they deserve in any discussion of usury. As an informative book this volume has great value; and one need not agree with all its conclusions in order to welcome it.

MARYLAND

The Maryland Industrial Lenders Association held a short but warm meeting in the Board Room of the Baltimors Association of Commerce, Tuesday November the 10th, at 2:30 P. M.

Dr. C. G. Mueller and A. L. Wick gave a splendid educative talk on the value of Exchange Bureaus and why lenders should be ever careful in the conduct of their business. We feel grateful to you Doctor and Mr. Wick, especially so because several new members were listening in.

The Secretary was instructed to advise all members for the forty-first time that dues, assessments, or payments of any kind for Association work should be paid through his office first. Now boys please don't forget that.

It was our pleasure to elect to membership three valuable and live wire members. The Personal Loan Society, 331 Equitable Building, with Mr. Garren speaking its thought, will well be represented in the future. The American Loan Company, 201 Park Ave., will have Mr. Moore, ever watchful and ready to give the benefit of his long experience. The Bonded Finance Company, 941 Equitable Building gives to the Association an able and active member, Mr. Rosenfield who has had long experience and is a thorough advocate of coöperation.

We welcome the above three members with a welcome that comes from way down deep in the heart and hope that all Industrial Lenders of this state will soon say that we are Members of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association.

The business meeting adjourned at 4:30 P. M. in order.

At 7 P. M., the Association gathered at the Southern Hotel, where a good dinner, good speaking and good dancing were enjoyed by all.

C. Howard Hood our Chairman and veteran of the World War in his usual good natured and brilliant way introduced the first speaker of the evening the Honorable Ex-Mayor William F. Broening, and any Lender in Maryland or any other State, who failed to hear his Honor tell of the money lending business in years long past, and how it had progressed down to the present time, missed a splendid talk from one who the good citizens of Baltimore love and who has given years of his life to public service.

The second speaker of the evening Mr. Barrett, representing the Bank Commissioners office paid the Association Members a high compliment when he said, "Within the last three years there have been no irregularities at all. We had some complaints come to the office about some of the Companies that are operating but I might say that no complaints at all have ever been received against any member of the Association.

Mr. Hood introduced as the third speaker of the evening a great duck shooter and marksman of some ability. Our good friend V. W. B. Hedgepeth of Baltimore known to many Boy Scouts of America as Big Chief Lightening, was many years ago hunting ducks in Louisiana, after waiting paitently for long hours to get a shot, he saw two ducks coming down in front of him, flying about one hundred yards apart, he took long, deliberate, and straight aim at the first one and fired away. The duck aimed at kept on its happy way but the other which was one hundred yards away was killed instantly. We are fortunate enough to have Mr. Hedgepeth's address in full and will ask our good National Secretary to place it in the Lenders News.

After the speaking we saw gliding around the beautiful dance floor; Dr. Mueller, S. J. Masters, the Honorable Wm. F. Broening and Wife, Miss Broening, Mr. Barret, Mr. and Mrs. Meitzell, Miss Wittman of the Bank Commissioners Office. Mr. and Mrs. David C. Bruce, Miss Dixon and Escort, Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson, Mr. Andrew S. Hamilton, Mr. Wick, Mr. Moore, Miss Thelma E. Fugua and Mr. Harp, from Hagerstown, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Gardner and many, many others who were saying under their breath.

"Backward turn backward Oh! Time in thy flight and make us young again just for tonight."

Howard T. Mattingly, Secretary.

EDUCATIONAL PUBLICITY AND ITS NEED

By G. M. Crouse, Jr.

Notwithstanding the work carried on by our Association in its efforts to enlighten the minds of men and women on present day conditions in lending sums up to $300 by Industrial Lenders, it is obvious that but little has been accomplished in this direction. Thousands of lines of newspaper publicity has appeared in the newspapers of this State during the past several years. Our Publicity Chairmen have worked diligently, giving unstintingly of their time in an attempt to make it known generally that there does exist in our great commonwealth, adequate means for advancing small sums of money to the wage-earners and the small business man at a rate of interest that is fair to the borrower and lender. The absence of well defined results indicates there is much to be done yet.

When it is generally known by employers of labor, lawmakers, our courts and ministers, that the Industrial Lenders make loans in small sums up to $300 to the great mass of people whose need for financial assistance is stern and real, at a rate of interest which years of investigation by non-financially interested people have shown is keyed to the risk involved. The uninformed will come to the realization that their knocks are not justified by the facts, and on the other hand, they will welcome in their communities, the licensed lender furnishing a loan service to the masses possessing no banking credit.

How can the good intentioned but uninformed men and women be made acquainted with the facts?

(1st) Unless and until each Industrial Lender and all assistants in all offices conduct themselves and discharge their duties in a straightforward and intelligent manner, with the knowledge that a skeptical public is continually viewing their every action, the much desired enlightenment of the uninformed will be delayed, if indeed not made impossible.

(2d) Observation prompts the statement that the Industrial Lender advances money in many instances where it is not actually needed. Frequently intelligent advice on managing one's personal affairs would be of great assistance to the applicant, whereas a loan would be harmful.

(3d) The granting of loans in amounts too large and out of proportion to the borrowers income is harmful, and when this is the case, it is always damaging to the borrower and the business even if the loan is finally collected.

(4th) Making more than one loan to a borrower experience has shown, is bad business for the lender, and doubly so for the borrower, for frequently it is found that the borrower is unable to pay more that one loan promptly, resulting in the interest accumulating. When such instances are brought to the attention of employers of labor, lawyers, our courts and other leaders in our communities, it is seen that the Industrial Lender himself is wholly responsible for an aggravated condition that can be controlled by a one-loan Industrial Lender operated Exchange Bureau. In the great majority of cases, avariciousness and greed the forerunners of disaster, are responsible for lending borrowers amounts too large and out of proportion to their incomes.

The one-loan Exchange Bureau can and does eliminate much of this evil. Where there is more than one Industrial Lender in a community, there is need for the Exchange Bureau. In a great many cities in our States, they are functioning now and it is earnestly hoped that 100% membership one-loan Exchange Bureau will be operated efficiently before we meet here a year hence.

(5th) The newspaper publicity the Industrial Loan Business has received during the past several years, has been good. It has fallen short of having the desired result, not because of the copy that has appeared from time to time, but is attributed to spasmodic publication of all educational matter.

(6th) The absence of any well defined organized plan to cover the entire State should be acted on favorably. The Chairman of the Publicity Committee if he is a man as heretofore has been the case, who has practically all of his time taken up with his personal business, should make a connection with a news agency and provided with ample funds so that this important work will receive so gr an impetus that the uninformed will realize that the Industrial Lender fills an important gap in the financial plans o our State.

(7th) In so far as is known, no well organized plan has been developed to enlighten the uninformed, other than through the newspapers. There are other ways and means open to us for conducting an educational campaign and if used, much good should result. There are the publications put out by Chambers of Commerce, the circulation of which we believe is among the representative business people of the State. Much good apparently could be done in running educational matter in these.

(8th) The American Industrial Lenders Association has published many educational pamphlets but their distribution has been limited, and so far as is known, no well organized plan has been effected by our Association to get them into the hands of our representative business people, our law-makers, our courts and clergy. It seems that this means of enlightening the uninformed if adopted would result in much good being done.

(9th) If a percentage of the dues paid to our organization by its membership were set aside for educational publicity and expended wisely, it is thought much good would be done. Twenty-five per cent of the total income of our Association would provide but a small sum for this important work, and if spent judiciously, the benefits derived therefrom if carried on regularly, should be most helpful in shedding the true light on the Industrial Loan Business.

ADDRESS DELIVERED BY V. W. B. HEDGEPETH

Tuesday, November 12, 1925, Southern Hotel, Maryland Industrial Lenders Banquet

Contrary to the statement of your Chairman, I AM in the loan business I have made a loan. I made our FIRST loan. I was ALL alone, filled with pride that at last I way a money lender.

A good looking young fellow with one of those little bristly "oh you quit that" mustaches, came in seeking a loan.

He had a good front, a good story, and for nine years a good job on one of our railroads. He filled out a good questionnaire. He was making progress, I was weakening.

I explained that the rules required a twenty-four hour armistice, that both sides might look over the wounded. He looked sad. He suggested that he did so need five dollars because he hated to stay all day in Washington without food and maybe all night in the baggage car.

I wept. I personally loaned him the five. He came back the next day during my absence and got twenty-five more, temporarily forgetting to leave me my five. That was September 12th.

Do you know I have not seen him since? I can't imagine what's the matter. He was such an honest looking boy.

Our president, Mr. Gardner, is a very positive spoken man. What he said about my judgment kept me away from the office for two weeks and set fire to the office twice in one day!

I began to see a great light. One must be fierce and firm.

My next experience was with a dilapidated looking colored applicant. I began to scowl, and put on my best money lending face.

He pleaded, "Boss I'se just got to have $10.00. My wife is sick and I have to have dat $10.00." I grew stronger. "No!" I said firmly. "Boss, I gives you all the security in de world, but I do want that money quick!" he pleaded. "No!" I said, a little louder this time. "Oh please Mr. Boss, won't you give me that money, my pore wife is sick in bed and I needs that money for a doctor. My wife's in terrible shape."

By that time I was in my best fighting mood. I yelled at him "NO!" "Go home and hit your wife in the head with an axe and work your security off on some one else!"

I learned the next day that he had gone over to the Master Loan Service and borrowed the $50.00, putting up about $7,000.00 worth of furniture including a grand piano or two. From the way the man acted when he went out I am afraid he doesn't like me any more and maybe we have lost a customer.

If Mr. Gardner ever talks to me again the way he did when he heard of this, there's going to be a mighty sudden widow in this man's town. He really seems to think I don't know much about the loan business.

While I have not seen my first and only personal borrower, since September 12th, our Mr. Richardson did make a lengthy report last week setting out in detail the number of miles he had chased him, all over the railroad yards, through box cars, over his back fence, down cobblestone streets, etc., and enclosing a bill for $9.00 for one pair of shoes, and $5.16 cash which he had collected from the fellow's brother-in-laws.

I like the loan business— but I think I'll go and learn to be a barber or something, and let Mr. Gardner make the loans,—Maybe I'll become a historian.

The business of Industrial Money Lending is the oldest business in the world. This is easily shown, from the nature of the business.

Some claim that the oldest human desire—is the desire to borrow. Others are equally certain that the impulse to lend antedates the desire to borrow.

I am inclined to take both sides of the question on the theory than any offer to lend is predicated on the assumption by the lender that he has something to lend which the borrower wishes to borrow.

(That ought to be good politics, Mr. Mayor.)

Well, anyhow and either way, we now know that the earliest recorded transaction resulting from an inner impulse, took place in the garden of Eden when Adam borrowed an apple promising Eve three and one-half fig leaves and the return of the apple on Christmas.

I can see now what happened to my borrower. Human nature does not change and Adam acted just like my brakeman. Adam claimed he had fallen into the hands of a loan shark. He said he really never wanted that apple. The woman coaxed it on him. And what with the apple and the fig leaves he never had a chance anyhow.

He then ran out into the brush and tried to repudiate the whole transaction.

It took an angel with a flaming sword to find him and to chase him out of the garden. Just as he put him out he said. "Now Adam, that little transaction will cost you just three and one-half per cent per month forever."

When I reflect that it took an angel and a flaming sword to bring the first borrower up to the captain's office I think maybe I didn't do so badly after all with mine.

Well, in Adam's time, that's when all the trouble started. That's when interest tables were invented—and the department store—the installment plan—the dollar down and dollar when you ketch 'em—and every "come on in" plan known.

Yes, human nature is ever the same. Every man's name still is Adam. Every woman's name is Eve. The fig leaf and the apple are gone, but the bobbed head, the lip stick and the twinkling knees are here, and man is ever paying interest on the offerings of some woman lender or dodging the flaming sword in some other woman's eye.

Human nature, Tennyson's brook and the three and one-half per cent are with us forever.

* * * * * * * * *

If the Toastmaster really meant that I could say what I pleased, I would like to call my remarks, a comment on the new Pilgrim's Progress, covering more than two years personal study in many cities.

"Oh wad some power the giftie gie us,
To see oursel's as others see us!"

Well, I can tell you that in the course of my travels, I found how some people see us—

One banker—"You simply can't trust the class of people who seek such loans." "Did you know that the one hundred and one companies in New Jersey last year loaned $7,148,830 to 47,933 people—That 38,345 of them paid back six and a quarter millions during the same year and that only 300 representing $26,871 were charged off as lost accounts?" No he didn't know that.

That to me answers the question—Can the plain people be trusted! Have they the right to credit?

Another Banker—"Your rates are exhorbitant. The loan companies should be run out of the State. Forty-two per cent a year gross, is little less than theft." —"Did you know that thirty-one National Banks operating in Philadelphia during 1923 earned 31.65% on their combined capital and one of them showed 76.53%." No, he didn't know that. But he did. He also knew that a finance company in which he was interested, charged a prominent man $5,000.00 for a four months loan of $10,000.00.

Still another—"It is unsafe because the legislature will annul these laws."

"Did you know that one-half our States have adopted the Uniform Small Loan Law—that no State having adopted it has rescinded it—and that the business of industrial banking has made more progress in the last fifteen years through scientific study than old line banking made in five hundred years." No, he didn't know it.

Still another—"The business is all right I guess, only it is over done—There are too many loan companies etc.—"

"Do you know there are more banks in Maryland than there are loan companies, that you serve only ten per cent of the people in their ordinary business needs, while the loan companies serve the ninety per cent in their extraordinary personal ones?" No he didn't know.

I found the same arrogance stalking in the footsteps of power, opposition, the same ignorance, the same attitude, the same reception from the legal profession from the giants of the Bar, clear down to the weeniest infant tottering forth from the law school with his diploma under his arm and already humped with care.

I found merchants selling $12.00 suits for $30.00, and $.40 socks for a dollar and a half, and the next minute berating the three and one-half per cent man. Ye Gods and fishes!

* * * * * * * * *

But I found notable exceptions—students of our ever changing and complex civilization—

Great men in the law, patriots in banking, merchants who consider service above profit. From these men I gleaned something of the part industrial banking or lending is playing in the progress of the world. That France, Italy, Germany Russia, Switzerland, Japan, (that most amazing of all the infant nations) and half the civilized countries of the world have friendly laws, and many of them are dotted over with government owned industrial small loan banks. That the astonishing recovery of these nations from the cataclysm of the World War is due in great degrees to their fostering laws, and their understanding of the needs of the plain people.

* * * * * * * * *

My thought about all this is that there is work for our Association. We must educate, we must explain, we must extend our service, we must strengthen ourselves, and we must understandingly defend our position and our claims to recognition as a great moving, necessary force in progress.

The Commercial Banker, the student the lawyer, the merchant, the capitalist, the dreamer, the doer, the creator and the builider, the producer, the worker, all should join with us in the solution of this common problem of us all—How best to promote the genius of civilization and the happiness and the comfort of the world.

* * * * * * * * *

What are the tools and with what methods shall we seek out this solution?

The day of the individual is passing. This is the age of groups, acting as individuals. Corporations are only groups of men inspired by some ruling impulse and pursuing their business under the regulation of laws made and provided.

It is a long way in human conception from the selfish motives of the money lenders of Venice and the goldsmiths of England to the tremendous service of the modern banking idea.

Why not apply corporation principles to the further development of the great place the modern industrial money lending groups have already assumed in this national problem?

These principles are:

(1) Group thought and massed capital.

(2) Vastly increased power for production.

(3) Unusual Benefit.

(4) Perpetuity through regulation by exacting laws.

(5) Opportunity for fair division of profits between executives and workers, without destruction or diminuation of capital. (For short this may be called profit sharing.)

A little thought will convince you that within its limits to function, strategetically and by nature the industrial bank is in position to become the highest exponent of the modern corporation idea that has yet appeared anywhere.

Remembering that every commercial enterprise, every political plea for power, every religious or economic movement and everything that finds its vital coefficient in the thing called "money," must go back to the mass of the people for its very life—let us examine the position of the incorporated industrial bank from the standpoint of the people whom it claims to serve.

(1) Group thought, and massed capital limited only by the power of the officers to command capital and the relative needs of the community.

(2) Increased power for production. The product of the industrial bank is added comfort, more relief from temporary demands, greater opportunity, more power—in short it is human happiness.

(3) Universal benefits—Every living human being who has the respect of himself and the reasonable expectation of being able to repay what he has borrowed and to return a reasonable charge for the service received has the industrial lender at his command.

(4) An opportunity, not to join a group of men who are trying to create a money profit through commercial success, but an identification with a group of men who deal in money only, and who are not dependent on hope for success, but whose success is insured and whose corporate acts are governed by known and most exacting laws.

(5) Any true conception of the general banking principle involves the thought of not only providing a place to get money, but also a place to put money. Commonly called "loans and deposits," for convenience or savings.

Why do people save? The main answer, is, that they may some time accumulate enough capital for a later profitable investment. This too often means long years of economy, self-denial, spiritual and social starvation, and ultimate loss through the final transaction where the savings of years are turned over to some hope inspired, or greed impelled, or weakly equipped group of men, and lost in the vast seas of human disappointment.

I now wish to point out that the industrial bank goes beyond the simple savings idea, and through the fast growing profit sharing principle—furnishes the investment itself.

As safe as laws and custom can make it. Available to every man, woman or child who can lay by a dollar at a time against the day of old age and reduced earning power, answering every reasonable hope of the sincere man who by every equitable rule is entitled to a share of happiness on his way through this too often thankless world.

Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the association, in a way this is my thought of the functions and the destiny of the industrial banking idea.

This is my idea of the plane of this great service:

John Oxenham once made a bid for immortality and I think he achieved it when he wrote the lines:

"To every man there openeth
  A way, and ways and a way,
The high soul climbs the high road
  And the low soul gropes the low.
While in the misty flats that lie between
  The rest drift to and fro.

To every man there openeth a
  Highway and a low
But every man decideth the way
  His soul shall go."

I thank you!

The Fifth Annual Managers' Convention Was Held at Martinsville, Thursday, November 5, 1925

The meeting was called to order by the 2d Vice-President, F. L. Thompson.

The roll call of members showed 56 members present and 6 visitors, including the state supervisor, Elmer Johnson.

The report of the membership committee, H. H. Burrell, chairman, was made and it was surely impressed on the members of the Association that it was their duty at all times to answer correspondence of the various Chairman of Committees promptly and give full information in their possession, always remembering that a Chairman cannot serve them to the fullest degree of efficiency unless their entire coöperation is given. It was a point very timely made and from the impression gained in the various talks, it was not the intention of the members to be indifferent, but merely neglectful.

A bill was presented, amounting to $52.40, and payment authorized; eight new members elected, a series of three letters to 100 licensees was reported. By the coöperation of each member, the Association will reach 125 by February 1st. A vote of thanks was given Mr. Burrell for his very fine work.

REPORT OF PUBLICITY CHAIRMAN, BENJ. BLUMBERG

The report is herewith printed and the remarks from the general membership would indicate each member was sold on this subject. Mr. Blumberg suggested a telegram be sent by each member to his city that afternoon, which was prepared by Mr. Blumberg; the success of this new feature cannot be estimated at this time. The report was accepted with a vote of thanks.

I herewith submit report of my activities as Chairman of Publicity Committee of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association since I assumed responsibility on June 1, 1925.

   94 lines in the News Sentinel, Fort Wayne, Thursday, July 9th.

2. August 7th, sent out article by Woods entitled "Why Not a Little Budget in Your Home," with the following results:
   74 lines in the Peru Tribune, Friday, August 7, 1925.

3. August 13th, sent out article by Mr. Woods entitled "Prevent Exploitation of Service Men." Results:
   73 lines in Brazil Daily Times, Saturday, August 22, 1925.
   66 lines front page Daily Free Press, Connersville, Thursday, August 27th.
   9 lines in the Terre Haute Tribune, August 18th.

4. Mr. Broughman of Marion, reports result of annual banquet at Marion with 76 lines in the Marion Leader Tribune, Friday, October 23d.

This is a total publicity of 402 lines up to the present date.

GENERAL COMMENT

I wish to give special credit to those who were successful in getting these articles published, namely, Joseph Baum of Fort Wayne, E. W. Bauer, Manager, Legal Loan Company, Peru, G. W. Leapley, Manager, Legal Loan Company, Connersville, and Roy Latta, Manager, Brazil Loan Company, Brazil.

These men are deserving of special credit for two reasons:

1. Most of the other forty-five lenders in the state who received letters from me, did not so much as pay me the courtesy of an answer.

2. While several did write to tell how impossible it was for them to handle their editors.

NOTE: We can learn very little from the unsuccessful, but I present herewith an exhibit of the articles that appeared, as the best answer to those who are discouraged. It will pay to keep after your newspaper and some day we will find the article that will suit the taste of each particular editor.

RECOMMENDATIONS

I herewith recommend to our Lenders that the best way to get publicity is to do things worthy of public attention in the way of public meetings and association meetings.

This committee is in possession of two particular addresses written for luncheon clubs which will be furnished any member called upon to make a speech.

We herewith extend our thanks to those who have given us their coöperation and express our confidence that the activities of this committee will show better results during the next six months.

As a special recognition for results achieved, I herewith appoint my associates on this committee, Joseph Baum of Fort Wayne and E. W. Bauer of Peru.

Respectfully submitted,
BENJ. BLUMBERG.

Mr. Stratton in talking about Publicity, said each member must first sell himself to the community and to the editor and recommended membership in the various luncheon clubs as a good medium to get better acquainted.

Mr. Hancock then gave a very comprehensive report of the American Industrial Lenders' Association Convention, held at Providence, and referred all members to the September issue of the LENDERS NEWS for a detailed report. However, Mr. Hancock added quite a few remarks and especially did he bring out the one point "That Each member received benefit in the Association in proportion to the amount of time and energy he put into it." Mr. Hancock especially thanked the Association for sending him as a delegate.

The first subject on the program was "Present Industrial Conditions and Their Effect on our Business," by J. D. Williams, Superintendent Community Finance Service. Mr. Williams was unable to attend because of a last minute situation and delegated Paul Huenkemeier, Manager of the Community Finance Company of Indianapolis, to read his paper.

PRESENT INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS AND THEIR EFFECT ON OUR BUSINESS

In gathering material for such a treatise, I have perused the business sections of daily newspapers, government reports and business magazines, After reading all this material, there is one fact in relation to the industrial condition of the country that stands out clearly and distinctly. That fact is, "Business is good, and getting better with every evidence of years of prosperity ahead."

What applies to business generally, naturally affects industry; what affects industry, naturally affects those folks who are referred to as the Industrial Classes—our customers.

Charles M. Schwab of steel renown, tells us that steel, the Nation's Business Barometer, never had a better outlook than it has today. Leaders in Electric and Radio Industries augmented optimistic predictions of excellent busines. Automobile production and sales are on the increase. Cotton production has gained 467,000 bales over expert estimation. Farm implement trade is very active—exports of these commodities in September being 117.4% more than a year ago. The country's trade condition as a whole is more active than last year. Production, sales, wages and employment are all increased according to a survey made by the National Association of Manufacturers.

In all this bouquet of business flowers, there seems to be but one prickly thorn—the Coal Strike in Pennsylvania. Even that isn't causing the anxiety it would have caused a year or so back. An amicable settlement of this condition seems assured.

Everywhere you look there is optimism. Industrial bankers should be optimistic too. for with the growth of industrial banking comes an increased need for our service, a need even greater than that in the time of financial emergency.

Never will there be a time where the great majority of our people will have all the money they need. No matter how prosperous our great country becomes, folks will borrow. However, with the outlook of steady employment and good all-around conditions, workers will look toward improvements of their standards of living. Loans will be made for the purpose of long-needed improvements to the homes, for business advancement or for educational purposes. These loans will be even more constructive than those made under ordinary circumstances. The borrower will make a profit either in actual money or bettered conditions. Borrowing to make a first payment on a property, to keep a child in high school or to send a boy to college, is sound common sense. Too, these loans are better credit risks by virtue of the financial condition of the borrower. They make for mighty good business.

Of course, the necessitous borrower should and will be cared for. Those folks, who, through sickness, death in the family or temporary loss of employment come to us for money to tide them over the emergency, are just as worthy and just welcome as any other. From a sentimental standpoint one might say that it is to those folks we do our greatest service. No doubt, that is true.

Regardless of the industrial conditions, however, we will find both kinds of borrowers.

Regarding the direct effect of industrial conditions on industrial lending, the situation in the Pennsylvania Coal Fields offers a concrete example. There, in cities where the bulk of the wage earners are employed in the mines, is a marked hesitancy on the part of the people to accept the obligation of borrowing. The uncertainty of employment has certainly retarded our business. However, this condition is temporary and the action of the good people there in hesitating to take on obligations when they are not positive of their future ability to make prompt payment is a good sound condition. Later when the mines resume operation and those folks have regained their earning power, it is to be expected that they will of their own volition call on us for financial aid to restore their credit standing, if it has suffered.

Industrial conditions do offect our business and should be closely watched and studied by Industrial Bankers. However, the need for borrowing on the part of the public and the opportunity to serve on the part of the lenders is present under any conditions.

The present industrial status of our country is encouraging and presents us with an excellent opportunity to make enormous strides towards the goal we have all set for ourselves. The word of the day is "FORWARD"—let's go!

T. M. Kaufman addressed the Convention on "How to Obtain New Business." He discussed very thoroughly and ably the advantages of newspaper advertising and the necessity of carrying an ad daily; house to house circulars, circular letters under a two-cent stamp and advised to tell them quickly and tell them often about your service. Courtesy in the office at all times, is one of the best mediums to build Good Will. Old customers are a very valuable asset as are also membership in civic clubs and your getting acquainted with grocers, coal, furniture and piano men.

The question was asked how one member built a large business with no advertising and this was answered by the Good Will established through years of service with another company and being permitted to take a list of old customers. Otherwise no money was spent in advertising but considerable time was expended in building up the Good Will, which after all, is nothing other than a different form of advertising.

The question was asked by a new member "Is it profitable to advertise when business is slow." Mr. Farrington said there was no slow period generally and advised continuous advertising. Mr. Arnott replied to advertise heavy when the demands for money were most prominent. Mr. Hynes, representing the Welfare Finance Company of Evansville, reported $5,000 business from 700 circular letters. Mr. Chenoweth a new member, reported satisfactory results from putting the tax rate of the various townships on a card and his ad on the reverse side.

Fred Davies then read a paper on "Why I Should Belong to Civic Clubs and the Chamber of Commerce."

WHY I SHOULD BELONG TO A CIVIC CLUB AND THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

I have been asked to give an expression of my views on why it is advantageous for a member of this association to identify himself with one or another of the civic clubs that may happen to flourish in his community, and likewise why it should benefit him to identify himself with the Chamber of Commerce. Perhaps this subject has been wished on me because I have been a member of the Kiwanis Club in my own home town since its inception—I am one of its charter members—and at the beginning of the present year, I was honored by being appointed club secretary.

Time was not so long ago when a member of this profession was referred to slightingly as a "Loan Shark." I am glad to say that we no longer hear this phrase applied to a business that has come to take rank with any and all of the legitimate callings, by adopting and adhering to a policy of square and honest dealing with our patrons. The business of money lending has taken a new dignity and as a profession, it is now regarded with respect by the other business and professional men in the cities where we have offices. This is as it should be, for the business of loaning money in small amounts fills a want in any community that is as essential among the class who comprise the majority of our patrons as is the business conducted by our banks and trust companies.

I have said that I am a charter member of the Kiwanis Club in my home town. I do not mean that I have merely been a member—a passive member. From the first I identified myself with all the club's activities, which are numerous and far reaching in Kokomo. I did not shirk from any obligation that was put upon me as a member, but earnestly and diligently did my share of work on committees and in various official capacities I have held in the club, often sacrificing time and money in so doing. What have I gained by it?

Before answering this question—an answer will at the same time be an answer to the question implied in the subject of this paper—it may be well to enlarge upon the aims and purpose of civic clubs, such as Rotary, Lions and Kiwanis. Most of you are members of one or another of these organizations. But to all of you, I trust, my experience as an active member of Kiwanis and my Chamber of Commerce will not be without some degree of interest and perhaps also not failing to carry an idea or two that may be of benefit to you.

The Kiwanis Club to which I belong has a membership of one hundred and twenty-five. A limit was fixed at that number because there is no place in Kokomo where a larger membership can meet conveniently for our regular weekly luncheons, which start at a quarter past the noon hour each Thursday and last until one thirty, an hour and a quarter that is well spent. When I add that there is usually a large waiting list of applications for membership on file, you may understand that membership in the Kokomo Kiwanis is considered desirable.

Now take a survey with me of the personnel of this membership, of the class of citizens composing it. Our mayor is a member. The head of our largest industry—one of the largest industries in the state of Indiana, by the way—is also a member, one who takes a keen delight in all the club activities. He also happens to be the president of our Chamber of Commerce, and a very energetic, aggressive president, too. Numbered among my fellow Kiwanians are the leading bankers of the city, the foremost ministers, lawyers, doctors, business and professional men whose standing is generally second to none in Kokomo. In short, the membership is made up of representative citizens. Now then by becoming a member of the Kiwanis Club and the Chamber of Commerce, and willingly and cheerfully assuming my share of whatever burden that might be occupying the time and attention of one or another of these bodies, it has been my privilege to sit in councils of these representative men of affairs. We have frequently worked on committees together; they have learned to seek my council and advice; they regard me as one of them and on an equal footing in a business way with themselves. This has given the loan business in my city a prestige that it did not enjoy previously. It has been elevated to a level that puts it upon an equality with any business.

The activities of the Kiwanis Club—in fact, of all civic clubs—are directed toward bettering some condition in the community; toward helping community institutions toward uplift and building and growth and development generally. For this reason a live civic club and Chamber of Commerce, have thousands of points of contact with every part and phase of the city's life. You become known to many under the most favorable condtiions, and I believe that I may honestly say that the consistent part I have taken in the activities of Kiwanis and my Chamber of Commerce has reacted to benefit my business immensely. So if a word of counsel from me is in order, by way of conclusion, I can think of nothing that would be of more value to such of you, who are not already active members of civic clubs or commercial body, than to urge you to identify yourselves with both. Do not merely become a member, but plunge into the activities of club and Chamber of Commerce. If you are put upon a committee to go out and raise money for the Y. M. C. A. or the Red Cross, pull off your coat, roll up your sleeves and get out and hustle to see if you can't get more pledges than the other fellows. It will be of priceless benefit to your business.

And last, but by no means least, the pleasure and enjoyment you get out of it, the good friends that you make, alone will amply repay you for the time and effort thus spent.

The Convention adjourned for luncheon which was served to 65 members and guests. Allen Moore, president Greater Martinsville Association, extended a very hearty welcome to the convention. Response was made by our own Mr. Stratton. A. G. Rose, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, was toastmaster.

The afternoon session was called to order at 2:30.

The report of the Uniform Paper Committee, F. L. Thompson, chairman, was made. Mr. Thompson offered his note book as evidence that this committee is working hard and hopes by the first of January to show some tangible results. He advised that three meetings had been held and another meeting would be held Wednesday, November 11th.

J. W. Eastep, of South Bend, was unable to attend and forwarded his paper to the secretary. It read as follows:

The Results When Appraisers Fail to Properly Investigate the Title to Security

Our secretary has asked me to prepare a paper for this meeting on the above subject. I wondered why he assigned this particular task to me. I advised him I would be unable to write this on account of being too busy. This, of course, was not only an excuse, but I really thought I would be unable to properly handle the subject. However, he insisted on at least a paper, which has been prepared.

In checking up the application in our office, the conclusion was made that our secretary must have had a line on us and assigned this subject as a "Hunch" to be more careful in the future, before OK'ing loans and passing on ownership of security.

The IMPORTANCE of "Properly Investigating the Title to Security, by the Appraiser," or other qualified Representative, and confirming the fact that the TITLE IS CLEAR (as is done in real estate transactions), is conceded to be a very necessary and essential step toward protection and avoidance of future trouble with accounts, even to the extent of becoming involved in legal procedure and sustaining loss.

I would not say that it is entirely the appraisers' duty to investigate the Title to Security to the final point of advancing credit, but to the extent of obtaining all the information possible at the time of appraising the security, The final responsibility would have to rest, of course, upon the management or appointed officer, to follow up the appraisers' lead, and confirm whether or not all debts or liens have been paid or adjusted satisfactorily, before granting the loan.

Certain specific cases have occurred or come to my attention during my experience in the loan business whereby "false affidavit to title" has been made.

Recalling an instance where a young couple having been married but a short time, applied, at a local loan company for a $75.00 loan. The appraiser called at their home, which was neat and orderly and listed the household goods which were fairly new, yet showed signs of usage Upon inquiring if the furniture was clear and paid for, he was assured that such was the case, and they did not owe a cent to any furniture house.

They were both employed at a local book bindery and were making good wages, getting their salaries every Saturday and were paying cash for everything they purchased.

Now, before this loan was OK'd and granted, each furniture store in the city was called and inquiry made if this party had an account with them. It seemed they had not, so the young couple was passed as OK for a reasonable amount, and after paying their account, came back for the second and third loans. By this time they had firmly established their credit with the company, by paying promptly each week, to the extent that they were considered A-1 customers.

Now for the gloom. First, their payments failed to come in as promptly as usual. Then, it developed that the wife had lost her position. Their payments became more delinquent, therefore, forcing the husband to confess that he was getting a very small salary (also he seemed inclined to loaf since his wife had stopped work).

Eventually, the appraiser, who incidentally was also filling the position as collector, called at the home and found that they had separated and their home was broken up, due to the fact that a furniture store had repossessed the household goods. This proved to be a new furniture store that had started up just previous to their obtaining the first loan, and had been overlooked in being called for any of this information. Needless to say, the balance of this account was charged to Loss and Gain.

As in the above case, failure to properly investigate the title to ownership of security often results in heavy losses to the loan company, litigation with furniture houses or other concerns which may have a claim on the security.

This action of repossessing the furniture, many times alarms the borrower, causing him to skip. The loan company loses the account, unless the borrower can be located and prosecuted for obtaining money under false pretense upon security to which he did not have a clear title. In many cases a cash settlement is effected with the borrower before prosecution is enforced.

Of course, using the law is not always a procedure that is advisable, owing to the fact that in a great many localities the county officers are not in sympathy with prosecuting these cases. Also, in a great many instances, the loan companies are not willing to prosecute for fear of public opinion, realizing that the public does not always see our side of the question readily, or in the right light.

I believe when a loan company has made a determined effort to investigate the "Title to Security" and finds afterward that there is a previous encumbrance that affects the title, the loan company need not hesitate to prosecute the case any more than a bank when defrauded.

As to the trouble that may occur, should the appraiser fail to properly investigate the title to security, one could continue indefinitely mentioning various results, but the one important thing that is bound to happen, is the loss that the loan company must suffer in cold dollars.

Therefore, do not hesitate, nor let your appraisers hesitate to ask the necessary questions pertaining to information that may prove to you, beyond a doubt that your security is clear. They, (the borrowing public) do not hesitate to have our ideas and methods thoroughly explained to them, to be fully convinced of our legal loan rates, before they decide definitely upon the loan.

L. L. Bishop suggested that a committee be appointed, which could act for the Association in matters of fraud perpetrated on members of the Association. This matter was discussed very thoroughly by Messrs. Baum, Hynes, Stratton, Rohn and others. The law committee should be consulted on all matters of this kind before any action is taken and it was the consensus of the convention that all suits, etc., should be immediately reported to this committee, of which T. M. Kaufman, 360 Guaranty Bldg., Indianapolis, is chairman.

The subject "Consideration Each Company Owes to the Other" was discussed but some of the former subjects brought out most of the redeeming features of this subject.

The President then appointed Messrs. J. H. Aufderheide, Blumberg and Mitchell a committee to decide on the prizes to be awarded on the following subject: "The Hardest Collection Ever Made," Messrs. Crunk, Clift, Wilcoxon, Russell, Bidwell and Thomas participating.

Mr. Thomas was declared the winner of first prize, $10.00; Mr. Bidwell, second prize. The first prize was won because of quick thinking and alertness. Mr. Bidwell won second prize because of the persistency and determination that the money would be repaid. The prize-winning essays follow:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:

In classifying collections to determine one of the hardest, the question comes to my mind as to the nature of the act of collecting, whether by physical labor, long endurance, or matching wits with an obstinate customer determined not to pay or believing he could not be made to pay. At any rate, I will leave this to the judges for consideration.

In the month of April, 1923, I entered the employ of my company. Some time later this account came to my notice. Wanting to know something about the conditions regarding the account, I asked the manager why the account was never collected, and was informed it was a skip and could not be located. Somehow I felt I might be able to locate the party. I was promptly informed it would be a waste of time as it had been tried before by men who had more experience than I had. I took the card out and each chance I had I worked on it. I found relatives but they refused to give any information. Other men had tried and the relatives were posted.

After one year of constant inquiry, I found a party who at one time had some trouble with this John Doe, as we will call him, and they gave me the name of the little town near the Ohio River in which this fellow was keeping under cover. They also informed me a loan company was looking for him because this John Doe had mortgaged some furniture that was not paid for. The furniture company had taken the furniture and John Doe had refused to pay the loan. But by me being the insurance man and having a nice little dividend to present to John Doe, he could not see why he would not be very glad to get it.

In the month of February, 1924, a new manager came to our office. Our general supervisor also came down. In going over some of the old accounts, we found two bad ones of considerable amount were in Cincinnati, Ohio. I had obtained an address upon them some time before. I also knew this John Doe was not far from there as I had sent him a registered letter signed receipt requested, and had received the receipt. I expressed myself as feeling that I could in some way collect this account from John Doe if I could only meet him face to face. Having had good luck in collecting bad accounts before, the supervisor, Mr. Brown, seemed to have some confidence in me. He said "All right, Thomas, here is $25.00 expense money, get on the train, go to Cincinnati, see the other accounts and collect John Doe."

I went, determined to bring back some money. I arrived in Cincinnati in the afternoon and before 8:00 p. m. had a collection from one of the parties and papers signed that he would pay each month. (I wish to say here that this party paid out as he agreed to do.) In this case I was the attorney for my company.

The following morning I arrived in this little town of John Doe's about 10:45, began hunting my man, found he had moved three times, and each informant gave me additional information as to his worthlessness. I finally found his home. He was not there. I talked to his wife, firmly but kindly. I did not want to take him back to Indianapolis on account of the wife and children, but felt I must do justice to my company who had paid my expenses to come down there. She began to arrange to go hunt him. I informed her I would have to see the sheriff there and make some arrangements, so I would go ahead and then be at the depot, and if her husband cared to see me he could come over there before train time, and if he did not, I would leave word with the sheriff what to do. It worked.

I went straight to the depot and waited. In about twenty minutes a large, tall fellow burst into the waiting room all out of breath. Out of the corner of my eye I could see he was my man. I did not look up or appear that I was expecting anyone. I let him approach me, which he did at once in no gentle manner or tones. "Say, did yer want ter see John Doe?"

I glanced up, smiled, and said in a pleasant voice, "Oh, yes, are you Mr. Doe?"

"I sure am," said he, "come on outside, I want ter see yer a minute."

I followed him out thinking he might show me a few things, but I came after money, not trouble. This I kept in my mind, "It's the money you want, Thomas, so talk, don't fight."

Once outside another fellow stepped up to us and John Doe cut loose.

"I guess yer that attorney fer that loan company aint yer."

"Yes, sir," I replied very snappy, and before he could open his mouth again I told him what I came after, how much and how quick I wanted the money. I finished up with the advice that I did not want to turn him over to the sheriff, but would have to do so in case he refused to pay me, but would just leave the matter with him.

"Well, now, I'll tell ye something," he answered, and he did too. "Ye can't scare me with any of that stuff, fer that furniture wuz not paid fer when I got the money and that manager knowed it, and besides when I got yer letter I went up here to my lawyer and he said I did not have to pay it and yer could not make me either, so yer might as well draw in yer horns and go back where yer came from Mr."

I'll confess he had me for an instant, but that was all. I came after the money and I was going to get it somehow.

"Say fellow," I replied with a smile, "you must have some very smart attorneys in this burg if they would tell you a thing like that. Who was this big fool anyway?" He gave me his name, that's what I wanted then.

"Well, all right," I replied, "if you care to take that stand in the matter it's nothing to me, only I will have to step in here and put in a long distance call to my company and see if they want me to go ahead with my arrangements with the sheriff. Think it over if you want to while I am waiting for my call, but don't forget they can have you brought back whether you have to pay it or not, that is going to cost you something old fellow."

I left them standing and went inside the depot. I looked out the window and saw these two birds get their heads together. I afterward learned it was John Doe's father. Instead of calling my company I called this lawyer, his name being in the little book called directory. I asked him if he knew John Doe.

"I certainly do," he snorted.

"Oh, does he owe you too," I asked.

"He owes everybody in town," he replied, "and won't pay a dime. He is no good and if he owes you Mr. you are out of luck, you might as well try to collect from a dead man."

"Did he ever say anything to you about a loan company being after him," I asked.

"Yes, I believe he did and he never even paid me for the advice, as well as I can remember."

"Well, I answered, I represent that loan company, and I am here to collect. This is an honest debt and he must pay it; I know what you told him before, but you were mistaken. I am going to bring him up, and also give you $5.00 for telling him you were mistaken and giving him some good advice. If he won't pay you for bad advice, I will see that you get your money for putting out the real stuff. I have the mortgage to turn over upon receiving the money. Now what do you say?"

"Bring the dirty cuss up," he shouted. "I'll tell him a few things."

I stepped out to them, "My company says to go with you to this attorney, whoever he is and tell him about the case and see what he says about it, as you will not believe me."

He smiled as he replied, "Sure, come on Dad and go along."

We went to see the attorney, I was introduced to him, was very glad to meet him and at once laid my case before him.

"My God," he began, "I never knew it was this bad," and then the advice, tons of it. Michigan City was full to overflowing to hear him tell it. Finally Mr. John Doe asked me very meekly what the least I would settle for in cash. I figured up the interest, attorney fees, railroad fare and got a good figure in order to cut it down. It was around $190. Then I began to figure how much I could afford to cut for his sake. I finally cut to $140.00.

He and the old man had a little talk and asked me if I could wait a little while. I made it plain I would not miss my train out of there due in 35 minutes for no one, and if they wanted to take the chance of missing me and let the sheriff settle it, that was up to them.

They left. I paid the attorney the $5.00; we talked until we heard them coming back up the stairs, and in just one hour and 45 minutes from the time I arrived in the little city, Mr. John Doe had his old mortgage colored with age, and I had $140.00 for my company.

W. A. THOMAS.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN:

This is going back to Biblical times and I will not try to put any flowers in this article.

A loan was made March 5, 1914, for $15.00. Five years later I became manager of the National Loan Company, in the Board of Trade Building.

I went out to find this Green Thomas, who owed a balance of $6.65 principal. After a week of hunting, I found the man in the K. of P. Building. I told him I could not carry an account like this and pointed out why he should pay.

Here is where the trouble began. He gave me to understand he never got the loan from me, and he would pay it as he pleased. He would not sign any new papers, and the papers we had were under the old 2% and 3% extension fees.

Well, I had to call about four to ten times a month. All I could get was 25c a month, until, June 16, 1924, when a payment was made on the principal. I will give you the dates that I collected on the principal: March 20, 1925—11c; June 2, 1925,—46; July 22, 1925,—$1.00.

Now, the account was half paid and he asked me to renew the loan to $15.00. Boy! This was where I saw one step either way and I was through.

I told him that I did not know what the company would do. If he wished, he could pay me off, and I would write to the president and see, or, he could go elsewhere to get more money.

Then he did not pay anything for two months. I went after him every other day. The balance was too small to go to court. He got desperate and said he was going to have some money at once. I told him to get me $3.57 and pay in full. Then, he would have a right to make a loan with some other company, but he could not as long as he owed the National.

In about two weeks he called me over and paid the $3.57 and I said, "never again." This is why it pays to be persistent.

C. E. BIDWELL.

Honorable mention to others.

The President then appointed Messrs. Callender, Durnell and Kaufman as a committee to award the prizes on the following subject: "Training Outside Men by Managers." Messrs. Clift, Farrington, Hardisty, Crunk, Houck and Bishop participating. Mr. Clift was declared winner of first prize, $15.00, and Mr. Farrington second prize. The winning essays follow:

FIRST PRIZE

Mr. Chairman, and Gentlemen of the Convention:

In the training of outside men by managers, I wonder how many managers realize their full responsibility in training a man. It is up to him whether this man succeeds or fails in life. If he is a success in business life, he will likewise be a success in his home life, for no person can really succeed in one thing and fail in another. If the manager is conscientious, he requires the outside man to always give his very best, to love his work, to always be trying to get ahead, or in plain words, to be on the job every minute of the time.

There are certain qualities I think all outside men should have and which I would like to mention. I do not expect you men to agree with me, but as I see it, these qualities are an absolute essential.

First is honesty. In honesty, I do not mean money matters alone, but in time. It is very easy to waste ten minutes here, fifteen minutes there, and when a person does this, is he honest? Your employer has paid you for that time and it rightly belongs to him, so it is necessary that an outside man realize the value of honesty in every minute detail.

Second is persistency. This quality is most essential in the loan game of today. A person can not know the word quit, but must keep on trying. If one thing fails, he must try another and if that fails try another, but never allow yourself to ever think it can not be done.

Third is initiative. A man must be resourceful to always be on the alert and to be able to reason things out for himself. There are situations arising at all times a man must be able to handle himself without calling on the manager and the man who can use his head is invaluable.

Fourth is aggressiveness. A man should be of the aggressive type, a quick mover and a quick talker; it should indicate a quick thinker. An aggressive man is a positive type and the man who is not aggressive is of a negative type and only a positive type can succeed.

Fifth is neatness. A person should be very neat, both about himself and his clothes. He should always have on clean linen, keep his clothes pressed, shoes shined, clean shaven, hair trimmed, teeth cleaned, and he should hold himself straight and have a dignified manner about him.

Sixth is ambition. If a party has no desire to improve himself to get ahead, to strive for some goal in the future and is willing to pay the price to attain it, he is not worth wasting any manager's time.

Seventh is the last but not the least by any means and that is a man must be religious. I am not speaking of creeds, but a man must be a believer in a supreme power and have a desire to try and live a good clean life. The outside man must go out and talk square dealings and honesty to people and if he is not trying to live that kind of a life, he cannot talk convincingly. A person must be square and live clean if he expects people to have faith in him.

Gentlemen, any person possessing the qualities I have mentioned under the supervision of a conscientious loan manager, is bound to reach the goal of "An Ideal Outside Man." C. E. Clift.

SECOND PRIZE

"Training Outside Men by Manager"

The term "Outside Man" should be somewhat transitory, because, with proper natural ability coupled with correct training, he should develop into a better situation.

A great deal of responsibility rests with the Manager who selects and employs the Outside Man. He should select a man whose personal appearance, education, and natural ability will qualify him to represent the firm in any capacity. The appraiser of today may be the President of tomorrow. Get the best possible qualities obtainable for the price you can afford to pay.

He should be a man who mixes readily with all classes of people and be able to keep up an intelligent conversation.

Some less desirable traits which do not always appear on the surface should be guarded against. Some men have splendid ideas but do not put them into practice. To illustrate: a Tennessee lawyer came home one day and met his son in the hall, the son asked if he were a good mathematician. "Yes, my son, I think I am pretty good." "Well, then, I have a problem for you to work. There were three frogs sitting on a log,—a bullfrog, a tree frog and a toad frog. The bull frog decided to jump off. How many frogs were left?"

The father smiled. "Two frogs were left."

"That's where you're wrong," exclaimed the boy. "Three frogs were left. The bull frog only decided to jump off. He didn't jump."

The man referred to above does not act on his decisions. Consult former employers about such qualifications. Avoid the clock watcher but do not expect a man to work indefinitely and still give his best efforts.

A man once applied for a position in a machine shop. The foreman put this question to him. "Are you one of those fellows who drops his tools and runs as soon as the quittin' whistle blows?"

"Certainly not," he replied. "I always have me tools put away long before the whistle blows."

Stress is thus placed on natural qualifications, because a good foundation is very essential before a superstructure can be built.

No man should be sent out from the office to transact business for the company without first understanding the fundamentals of that business. The prospective customer will get his first impression of the company from the "Outside Man." He should be taught the nature and importance of the business as well as its uncertainties and hazards. He will then understand why a great many details are required apparently without a purpose.

For example: Why get so many references on the application, why prove the security to be clear, why inquire so often about change of address? The answer to such questions should be known before the Outside Man is sent out alone to risk the reputation of the firm. His attitude toward difficult accounts should be firmness but not bluster. He should use tact instead of noise or roughness.

It is the duty of any Manager to require respect for the business by making the business respectable. Honesty should be insisted upon. The dignity of the business should be impressed upon him.

A common mistake made by many managers is to tell the Outside Man just what to say or do, when calling on a customer. Let this point out this fallacy.

A doctor had been calling on the Malone family. Pat was sick. One morning he inquired after the patient.

"Pat is dead," she replied.

He was astonished. "Did you give him the powders I left here?"

"Yes, sir," she said. "You told me to give him what would lay on a dime; I had no dime, so I gave him what would lay on ten pennies and the funeral is tomorrow."

Lastly, place all the responsibility on him that he can carry and then expect results. If he feels that the position offers no chance for success or advancement, quote him this from James Anthony Froud:

"Any honest occupation to which a man may set his hand, will make him a success if he learns all the knowledge of his craft." G. W. Farrington.

Training Outside Men By Managers

This situation does not exist to-day in as hard a form as it formerly did in days gone by, because we, having elevated ourselves and our ethics, naturally employ higher caliber men who come prepared and equipped better mentally, and therefore fit into the organization more easily; you get this better class of men by going into the field and paying the price for them.

Conceding this advantage, it is then the manager's place to advise the new man of the particular position he is to hold; I believe that all companies should instruct their men in all branches of the business as soon as they are able to absorb it, from the taking of payments to the making of a loan.

A new man must be drilled in courtesy; he must be versatile, able to look at each particular case on its own merits; he must soon learn how to read human nature and how to handle each individual complaint; where to start and when to stop; he should have intensive instructions on how to take an application; should be taught the many little things an appraiser should see at the home while making an appraisement and shown how important this is to the manager who will ultimately pass on the application, basing his decision to a large extent on his report.

Finally, a new man should be given a high opinion of YOU and YOUR BUSINESS; he will be as good or bad as YOU make him. If the environment in the office is good and high class, he will soon fall in line; you cannot expect a new man to assume the initiative in these respects; they look to the ones above them for their instructions and actions. L. L. Bishop.

"Training Outside Men By Manager"

SALESMANSHIP

If possible a man should be chosen who has had some business experience in the way of salesmanship, as it is very important that an outside man be able to know how to meet the public, and talk to them, because if he cannot talk his business in an intelligent way, he cannot sell the business to the public.

Never consider hiring an outside man unless he has the ability to become a manager some day, as you are only wasting his time as well as your own.

GENERAL EXPERIENCE

An outside man, while his work is on the outside, should be kept in the office occasionally, and taught the system of handling the business inside, such as the regular routine of Daily, Weekly and Monthly reports, because, if he is to be a future manager, it is up to him to know how this work is done if he expects to teach others under him.

APPRAISAL OF SECURITY

This is the most important work in the loan business. I know of no better way for a man to learn the market value of security, than to have him attend sales, where furniture, pianos and talking machines, etc., are sold at public auction. This will give him about as correct a value of this security as could be had. In fact, if loan companies appraised goods according to the price they are sold for at public auctions, they would never have a loss by over appraising the security.

CREDIT

It is very important to see that the security is paid for. If the goods are old, nine times out of ten, they are clear, but, if new, and they have no receipts, always find out where the goods were bought, and the furniture stores will be glad to tell you whether they are paid for or not. It is a very good idea, to mention to the party who wishes to secure a loan, just before he signs the mortgage, that he, in signing same, is making an affidavit to the effect that the goods are free from all encumbrance. Then in small towns where the loan companies have no clearing house for applications, see that the customer has no loans elsewhere, and thus avoid the doubling up of accounts.

COÖPERATION

The best of feeling should exist between you and your competitors, as well as the furniture stores, because, by coöperating with each, you will have less bad accounts to charge off.

Training New Outside Men

All managers here to-day have had more or less experience in the training of new outside men. Sometimes it is a very difficult task. There are three reasons to offer for this statement and the manager takes the following chances:

First, employing the right men and those whom he thinks are qualified for the position. Second, employing men who are honest and will work to the best interests of the company. Third, men who will take an interest in the work and strive to make good in the future. I will divide these outside men into two groups, namely collectors and appraisers.

It is generally conceded that new outside men should be efficient collectors before they can be good appraisers. There is more to consider in this department of the loan business besides their ability to collect and appraise. They must be likeable fellows and gain the confidence of the people. They must be courteous and hold the confidence of their clients and there is no doubt in my mind they will be successful outside men.

However, in this day and age, collectors are not needed as much as high grade appraisers, because most loan companies have discontinued this department and depend on collecting through the mails. Much depends on the appraiser for they pave the way to the company's success or failure.

The manager of a company is responsible for the men who work on the outside. These men have very difficult work to perform. They fight the weather and sometimes the unruly client.

I never will forget my first experience as an outside man. One of our clients became unruly and the manager sent me to see him. I was not collecting but merely wanted to have an understanding regarding future payments. When I first approached him, I could tell he was in bad humor and I might be in for a severe flogging. I began talking about his account and then he started to give me a tongue lashing. I heard what he had to say and then started to reason with him. Before I left the house he was in better humor and I received a promise to pay at a later date. I will admit I was somewhat frightened at the time, being a new man but I had plenty of courage and put it to good use. So to be good outside men they must have courage to meet critical situations of this nature.

New outside men should have assistance from some one with experience. It is well for the experienced man to spend some of his time with the new men especially on their first attempt at appraisements. He should show the new men how to place a value on goods and to size up the situation in general as to the possibility of making the applicant a loan. After the new men have been in the work for a while they soon become efficient and are ready to carry on the work. One of the very important duties in training new men on appraisements is to look up the title to the property and also decide as to the applicant's ability to repay the money borrowed. All these experiences should be explained by someone in authority.

New outside men should know something about the inside work of an office. They should be able to assist the manager by learning every branch of the business. They can be easily groomed for a manager later on. In fact, they become managers of the field territory and are an important factor in the business.

When I first started in the loan business, I was a collector, then later an appraiser; next a bookkeeper, then manager. The loan business at that time was hard to operate and many perplexing situations arose. It took good field men as well as other assistants to operate it. We had no legal rate of interest, neither had we a law that would stand the test. We were operating on the old high rate system. Now we have a better regulated business and this condition makes the training of new outside men easier. They will make loans thinking at the time that they can be collected. They will have more confidence in their ability to collect.

Several years ago clients could plead usury thereby defrauding the companies out of their profits. By having a law which is fair to both lenders and borrowers, and making the business easier to handle, makes the training of new outside men a pleasure.

Therefore, we will have to admit, that the new outside men who work hardest, generally profit most and become the future loan men in the business.

Mr. Crunk.

"Training Outside Men By Managers"

The new men one hires should be carefully selected—they should have a neat, clean appearance, good character, strong personality and be alert and willing workers.

Start at the beginning by teaching them the general principles of the work they are expected to do, the business they are to uphold and the state laws governing the same, for they must thoroughly understand every phase of the business before they are able to explain it properly to the prospective customer and be able to answer all questions asked by him.

The outside men should always be courteous to the customers and cause them as little trouble as possible when listing security and take plenty of time and patience when explaining the transaction to them.

Full responsibility of the outside work should be placed on your men and they should be held liable for the way they handle it.

Instruct your assistants to use good judgment in dealing with the people, to be firm and persistent in a tactful way, yet gentle in their manner and try at all times to keep the clients' good will toward them. Differences of opinion are bound to develop, especially when making hard collections and nothing is ever gained by them being hard boiled or offensive.

If any blame is to be placed, place it against the company as the customer will not hold an enmity against a company as he will against one person.

The assistants should study personality—it goes a long way to help select the good customers, from the bad ones.

Train the outside men to take the same interest in the business as they would if they themselves owned it and to decide their everyday problems accordingly.

Remember this: always be courteous, patient, persistent, but thoughtful as to the customers' likes and dislikes and this will be a great asset towards making a success.

R. C. Hardisty.

THE PRESIDENT'S "RAKEOFF" AND THE USURY LAW

By M. L. Hayward

If the directors of a bank elect a president, who has power to make loans for the bank, and a borrower arranges a loan from the bank through the president, at the legal rate of interest, but the president charges the borrower a commission for putting through the loan, which the president pockets, so that the legal interest plus the commission which the borrower pays constitutes a higher rate of interest than the usury law of the state allows does this transaction make the bank guilty of usury?

Supposing that the answer to the preceding question is "yes," that the bank in question is a state bank when the transaction takes place, but subsequently is changed to a national bank, surrenders its state charter, continues as a national bank under a national charter, but the officials and general management remain the same, is the new national bank liable for the usury arising out of the transaction with its predecessor, the state bank?

These two points arose in the case of McCarthy vs. Liberty National Bank, a decision of the Oklahoma Supreme Court reported in 175 Pacific Reporter, page 940, in which the facts were as follows:

John S. McCarthy wanting to borrow $6,000, went to the state bank and negotiated the loan through the medium of its president. The transaction assumed in outward form the guise of a loan of $8,000 for one year. This amount was placed to the credit of McCarthy in the bank, who immediately, as a part of the agreed transaction, paid the president of the bank from the deposit, the sum of $2,000, of which $800 was to be the interest on the loan and $1,200 commission to the president of the bank for putting over the loan, a total consideration of 25 per cent, paid by McCarthy for the use of the money.

Now, McCarthy was wise in his day and canny in his generation, so he paid the note in full, and then demanded the modest sum of $4,000, double the amount of the usury paid, according to the law in force in that state.

One of the allegations, which was not denied under oath, was that after making this demand, McCarthy was inveigled into the private room of the bank, which had by that time changed its name to the national bank, was locked in the room, forced by threats of being killed to sign an instrument renouncing all claim for usury, and was violently assaulted by one A. E. Lewis, who honored the bank by acting as its president, and being the same president who had pocketed the $1,200 commission.

Then McCarthy brought an action against the national bank to recover $4,000 usury. On the trial it was shown by uncontradicted evidence that the state bank had reincorporated as the national bank; the latter bank being organized by the officers and stockholders of the former, taking over its assets, continuing in business, and being conducted by the same officers.

The bank sought to avoid liability under two theories and set up two defenses.

The one was that the $2,000 consideration received for the loan of $6,000 for a year was not interest; the contention being that only $800 was interest, and the remaining $1,200 a commission charged by the president in his individual capacity, and retained by him as a commission for making the loan.

The other theory and defense was that the national bank, as distinguished from the state bank, was not liable by reason of the change of incorporation and name.

The Court decided against the bank on both points. On the first the Court held that the bank was liable for the acts of the president for the following reasons:

"The incontroverted testimony shows that the president had and exercised the right of making loans for the bank; he was clearly a general agent for that purpose. The funds of the bank were in his possession to be loaned. His official position was such that his knowledge would be the knowledge of the corporation. The authorities amply sustain the position that compensation received for a loan under such conditions cannot be called a commission, and the pains of usury thus avoided."

The Court also held that the mere change in the status of the bank from state to national did not effect its liability under the circumstances.—The Office Economist.

NEW YORK CITY COLLECTIONS

Members having accounts in New York City may like to try the services of Henry Salant, Attorney and Counsellor-at-Law, Potter Building, 38 Park Row, New York City. He has rendered satisfactory service to some of our members on the following basis: Fifty per cent of any amount collected and no fee if there are no results. In other words, his charges are on a purely contingent fee basis. As New York Laws prohibit an attorney from advancing disbursements in consideration of getting business, and since the Appellate Division has recently intimated in a decision that these rules with reference to attorneys will be drastically enforced, it will be necessary for the client to advance the disbursements, which in the case of industrial loans never exceed $5 and most often are less.

FLORIDA COLLECTIONS

Every day the National Secretary receives letters from members in regard to "skips" gone to Florida. To date only one office has qualified under the new Florida Small Loan Law and that is the Personal Finance Co., 325 W. Forsyth St., Jacksonville. It is expected that a number of other offices will be opened in this state as soon as conditions become more stabalized. Meanwhile and in the absence of a better agency, the National Secretary will refer all members with skip accounts in Florida to attorneys whose names are taken from a directory of reliable attorneys.

RHODE ISLAND

The regular meeting of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Biltmore Hotel, Providence, R. I., at 7:30 p. m., Thursday, October 15, 1925.

Present were Messrs. W. G. Wood, G. W. Delaney, F. G. Smith, of the Citizens Finance Service, Providence; Mr. James Dwight, Providence; Mr. H. Neal, of the Chester Neal Company, Providence; Mr. J. G. Findlay, of the Household Finance Corporation, Providence; Mr. F. H. Lovegrove, of the Mutual Finance System, Providence; Mr. E. La Gueux, of the Personal Finance Company, Providence; Mr. G. E. Rich, of the Mutual Loan Association, Pawtucket; Mr. G. F. Lewis, of the Mutual Service Association, Newport, and Mr. E. R. Klein, of the Beneficial Operating Bureau, New York.

Chairman Rich, who presided, talked on recently held 1925 Annual Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association at Providence and expressed the thanks of the members to all who assisted them in preparing and carrying out plans to make it a success, particularly to Mr. A. L. Wick for his advice and supervision; Mr. Street, of the Providence Chamber of Commerce, for his coöperation; to the ladies who so graciously did their part, and to all who assisted in any capacity.

Treasurer Kennon being absent through illness, it was moved and seconded that his report be held over until next meeting.

Secretary La Gueux reported 15 members and 14 in good standing. There are 43 licensed lenders in Rhode Island as of September 11, 1925. Report was approved after a motion was made by Mr. Wood and seconded by Mr. Dwight.

Question of filing instead of recording Chattel Mortgages was discussed. Mr. Wood stated in order to make this change we would have to go before the State Assembly for an amendment of the present Small Loan Law, and he was of the opinion it would not be opportune at this time. Mr. Lovegrove moved that the matter should be dropped. Mr. Wood stated that as a letter from Col. Clarence Hodson on this subject sent to Chairman Rich had been mislaid and before deciding on this matter it would be better to wait until next meeting when letter would be on hand. Mr. Wood's motion to have secretary reply to Col. Hodson and upon being seconded by Mr. Lewis, was carried.

Secretary read a letter from Mr. L. E. Pope as to the advisibility of members using uniform papers. Members stated they were using papers prepared by our Association Attorney and secretary was informed that he could have same for comparison.

Secretary read a letter from Mr. H. F. Woods. He wished to express his thanks for the coöperation given him in laying ground work for publicity of the 1925 American Industrial Lenders Convention. Secretary was instructed to acknowledge receipt of this letter.

Rhode Island having had the largest percentage of members at the Convention, it was awarded a beautiful cup as a trophy by the American Industrial Lenders Association. Motion made by Mr. Rich and seconded by Mr. Dwight that all members be given an opportunity to display same in their offices if they so desired. Carried.

On motion of Mr. Wood, seconded by Mr. Klein, the application of the American Loan Company, of Pawtucket, was approved and duly elected. Carried.

Motion made and seconded that Chairman appoint a committee to call on members who do not attend meetings.

Chairman Rich appointed Mr. Dwight.

Secretary was instructed to write Association Attorney for an opinion as to whether a contract made on a Bank Holiday is enforceable.

Seven firms in Providence have formed a Credit Exchange Bureau, which is to be known as the Industrial Lenders Exchange Bureau of Providence. Firms forming this bureau are: Household Finance Corp., Mutual Finance System, Citizens Finance Service, New England Equity Corp., American Loan Co., Personal Finance Co., and Providence Guaranty Company. All other members who wish to join are welcome.

E. LA GUEUX, Secretary.

DATES FOR NEXT NATIONAL CONVENTION SETTLED

At a recent meeting of the National Executive Committee held in New York, at which a number of important matters were discussed, including legislation for 1926 and 1927, publicity and membership, September 15, 16, 17, 1926 were fixed as the dates for the twelfth annual national convention at Cleveland, Ohio, at the Cleveland Hotel.

The present plan provides for a program about half the length of the usual size because unless a change in the meantime takes place, the National Federation of Remedial Loan Association will hold its annual convention at the same time and place and the programs of each organization will be so arranged that anyone attending either convention will be permitted and have time to be present at the meetings of both organizations.

The Ohio Loan Association which will have charge of all the local arrangements will soon announce its committees and plans.

SMALL LOANS ARE SPECIALTY

CAPITOL COMPANY PROVES WORTH IN TIME OF NEED

There are times when a small loan of money at a low rate of interest would save the situation for a man. At times like that the Capitol Loan Company proves its coöperative spirit in the adjustment of its policy to the needs of the client.

The only company loaning money on automobiles under this arrangement, this concern has made a specialty of this form of loan. Other loans from $25 to $300 may be made on personal property or cattle at a low rate.

Payments may be made in almost any manner suitable to the client—all the way from six months to two years and are payable monthly, bimonthly, or according to the pleasure of client. There probably is no other company in the city with less stringent qualifications in its policy. The service comes as a life saver, providing the least possible worry to persons in temporary need of small sums.—Sample of Reader Ad. in Indianapolis Times, Nov. 13, 1925.

LOAN STIGMA OUT OF DATE IN BUSINESS

BORROWING MONEY FROM RELIABLE FIRMS PART OF MODERN FINANCE

The old stigma connected with the borrowing of money is as out of date as false hair and petticoats. To-day loan companies have placed the process of loaning money on a strictly business basis which is the mainstay of many going concerns.

The Capital Loan Association became established in 1904 as a necessary part of the business world of Indianapolis. Since that time they have along with the other reliable loan associations of the city done away with the common feeling of embarrassement about borrowing money, both for personal and business emergencies. Their experience has shown them that the average person is not prepared for the large expenditure of money that they are frequently faced with the necessity of meeting. They have in these events financed these persons or concerns to carry on their affairs and in many cases to make money.

This company makes loans for the financing of all kinds of undertakings accepted universally by hundreds of persons and businesses, says L. L. Bishop, manager.—Sample of Reader Ad. in Indianapolis Times, Nov. 9, 1925.

By unannimous vote of the National Executive Committee, the newly organized Tennessee Industrial Lenders Association was accepted as an affiliated member of the A. I. L. A., by a recent mail ballot. The new association was organized in Chattanooga, Tennessee, November 4, 1925, with ten members, four of which have already become members of the A. I. L. A. Much good is expected of this new baby member, the seventeenth state to line up with the A. I. L. A. Several other states should come in before the end of our fiscal year, September, 1926.

The celebration of the eighth anniversary of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association will be held at the Hotel Jefferson, Richmond, Virginia, Friday, January 22, 1926. The business session will begin at ten o'clock, sharp, in the forenoon; adjournment for luncheon at one o'clock p. m. Luncheon will be served and speakers will be heard. The meeting will reconvene and continue until five o'clock, when business adjournment will be taken. The annual dinner, dance and entertainment will begin at six thirty. It will be informal.

Members of other associations are cordially invited to attend. It is to be hoped that we will have with us some of the National officers, Chairmen from other organizations, and Mr. Henderson, representing the Russell Sage Foundation, and many prominent top-knotchers in the Industrial Loan field.

The committee on arrangements have arranged a suitable program for pleasure for the ladies as well as the members, and therefore the ladies must not be left at home.

Richmond, and Virginia, as you know, are the landmarks of the beginning of our nation. Virginia was one of the first to begin to enact Uniform laws in the South. We want our fellow members from the North, East, West and South to join us in the festivities of the evening. Those in charge of the arrangements for the convention have two main objects in view. First, to bring to the attention of every member and his associates a realization of the fact that he should do his part, be it large or small, not only to perpetuate his individual business in his community, but to perpetuate his state and the National association as well. It should, therefore, not be necessary for the committee to plead with any lender to attend this convention. The mere announcement of the date of an event so important in the history of the Industrial Loan business should be sufficient to induce every lender throughout the state to decide NOW to attend and to do his part toward its success by sending or bringing as many of his business or working associates as possible. And also by sending to the committee ideas and suggestions for the program which is now in process of formation.

THE LIBRARY OF THE 1926 UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Topics to be discussed should be helpful to you, and the goodwill that will accrue to you in your business from the fact of your being able to meet and hear the greatest experts of the Industrial Loan business throughout the United States or the world should readily make you see that it will be worth while, and worth the time and the expense of the trip to Richmond. You cannot afford to miss this opportunity to join in the discussion of many helpful topics vital to the continued prosperity and future growth of your own business and that of your State and National association.

No committee can make a convention a marked success without individual effort and coöperation of every member in the organization. Each member must do his part, and to do this, he should not only attend but should show his interest by taking active part in everything that is done.

The second object in view, is that of entertainment and the promotion of good fellowship. There will not only be something at the business session to interest and instruct you but there will be entertainment sufficient to please the most exciting. The annual banquet is always the crowning feature of any annual convention.

The Hotel Jefferson is one of the most homey and comfortable hotels in the United States. Those out of town desiring accommodations may write to the Chairman at the Hotel Jefferson, Richmond, Virginia, stating how many ladies and how many gentlemen, single or married, they will have in their party that may desire hotel reservations, and about what price, and with or without baths, etc. These must be in not later than the fifteenth of January.

A committee of ladies has been appointed to look after the lady guests who may be assured that they will be given a good time.

Yours for coöperation,
Virginia Industrial Lenders Association,
Edgar P. East, Chairman.

PROPOSED ASSOCIATION OF STATE CHAIRMEN

One of the principal subjects of discussion to be brought up at the business session of the annual meeting of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association to be held at the Hotel Jefferson, Richmond, Virginia, on January 22, 1926, will be the proposed formation of an association composed of the chairmen of the various State associations. The suggestion has been made and seems to be favorably received in all quarters.

The benefits to be derived from such an organization are obvious. Closer coöperation, making interesting and valuable acquaintances, the exchange of valuable ideas all must inevitably result from such a plan. Further, the association so formed will act as a connecting link between the National Association and the several State Associations and both the State and National organizations will be helped thereby.

It is suggested that at this meeting steps be taken to form an association including in its membership the chairmen of the States to the east of Ohio. Later, other groups may organize; and finally, these groups will join in forming the general association of State Chairmen.

It is hoped that the various State Chairmen will send in any suggestions

THE 'OUTSIDE' ASSISTANT MANAGER

Read by E. F. Moore at the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association Meeting

October 23, 1925 at Norfolk, Va.

It is now becoming generally recognized that the key man of the small loan business is the outside investigator. He is the foundation upon which the business is built and upon his good faith and judgment depend both the profits and security of the capital invested.

It is, therefore, profitable to consider the practical aspects of this subject. There is, at least, one such position in every loan office. Before the person can be put to work, he must first be found and employed. This raises the question as to how the proper representative of the lender shall undertake to reach likely material for employment. At once, therefore, it is necessary to have made a decision as to the type of person wanted, where such personnel can most likely be found available and the ways and means of establishing contact and making them aware of the chances of employment and opportunities for promotion.

The nature of the work practically requires that this position be filled by a man rather than a woman. As the position is the starting point of opportunity for learning the industrial loan business, lenders generally have sought only young men between 22 and 35 years of age. As the applicant must be able to read and write to fill in credit investigation reports and be a person of keen observation and sound judgment, it is a requisite to have, at least, a fair common school education and better, if he is a high-school graduate. As the men occupying the position of credit investigator work for the most part outside of the loan office, good vigorous health is essential, as well as good walking feet.

As the outside man actually goes into the homes of borrowing applicants, usually when the man of the house is away at work, it is essential that the loan company's representative be a man of good manners, good address, and scrupulously good conduct.

Charles H. Watts, of New York, makes the good point that as the business of the lender is built up by applications for loans and the outside man does the investigating and visits the home of the applicant, the public have no other means of judging the character and methods of the lender except by the conduct of its representative who enters their homes. As good-will is a valuable asset of every well-conducted business, it is obvious that in the personality of the outside man, rests the ability to determine if there is to be any good-will element for his employment. This all makes the personality, character, habits, conduct and manners of the outside man extremely valuable and important matters in the employer's business. Any person falling below the high standard in this respect should not be employed. Obviously, a person whose report of credit investigation is to form the basis for the judgment of the loan manager of the office and enable him to decide whether he is to grant the loan, refuse the amount, or reject the application altogether, requires the maker of such report not only to be intelligent and competent as to his valuations, approvals and opinions, but to be the soul of honor, loyalty and integrity as to good faith and honesty.

We are, therefore, assuming in what is to be said upon this subject that every employee shall be loyal, honest, well-behaved, courteous, and exercise skilled judgment which will constantly improve through practice, experience and long service.

Where there is more than one applicant, it has been customary for the employer to select the one who appears to have the better education, better personality, better address and better clothes. This is all right as far as it goes, but frequently, there has not been available any applicant up to a proper standard for selection and employment. Very obviously, therefore, the first thing to consider in this regard is the standard as to qualities and attainment which an applicant must have in order to be entitled to favorable consideration. The next point is to consider how to attract a fair number of applicants for the position available, each having the ideal qualities. The possession of these qualities is the business of the applicant and whatever employer might wish, he cannot endow him other than he is. It is the business of the employer to have clearly defined standards of attainment and qualities which the applicant must possess before he is entitled to favorable consideration for employment. Unfortunately, in the actual contact, employers have heretofore very generally failed to visualize or outline the requisite standards as to personnel and have, therefore, failed in an unnecessarily large proportion of cases to reach the ideal type for employment. The numerous instances where outside men have fallen down on their job, have proved incompetent, dishonest, lazy, unreliable, etc., are, therefore, to be attributed primarily to the lack of proper ability of the employer to carry on one of the important duties of his position. The failure of the employee to qualify would have been anticipated in most cases by qualified employers. Therefore, in the selection of qualified employees, we must first proceed to secure qualified employers. There is a dearth of such officials.

Assuming that the employer is qualified to select and employ, and recognize the proper standards as to qualities and attainment which an applicant must possess before given a position, the next vital thing is to decide where and how such material may be located and attracted to apply for the vacant position.

It has very generally been the practice and is justified by experience and practical results, that personnel be recruited in the city or vicinity of the loan office in which the position is vacant. This gives the new employee the advantage of knowing the streets and community, and also the people generally. It also gives him the advantage out of business hours of associating with his friends and family whereas, if he were to move to a strange city in a business that was new to him, he would likely become hopelessly discouraged before becoming fairly proficient. Another advantage is that such persons have heretofore had a relatively small earning power and it will not be necessary to pay them for beginner's quality of work, the price of an experienced and competent man. Again, if a man proves to be unadaptable to our work, he may be released with the smallest possible amount of resulting damage in demoralization to himself.

The employer then having in mind the duties of the position, the type of employee desired and the plan to recruit in the neighborhood of the loan office where the vacant position exists, the next step to decide is the means of locating and attracting desirable personnel to apply for the position.

Experience has shown usually that it is desirable to have present employees look among their own friends and acquaintances for a likely candidate, tell him of his opportunities for permanent, pleasant and profitable employment and possibilities of promotion in associating with the lender, etc. Of course, this could and should only be stated in accordance with the facts. It is, therefore, clearly to the advantage of every lender that all employees should know of instances for promotion for long and meritorious service among the employees. If the manager and employees of the loan office where the vacancy exists are not able to attract likely candidates, it is usually the custom to resort to a classified ad in a local newspaper—usually an afternoon edition. Some employees, however, are accustomed to inquire of other loan managers in the city to know if they have anyone to recommend and in certain cases, if a seemingly capable man has been let out, there has been a tendency to employ such a man and realize upon the advantages of what experience he has had in the loan business. A number of capable employers are opposed to both latter methods and desire to secure personnel having no moral obligations to competitors or their employees. They also prefer to get a man without previous experience in the loan business so that while learning the method of the employer, he will not have to unlearn the methods of some competitor.

It is not altogether unusual to observe classified ads seeking to attract applicants for the position of outside man in an office. Such ads may be commented upon like other ads, that is, that the person who writes them has in mind the entire situation, just what he wants, but fails to visualize the state of mind of the uninformed reader who is open for a new position, whether employed or not. The ads should be written to inform and attract likely applicants and therefore, worded in regard to the psychology of the reader and not of the writer of the ad. This fundamental rule is violated much too frequently. It is false economy to make an ad so short that it fails to define the duties and opportunities of the position. To secure a good man is worth the few extra lines and more.

Assuming that the advertisement attracts a number of likely prospects, the next essential thing is the interview between the employer and the applicants. This interview is important. Such interviews have decided in many instances, and will decide in the future, as to whether capable men are to be identified with the Company or whether they are to secure persons of only mediocre or small ability. Some of these interviews represent an accurate example of everything that should be avoided. In the first place, the applicant is ill at ease. In the next place, he wants to make a good impression and wants to find out about the opportunities of the position available, especially the hours of work, nature of work, permanency without lay-offs, increase in salary as quality of service improves, opportunity for promotion to higher position, etc. It is a fair statement that in the majority of such interviews, these obvious conditions are not complied with. As the employer controls the interview and has the right to direct it, a failure of this sort is attributable to his lack of ability in this important respect. Undue discussion of personal experiences of outside subjects and interruptions, either for telephoning delinquents or other office matters, should be avoided especially where they introduce troublesome aspects. It should be remembered that one of the chief requisites in the mind of any person seeking employment is to find work that is congenial and pleasant and associates with whom his relations will be agreeable and happy. Nothing unpleasant should, therefore, be permitted to develop during such interviews and fellow-employees should be advised of the plan and warned to see that any untoward influence is avoided.

A series of memos should be taken and relative markings made as to various qualities and attainments of each applicant so that they may be compared. It is a mistake to employ at once the first capable man who comes in, and as others arrive, tell them that the position is filled and you do not need to see them. Remember that you may need to advertise again some time and the fact that you or your representatives refused to interview an applicant previously would make him unwilling to call again and he is likely to influence others. It might readily be suggested as to the qualities and attainments which should be set up in the standards for relative marking. These I might readily suggest, but as such matters are not generally standardized and depend very much upon individual judgment and as even the terminology is not standard, but should be left for each person to select the word describing such qualities or attainment, it would seem to be unprofitable at this time to set up the various phases of moral and physical qualities, education, experience, etc. However, it is essential that every employer do this and attempt to make observation and inquiry of each applicant touching these various aspects on a sheet of paper with the applicant's name on top. These various items can be set up and marked on a basis of 1 to 10 just as your school teacher did when you were young. Then after all the applications are in, their examination marks should be gone over and marked up in order of relative preference as, 'a,' 'b,' 'c,' 'd,' etc. Then the persons marked 'a' and 'b' should be phoned to call promptly and a review made of each, after which a decision is to be reached and the most desirable person employed. It is worthwhile to take time and be careful and competent in method upon employment business.

In this connection it should be stated that no man should be employed unless it is believed that he possesses the character and latent ability for development into possibly the highest operating position in the employer's organization. Moreover, it should not be overlooked that education, mental alertness, etc., are no substitutes for good morals and good habits. Do not employ unless or until affirmatively assured that the party is all right in these respects.

Having employed the right person, keep in mind that your serious work is not finished but only begun. No time is lost and no more profitable investment of energy can be made than to explain to him helpful and instructive details of the business so as to train and develop his judgment by your precept while he is gaining experience in carrying on the duties of his position. If the business is not conducted fairly and helpfully, the employer will lack respect and loyalty. If the employee fails to see evidence that his employer is genuinely concerned about his welfare and progress, it is not human nature that he will be especially concerned about the welfare or progress of his employer's business.

A good man will succeed and forge ahead if well-trained, guided and backed by his superior officer, the manager of the loan office. If the manager lacks the executive qualities he should possess, then there are grave chances that the assistant manager will fail to attain success, whereas, otherwise he would have done so. The higher-up employers must, therefore, recognize that every loan office manager is the teacher and keeper of the members of his service staff and that their failure is his failure and their success is his success. He is responsible for seeing that none shall fall by the wayside who can be retained in advance and if they fall, it is, in most cases, because the employer lacks qualities that he should possess. It is, therefore, the duty of the employer higher-up to advise and consult with the loan manager, point out his duties and opportunities and show correct methods for training and developing his service staff. When an employee is to be added to the service staff it is well that not only the loan manager, but the supervisor should personally participate in his selection and employment. The experience will be valuable and constructive to the loan manager and it will give the supervisor the advantage of having the loan manager committed by approval and will further obligate him to help in every way he can in training the employee to qualify for his position. It is a fair statement that the matter of employment has not heretofore received the amount of attention that the importance of the subject deserves.

ADDRESSES WANTED

The Master Loan Service, 206 W. Fayette St., Baltimore, Md. will be pleased to know the whereabouts of Fred and Jessie Pelham, who formerly lived at 1127 N. Calvert St., Baltimore, Md.

Prior to their residence in Baltimore they lived in Harrisburg, Pa., for a few years and from which they left owing some unpaid accounts.

They are reported to have come originally from Connecticut where some of their relatives presumably still live. Any information in regard to these people will be appreciated if sent to the Master Loan Service, as above, or to the National Secretary.

We would like assistance, especially from Illinois offices, in locating a skip by the name of Herman Carlson. He is middle-aged, tall and well built. He is slightly deaf.

The only work he has ever done is buying, selling and repairing pianos and he will no doubt, be in similar work now.

OHIO

On December 1st the Retail Merchants of Columbus, Ohio held a meeting at the Chittenden Hotel into which were invited the different classes of business represented in Columbus. Among those present were credit men from the department stores, lumber companies, building material supply men, coal men, furniture dealers, plumbers, and even furnace men, and last but not least the members of the Columbus Industrial Lenders Association. The first time in the history of my 20 years experience in the chattel loan business that the retail merchants ever offered an opportunity for the loan men to meet with them.

I feel that our little organization in Columbus, that of the Columbus Industrial Lenders Association which at this time has a membership of ten with a possible seventeen has made much progress and have taken quite a number of the wrinkles out of the space that has existed between the loan men and the Retail Merchants in the years past.

Unfortunately Mr. Smith of The City Finance Co. and myself were the only ones present representing the loan companies. It was surprising to me to know how eager the merchants of the city were to know more about our business and how little they knew of the help we are to them.

Our monthly sheet "The Equity System" contains a summary of what I tried to put over to them. If you think it will be any help and care to use it or any part of it, you are welcome to do so. There is no way to tell you of the different attitude between the loan companies and the furniture stores today in comparison to even a year ago.

In the smaller towns no doubt the managers of the loan companies get to know personally the men who sell furniture or extend credit, while in a larger town where credit men are sometimes changed every six or eight months, it is almost impossible for a loan man to get very well acquainted with them, because there are so many of them. But since that December meeting the merchants are calling up us loan men, giving us the names of some of their customers who are in arrears and whom we can help, and we hope as time goes by that we will be able to even get more closely to them than we are at this time.

I see by the Industrial Lender News that other sections of the country seem to be profiting by getting closer together with the credit extending institutions.

BUDGET PLAN BUYING

FROM THE CLEVELAND TRUST COMPANY
BUSINESS BULLETIN
November, 1923

Retail purchasing on the installment plan has recently become far more general than it used to be. It has existed for many years, but until the advent of the automobile it was largely confined to clothing, household furniture, and jewelry. In those earlier years installment buying made its greatest appeals to a rather improvident class of purchasers, and because the risks were great, the prices charged were high, and the rates of interest were large.

As soon as automobiles began to be purchased in large numbers by people of moderate means, installment buying became more common, more respectable and better organized. The purchase of an automobile required an expenditure representing a considerable proportion of the annual income of the average family, and it was entirely reasonable that well-organized methods should be developed for making possible these purchases by means of partial payments financed at moderate rates of interest.

During the five years following the termination of the war the financing of automobile purchases developed at a rapid rate all over the country, and attained such magnitude that it became an important business by itself. Then early in 1924 the influence of the great gold imports, which had been under way for three years, began to become evident in form of reduced interest rates, and immediately there came into existence large numbers of new financing companies engaged in extending credit to retail purchasers of many sorts of commodities.

The profits of the finance companies extending the credits for such purchases have been large, and their losses small. As a result many new companies have been organized to employ similar methods for financing other sorts of retail buying. They are now vigorously competing for business in the retail selling of clothing, furniture, jewelry, radio sets, refrigerators, vacuum cleaners, sewing machines, and even domestic coal, house paint, and table linen.

There are at least three important elements of weakness in this phase of the present business situation. The first is the obvious danger that exists when millions of people of slight financial means have mortgaged their future incomes for present satisfactions. The second element of danger lies in the personalities of the organizers and executives of many of the new finance companies. The business is one that calls for the cold, impartial credit judgment of the experienced commercial banker. The newer companies have largely been organized by men who are primarily salesmen and promoters. They have been notably successful while prosperity has been general, competition easy, and credit cheap. It is to be doubted if they can continue to be equally fortunate when these conditions change.

The third, and probably the most important problem connected with the present extended spread of partial payment plans as stimulants of retail selling, is that the operations of the finance companies are made possible by credits extended by banks on terms that will certainly have to be made more rigorous whenever interest rates advance to higher levels. The rise of finance companies came at a time when banks were anxiously seeking employment for surplus funds, and as a result the business has secured its financial accommodations more easily, at lower rates, and with slighter guarantees than those available to established concerns in trade, commerce, and industry. It is clear that such a condition can be only temporary, and it seems probable that the spread of installment selling will ultimately be checked, not because of the failure of the purchasers to meet their payments, but rather because of the refusal of banks to continue indefinitely their present policies of lending to the finance companies.

DOES THE SMALL LOAN BUSINESS HELP MERCHANTS?

It is perhaps a common fault with all of us that we are so engrossed in our own particular business to such an extent that we do not understand nor appreciate the fact that the other fellow's business helps us directly or indirectly. It is easier for us to realize that our business helps the other fellow. But we all must agree that any enterprise to endure and progress, must fit into the scheme of things and be helpful.

At a recent meeting of the Retail Credit Men, who represented various lines of merchandizing in Columbus, Ohio, B. L. Thuma, who has been Manager of the Columbus office of The Capitol Loan Company for twenty years, explained how the loan business benefited other commercial and professional lines, and why closer coöperation was desirable. We quote his remarks relative to this subject and the statements made there.

"I agree with the statement of the Secretary of your National Association that 99% of the people are honest. This being so, it is evident that when people borrow money from us it is because they have actual need of it. My experience of many years in the loan business is that they have certain definite and specific uses for money, for, as a matter of fact, the applicant usually tells us exactly why he desires a loan.

"All of us who are engaged in handling credit in any form, know of the many, many different circumstances and reasons why our customers need help in one way or another to tide them over the rough spots.

"I think perhaps we who are engaged in the loan business see more of the perplexing things that come up in many households than others, because when in need of money—cash—there can be so many worthy uses for it.

"A reason frequently given is to pay past due accounts. When bad luck, such as sickness, losses, changes, etc., comes, bills have a way of piling up. We all know these things from our personal experiences. To pay scattered bills and maintain good credit is a proper and sensible thing to do. So to arrange a loan for these purposes (the payments of which are made in one place and on terms which may be met without hardship or deprivation) is also a sensible thing to do. We make a large number of this class of loans.

"Borrowing to pay bills is, of course, but one of many reasons given, and time will not permit me to discuss in detail all the benefits that chattel loan companies give to every line of merchandising (for I feel that none are excepted). Besides making loans to be used for paying off balances on pianos, furniture, automobiles, to settle grocery bills, to pay hospital bills, etc., we have furnished the money for the purchase of a burial lot and to pay undertaker's bill where no insurance was carried.

"Our funds are also used for profitable purposes by our customers. We have had accounts where the money was used as the down payment on a modest home, thus affording a start toward home-ownership. One instance I have in mind, was a $200 loan for down payment on land contract, that resulted in the family acquiring three pieces of property in this city. Many people have come to realize that they can borrow our money and save money by purchasing clothing, furniture and supplies of merchandise of various kinds for cash. Also, when paying cash they may buy where and what they want, which may not be done if credit is needed.

"While the reasons for people to make loans and the uses to which the money is put, have been given you in general terms, I hope I have demonstrated the point that practically all of the money we lend goes into regular business channels and into the cash drawers of the merchants and business men. This might be more impressive, if expressed in terms of dollars per year. I estimate that the loan companies in the city of Columbus, lend about $1,500,000 per year, which goes for the purposes named, that is, is spent in Columbus and with Columbus merchants.

"So then since you men give credit to the same people to whom we give credit, it must follow that a better understanding between the merchants and loan men is desirable."

We will conclude this subject with the statement that different men present at this Credit Men's meeting frankly said that they had neither understood, nor appreciated the service of small loan operations, but now had a different viewpoint regarding our business. In issuing this monthly bulletin it is our desire to show you as best we may the merits of small loan service, its extent and the possibilities for greater expansion.

L. K. Osborne, President of The Capitol Loan Company, spent the week of November 16th attending a meeting of the Executive Committee of the American Industrial Lenders Association in New York City. These members also met with heads of the remedial loan division of the Russell Sage Foundation and the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations for discussion of plans and policies for the general good of "small loan" service.

The Sage Foundation, which is purely philanthropical, together with other social welfare organizations, have given aid in educational ways and have been active in securing the passage of legislation to govern the industrial loan business in various states. Long ago they recognized the necessity for small loan service and have given practical help and influence in securing proper safeguards and laws to govern it.

In an early issue we intend to write a more thorough description of the activities of the Russell Sage Foundation and its far-reaching influence for public good.

LOAN COMPANY GIVES CHANCE TO TIDE OVER CRISES

That familiar expression, "not broke but badly bent" when referring to the state of the pocketbook applies well to many persons who, through illness, loss of work or some emergency that makes the income small and the bills large, are short of the cash necessary to pay pressing bills. Such persons, however, may quickly have the bend in their finances straightened out by calling at the Capitol Loan Company, 141½ E. Washington St., and arranging to borrow money up to $300.

"Many persons do not understand the difference between industrial loans and the loans made by a bank," Lee L. Bishop, manager of the Capitol Loan Company said. "If they did, they would not hesitate to take advantage of industrial loans. Only 8 per cent of all our adult population have checking accounts, it is estimated, and of this number only 5 per cent can borrow at banks. This means that more than 90 per cent of the adult population does not possess collateral that a bank would accept as security for a loan, and these persons must borrow money elsewhere.

"This is the gap filled by the industrial lending company such as ours, for we make loans in amounts up to $300 on non-fluid security or unindorsed notes. The principal of this amount is payable in small monthly installments, and while the interest rate is somewhat higher than that charged by banks, each payment cuts down the amount of interest."—Reader Ad Specimen in Indianapolis Times, July 21, 1925.

MANAGER CITES LOAN FIRM AID TO SALARIED MEN

MEANS THEY CAN BORROW SAME AS ANY BUSINESS, SAYS LEE BISHOP

"There are people who think that if a man hasn't the money to pay cash for what he wants he ought to do without it," Lee L. Bishop, manager of the Capitol Loan Company, 141½ Washington St., said in explaining the service offered by industrial loan companies such as the Capitol.

"That is good advice as far as it goes, but there are places where it won't work. For instance, what is a man going to do if he is buying a home, paying for furniture or spending all he earns each week just supporting a family—as many do—if he loses his job, is taken sick or has to meet some unexpected obligation that calls for an outlay of more cash than he has been able to accumulate? A business firm, in times of emergency, borrows money from a bank, but the man who has nothing to give as security except his household goods cannot do this. There are just two ways for him to tide over such an emergency. The first is to go to friends or relatives and borrow money from them, but, in most cases, when he does this he incurs an obligation that is never entirely discharged, even when the debt is paid.

"The second method is to borrow money as any man borrows money to run his business, only where the business man can go to the bank, the man who needs funds for his personal use can go to the loan company. We take, as security, a mortgage on his household goods, just as a bank takes a man's note, and advance him the money to meet the emergency that has come up. He pays his bills, gets on his feet again and repays us in small monthly payments with interest of 3½ per cent a month figured on the unpaid balance of the debt. Such a method of payment does not work a hardship on the borrower and frequently saves him from making a real sacrifice in order to obtain the cash he needs."—Reader Ad Specimen, Indianapolis Times, March 25, 1925.

BUSINESS AIDED BY BORROWING

Loan Company Manager Points Out Need

"Our city, our Nation, in fact, the business of the world, is conducted on borrowed money," remarked L. L. Bishop, manager of the Capitol Loan Company, 141½ E. Washington St.

"There are very few firms," he continued, "that conduct their business without borrowing; very few—Henry Ford is a notable exception, and yet, how borrowed money did help Henry at one time!

"The loan business is therefore a necessary one, and, conducted as it is nowadays, under the direct supervision of the loan and industrial departments of the banks, it is no longer in ill repute. It is a business which rests very largely on character—the worthiness of the borrower. A man's past record of paying his bills, his attitude, his intentions, all count quite as much as his security, which may be a piano, auto or some article of household goods.

"Our borrowers come from every walk of life—they are not merely the so-called working man. We have professional men, farmers, proprietors of small businesses, as well as toilers in humble lines. Because of the coöperation that now exists among high-class loan companies, these persons all are treated absolutely fairly and with consideration," Bishop concluded.—Specimen Reader Ad, Indianapolis Times, Dec. 28, 1925.

DAVIES SELECTED HEAD OF KIWANIS

KIWANIANS PICK OFFICERS FOR 1926—DAVIES SUCCEEDS DR. BANNON

Fred Davies was elected president of the Kokomo Kiwanis Club yesterday noon, the meeting having been moved up this week from Thursday, the club's regular time for meeting.

Mr. Davies, together with the other officers chosen will be installed at the first meeting in January. All will serve one year.

Other officers elected were: Vice president, Ernest Ellis; treasurer, Charles Shewmon; directors, Lincoln Coles, Fred Stradling and Ralph Hansell.

The choice of Mr. Davies to lead the local club's destinies for the next year was regarded by all the charter and older members as having been peculiarly fitting. A charter member for nearly six years, he has been identified with all the club's activities and is looked upon as one of the organization's wisest councillors.

Served as Secretary

During the year just drawing to a close Mr. Davies served the club as its secretary, an office involving a great amount of labor and sacrifice of hours that might be devoted to private affairs, and in doing so established a record for faithful performance of duty. In 1920, when M. L. Rosenbush was president, Mr. Davies served as vice-president and by virtue of this office on the board of directors. He also has served as chairman of the important membership committee and chairman of the program committee.

He is manager of the Kokomo branch of the Legal Loan Company.

Spirited Contest

For the first time since its organization in May, 1919, a nominating committee of the Kokomo Kiwanis club offered an opposition ticket from which the members might make a choice. The balloting yesterday was spirited and close and C. V. Hinshaw was defeated by Mr. Davies by a vote of 59 to 30.—Kokomo Dispatch, Nov. 26, 1925.

LOAN COMPANY SERVES NEEDS

Capitol Company Head Tells of Many Helps

The familiar saying that "a penny saved is a penny earned" might be added to with another, "a penny borrowed is a penny earned," according to Lee L. Bishop, manager of the Capitol Loan Company, 141½ E. Washington St. For in times when money is scarce, and the housewife seeks some way to increase the family income, she may come to this industrial loan company and borrow an amount sufficient to furnish a spare room in the house and rent it out at a profit.

The rent from the furnished room will more than pay back the loan in monthly payments arranged by the company, and the borrower will not only have the furniture, but will be provided with a source of income whenever she needs it.

Such borrowing is, Bishop says, not only a method of saving money but a method of earning it, and as such is worth the consideration of every thrifty housewife.—Reader Ad. Specimen, Indianapolis Times, May 5, 1925.

We know he will receive a hearty welcome from the lenders wherever he goes.

We welcome the new publication and hope its future will be useful in the realization of the aims of its founders.

DAYTON, OHIO

A third year has begun.

Officers for the next twelve months of 1926 have been elected. Mr. Walter L. Wilson, local representative for the Capital Loan Company of Columbus, Ohio, as President, supplanting Mr. B. F. Wunsch of the Commonwealth Loan Company of Indianapolis, Indiana, retiring. The writer will succeed himself as Secretary and Treasurer.

Once again we are standing at the threshold of a new year. Having come through a most successful and prosperous one marked with steady progress.

The new officers feel they have real work ahead to qualify to the high standards set by previous administrations. However, all indications and present enthusiasm point out—"no stone will be left unturned in making 1926 the GREATER YEAR for the Industrial Banker.

For the benefit of those not fully conversant with our Association affairs we are setting out a few hi-lites of 1925.

1. 100% members in Dayton Industrial Lenders Association.
2. 100% members in Credit Bureau and Retail Credit Men's National Association.
3. Over 8,000 new loans made during 1925 with SAFETY.
4. Over 11,000 old customers reloaned without fear of doubling up.
5. NO double accounts reported.
6. Closer coöperation between members. Greater interest shown for the improvement of the Small Loan Business.
7. Unequalled service given to the borrower and merchant during 1925.
8. Harmony existant in the affairs of the Lender more than anything else has been conducive to the stability and elevation of the profession.
9. Intelligent GRANTING OF CREDIT is the underlying principle of every transaction.
10. The borrower is taught budgeting. Given a greater knowledge of household financing; more firmly implanted with the virtues of good character, "honesty, thrift and healthy progress."
11. Merchants enthusiastic about efforts of Lender to curtail credit abuses. though not ordinarily over gracious to a foreign pro-organization, now turning to the Industrial Lender for relief and counsel.
12. Competing for Business in Terms of Sale is the butt of each resort to encourage greater buying activity on the part of the unguided public. Regretfully the tend to exploit TERMS, Deferred or Divided Payments as a means of increasing volume is largely responsible for our near broken credit morale. We are reminded that a continued abuse of our merchandising energies will cause a complete break in our credit structure. A CREDIT CHARACTER that has taken years to build. The greater evil is in the kind of good pushed upon the consumer. In many cases the terms of obligations outlive the usefulness of the article sold many times over. Summing up we find a gradual elimination of the time honored reputations sacrificed to the insatiable desires of the grabby merchandisers. We pause for a moment to consider whom may be the true exponents of ideals of fair dealing. The answer comes home swiftly—perhaps the INDUSTRIAL BANKER.
13. Ethical regulation of those who engage in questionable practice and abuse in the credit field must eventually come. The Industrial Lender is now reaping commensurate return from out of legalized conduct and a healthy desire to rise to the ultimate conception of achievement. It only remains a question of how long the consumer will tolerate the impositions of the mercantile armada before it too will be legalized and equitably administered. Not to throttle good coming from competition—but to bring to life a few sound economic principles—the vital of each being, FAIR DEALING.

These changes have not and will not come from idle effort.

No community, no matter how small, where Industrial Lenders are engaged can be without its field Association. Watching over the affairs of the borrower and over burdened debtor and serving in their ever helpful capacity. The Industrial Lenders time the pulse of our National Prosperity no longer tolerating the corrupt corpuscle of unfairness. Giving voice, through its splendid field forces, to National Sentiment, a task previously impossible for laxity of field organizations.

Dayton's rise has been phenomenal. It has embraced a strenuous program from an idea, plus constancy of purpose, to a monument of great strength. One heartily commendable to any who are out to realize the most of their capabilities.

In serving a third year we hope we may have the opportunity of assisting others to organization. We are not true Lenders unless our services are far reaching and productive.

To ALL we wish a happy and prosperous 1926—full of every genuine accomplishment.

J. D. Burwell,
Secretary, The Dayton Industrial Lenders Association.

PERSONAL FINANCE CO. BUYS SUN FINANCE CO.

The Sun Finance Company, 420 Fayette Title and Trust Bldg., Corner of Main and Pittsburgh Sts., Uniontown, Pa., previously owned by local financiers has been purchased by the Personal Finance Company and will be operated under the supervision of the Beneficial Operating Bureau of New York. Mr. C. D. Campbell. who has been in charge of the office, will continue as loan manager under the new ownership. Uniontown is a progressive city and the sale of this loan office will make it possible because of the increased capital available to render even a greater service to the necessitous borrowers of that community.

You might likewise be interested to know that Beneficial Operating Bureau of New York has recently set up its supervision work in five departments and the supervisors in charge are:

Northern Department—A. G. Zimmerman, 712 Wiss Bldg., 671 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

Eastern Department—Mr. E. R. Klein, 317 Perry Bldg., 16th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

Southern Department—Mr. E. F. Moore, 316 Perry Bldg., 16th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

Central Department—Mr. C. G. Liggett, Commercial Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

Western Department—Mr. L. C. Dunn, 508 Chicago Stock Exchange Bldg., 30 North La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

This department management will make possible closer contact between lender and borrower and we believe, ever increasing service to the communities in which the offices are located.

It seems to us that items of this character should be encouraged and be made known to all members for news of this character indicative of progress will be thankfully received by the editor. We shall be glad to have your thought of the matter.

Very truly yours,
Charles H. Watts, President.

The Editor regards the above item real news and will welcome similar items from other organizations for publication any time.

RETAIL CREDIT MEN AFFILIATE INSTALMENT HOUSE ACCOUNTS

A clearance bureau of instalment accounts is to be added to the reference clearance bureau of the Associated Retail Credit Men of New York City if present plans go through. The Association has announced that 100 of the better class instalment houses had been requested to send representatives to a dinner at Hotel Pennsylvania, January 26.

This bureau is planning to meet the problem of extending credit to individuals who may have excellent references but at the same time are obligated in different ways.

One of the great values of the new instalment group will be, it is pointed out, that the division will have on file thousands of names of people who have already purchased on an instalment basis.

PENNSYLVANIA

Department of Justice

Harrisburg

December 14, 1925.

Mr. G. H. Orth,
Chief, Bureau of Private Banks,
Harrisburg, Penna.

Dear Sir:

I have your letter asking "if the Small Loans Act is violated by a licensee who is also a pawn broker and by reason of holding the two licenses makes loans under both licenses that total more than $300." I suppose, of course, you mean that such loans are made to the same person.

The Act of June 17, 1915, P. L. 1012, as amended by the Act of June 4, 1919, P. L. 375, regulates the business of loaning money in sums of $300 or less in this Commonwealth, and a licensee in the conduct of a business under the provisions of the act dare not make loans to one and the same person that amount in the aggregate and in force at the same time to more than $300.

This applies, however, only to the business of loaning money in sums of $300 or less, as defined and regulated by the Act of 1915 and its amendment, and cannot be made to apply to any other business.

That the act does not apply to pawn brokers is settled by the act itself, for it provides "that this act shall not apply to any person, persons, partnership, association, or corporation operating under the laws relating to banks, trust companies, building associations, or pawn brokers."

The reason for this provision is stated by the Superior Court as follows:

"The exemption of banks, trust companies, building associations and pawn brokers from its operation doubtless arose out of the fact that the business of these institutions and persons is already regulated by law."

A licensee under the Small Loans Act may loan money in sums of $300 or less, either with or without security.

A pawn broker is one "engaged in the business of receiving property in pledge as a security for money or other thing advanced to the pawner or pledger."

The two businesses are entirely different and each is regulated by law and there is nothing in the law to prevent one person having a license to carry on each of said businesses. A person having the two licenses, one under the Small Loans Act, and one as a pawn broker, is entitled to carry on business under each license and to exercise the rights given by each. This would enable him to loan a person up to $300 under a Small Loan license and to transact business with the same person as a pawn broker, even though the aggregate of the business exceeds $300. The transactions, however, should be kept entirely separate and apart so that there is a complete record of each business.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) J. W. Brown,
Deputy Attorney General.

CONNECTICUT

The mid-winter meeting of the Connecticut Association was held at the Hotel Startfield, Bridgeport, Connecticut, January 27th, with Chairman Lovegrove presiding.

Owing to the fact that Deputy Bank Commissioner, Lester Shippe, who was desirous of giving a little talk, was present, a motion was made and seconded that the reading of the minutes of the last meeting and the roll call be dispensed with, so that the members present could have the opportunity of listening to the remarks and suggestions made by Mr. Shippe. The speaker, in his talk, enlightened the Lenders as to the necessity of extreme caution and care necessary in conducting the small loan business. On motion of Mr. O'Brien a rising vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Shippe.

The chairman then declared an intermission after which the meeting was again called to order by Mr. T. C. O'Brien, acting as temporary chairman, and on motion of Mr. Lovegrove, the regular order of business, as prescribed by the by-laws was dispensed with, and the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted in the election of the following: Chairman, H. G. McMullin, Equitable Industrial Loan So., Htfd.; vice-chairman, M. J. Connors, Peoples Loan Society, Waterbury; treasurer, E. H. Sanderson, New Eng. Equity Corp., Hartford; secretary, W. J. Miller, Beneficial Loan Society, Hartford. Executive Committee: F. H. Lovegrove, Bridgeport; T. C. O'Brien and H. P. Stephenson, New Haven. After the election of officers, owing to the absence of the incoming chairman, the newly elected vice-chairman, Mr. Connors, took the chair.

Edgar P. East, National Chairman, American Industrial Lenders Association, having arrived was called to give the Association the benefit of his experience in his various travels to the State Conventions and his advice regarding the formation of more coöperative work on the part of the Lenders towards the elimination of the unworthy borrowers and the avoidance of duplication of loans, which is occasioned by the lack of the Lenders' willingness to consult with each other.

After Mr. East's very valuable advice, various other members spoke along the same lines and heartily endorsed the suggestions made by the National Chairman.

Another matter that was brought up by the National Chairman was the meeting together of the various State Chairmen at stated intervals preferably January, May and September. The September meeting to be in conjunction with the National Convention at the same time and place. A motion was made by Mr. Lovegrove, seconded by Mr. Stephenson, that this Association go on record as being in favor of these meetings of the State Chairmen at the expense of the State Association.

Also that a communication be sent the Ohio secretary advising him of the action of the Connecticut Association, the purpose in doing so to show the coöperative feeling that the Connecticut body held towards the Ohio Association, who were on this same day voting the same proposition at their convention in Columbus, Ohio.

The matter of "Uniform Papers" was then brought up and, on motion of Mr. East, it was decided that a committee of three be appointed by the chairman and that said committee obtain copies of all the papers used by the various lenders throughout the state and that the same be gone over carefully with a view of selecting the most suitable papers. The same to be submitted to an attorney for legal opinion and the bank commissioner for his approval. It was also suggested by Mr. East, motion made and duly carried that a set of the papers finally adopted be sent to Col. Hodson for his perusal.

A motion was made and duly carried that the secretary be instructed to write to the secretary of the Associations in Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine regarding the meeting together of the various chairmen at given times with a view to closer relations and also advising them of the changing of the name from "Tri-State Meetings" to the "New England Conference."

On motion of Mr. Lovegrove, the matter of having the "Code of Ethics" which had been printed by authority of the Association, placed in the hands of each member was taken up and on motion duly carried, the secretary was instructed to mail a copy of the same to the State Banking Commissioners, said copy to be framed at the expense of the Association. Also to advise the members that these printed copies were in the hands of the secretary and could be obtained for the sum of $2.50.

A motion was made and duly carried that a letter be sent to the Russell Sage Foundation and the National Secretary advising them as to the election of the new officers of the Connecticut Association, together with their names and addresses.

Motion was also made and duly carried that the chairman appoint a member of the Association in each city to interview the advertising men on the various newspapers for the purpose of having them carry all advertising of the members under the "Heading" or "caption" or "Loans up to $300." The purpose of this being to segregate or separate the business of Small Loans from any other type of loans.

Mr. East brought up the idea of the chairman appointing or requesting volunteers to prepare and read a paper on any subject that might be helpful to the business at each meeting of the Association. The said paper to be forwarded to the publisher of the LENDERS NEWS for publication. Motion was duly made and seconded that this suggestion be carried out and Mr. O'Brien kindly volunteered to furnish the paper at our next meeting.

A motion was then made that the next meeting of the Association be held at the Taft Hotel at New Haven on Wednesday, March 24th, and that a dinner and dance be held following the meeting and that the meeting shall be called to order promptly at 10 a. m., adjourned at 1 o'clock, reconvened at 2:30 p. m., and quit promptly at 5 o'clock and dinner and speaking at 6:30 p. m.; dancing to follow at 9:30 p. m.

The National Chairman advised the appointment of two members to act as a grievance committee and two other members as a good will committee. A motion was made and duly carried approving the National Chairman's suggestion and authorizing the chairman to appoint said committees. The chairman then entertained a motion for adjournment, the same being duly carried.

The following members were present: E. P. East, National Chairman, Richmond, Va.; A. G. Zimmerman, Bene-

Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice, Supreme Court of Georgia was then called upon for a few remarks.

EXCERPTS FROM THE REMARKS OF CHIEF JUSTICE RICHARD B. RUSSELL

"I have no patience with usury, but the existence of usury does not depend altogether upon the rate of interest. Usury may be defined to be the taking or charging, or the attempting to take or charge, a greater rate of interest for the use of money than that allowed by law. This, in effect, is the definition in our State of Georgia, and it is the charging of a rate of interest higher than that allowed by law to which I refer. Legislative bodies, in determining what is usury, necessarily are affected by prevailing conditions at the time that the legislation is required, and what might be a high rate of interest under some conditions or at a particular era in history would not be an exhorbitant charge under different conditions at another time in the history of a people. Usury has been condemned throughout all history, reaching back to the word as employed in Leviticus and Deuteronomy through the history of the Greeks and through Roman jurisprudence. Usury has been denounced both civilly and criminally in the laws of England from the earliest times, and likewise in all of the Colonies which comprised the original thirteen states of the Union. In Georgia the law denounces any makeshift, device, subterfuge or contrivance by which a higher rate for the use of money is imposed upon a borrower than that prescribed by law. But bearing in mind, as I do, that a rate fixed by the wisdom of our lawmakers for the use of money is not usury I have always supported such lending as is fostered by your worthy Association although the rate be high. This for the reason that I hope that from the success of your Association in relieving the poor and oppressed from the 'sharks' that oppress them our lawmakers will in time be able to reduce the rate of interest much lower than 3½% per month, and that your Association will itself cheerfully agree to this reduction by reason of the diminution in a large degree of the risks now attending your business.

"I believe your Association has served and will continue to serve a most useful purpose to that portion of our citizens whose necessities frequently expose them to perfect outrage at the hands of usurers, who without conscience and without mercy frequently take advantage of hunger and misery, sickness and death, to ply a most nefarious business and drive unconscionable bargains at the expense of those whose urgent needs make them absolutely helpless in the hands of the lender. The law of Georgia does not allow subterfuges or contrivances, it abhors masks and disguises, and I hope to see the day when we shall have in this State absolutely crushed, convicted and jailed the horde of so-called money lenders who under the pretence of buying salaries or other choses in action are charging hundreds and thousands of our laboring people from 10 to 20 per cent per month, or from 120 to 240 per cent per annum upon the miserable pittance that the desperate circumstances of the borrower forces them to procure upon any terms. This is outlawry in defiance of the statutes of the State, and wonderful to say, is rewarded by exemption from the license tax which as legalized lenders such as you are compelled to pay. Your lending at 3½ per cent is legalized. It is not usury because if you comply, as I believe you do, with the provisions of the act of 1920 your business is legalized,—it is in accord with a law which the legislature, after calm and deliberate consideration, has thought not to be inimicable to the interests of the State. The lawmakers were obliged to consider, as I do, that in your business there is such an element of hazzard, that the risk of collection is so great, and the many losses so certain, that it would be impossible for a large class of people to obtain money anywhere, even in the direst necessity, at a rate even approaching eight per cent per annum. The legislature also had in mind, as I firmly believe, that if the "sharks" are legally exterminated the element of risk will be so greatly diminished that it will be possible for legalized lenders, as you, to make a greater profit upon your money at a lesser rate of interest than is now possible, with the rate of 3½ per cent.

At the conclusion of Judge Russell's address, Toastmaster Von Nunes introduced Mr. Bennett, superintendent of Georgia State Banking Department, by requesting him to arise. He graciously complied and was received with much applause.

The next speaker called upon was Judge L. F. McClelland, esteemed judge of the Municipal Court of Atlanta, whose extemporaneous address was in part as follows:

"MR. TOASTMASTER, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

"Several days ago your honorable toastmaster gave me an invitation to attend this banquet and assured me that I would not be called upon to make a speech or even to talk and to my surprise when I looked on the program this evening I was slated as a speaker with these other renowned, experienced and eloquent speakers, Judge Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice, Supreme Court, Hon. B. S. Barker, Executive Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce. After I had noticed my name on the program as a speaker, I turned to my good and resourceful friend, Brother Barker, and asked him what on earth to talk about, and he suggested that I say a word or two on three of the mostly-discussed topics of the day, so under his advice I will say a few words on what I deem the most popular topics of the day and which in their order of importance are first Florida, second Prohibition, third Evolution.

"Now I will dispose of the subject of Florida by telling you a little story I heard a minister tell a short time ago. He said that he had a friend who told him that he dreamed he died and went to hell; after he had been there a few days and after he had inspected the whole heating plant, he noticed that there were people from every state in the Union except Florida. He asked the chief fire stoker what this meant, and why there were no people from Florida there. This prince of the lower regions told him that he had not looked about as closely as he should, otherwise he would have found them, and suggested that he take a walk just over the hill and look down into the valley and he would see the Floridians headquarters. He did as suggested and to his surprise and consternation he saw nestled in the valley an enormous cage that was packed to its capacity with citizens of Florida. He could not figure it out, so he went back to the chief stoker and asked why he kept these poor fellows in solitary confinement and his reply was: why, if we turned those guys out of that cage they would subdivide hell and sell it for paradise lots in less than a month.

"Now, as to Prohibition, I shall likewise dispose of it by a little story I heard a short time ago. The story goes that a train enroute from Griffin to Atlanta, Georgia, stopped at a small railroad station and a man got aboard who was in common slang parlance lit; that he staggered up the aisle of the train in search of a seat and as it happened sat down by an Episcopal minister who was dressed in the usual attire of a minister of that Church and as the train sped on to Atlanta this new passenger became very dry and thirsty and wanting to be a good sport offered the minister a drink, whereupon the minister became very indignant and upbraided the man for so grossly insulting him and at the same time informing the generous one that he never touched a drop of liquor. I am a Prohibitionist. I have always fought and always will fight the manufacture and sale of any kind of liquor and have never been drunk in my life. The fellow, in surprise, looked the minister over and said, you are a liar. You are drunk now. You have your collar on backwards and do not know it.

"The subject of Evolution. Now I come to the serious part of the discussion. It is appropriate and pleasingly appropriate that a judge of the Municipal Court of Atlanta should address your body at this your fifth annual banquet of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association. The Municipal Court of Atlanta evoluted from that diabolical system of Justice Courts that once made life miserable for the poor and oppressed in our city; and your Association evoluted from a band of money lenders in Atlanta who connived and conspired with the judges and officers of these justice courts by extortion through threats and by imprisonment, made the lives and homes of the poor and unfortunate of our city who had fallen through want, into their clutches; places of torture and suffering.

"For the information of some of you I am going to relate to you a little history from real life of these Justice Courts and these money sharks that held high carnival in our fair city, and whose conduct and oppression became so terrible that a revolution was brought about. It is said that the one thing that brought this nefarious practice to a climax was a case where a gentleman of this city who held a responsible position in one of the department stores, needed some money and applied for a loan, he was charged ten per cent or more per month and finally reached the point where he could not pay the interest he then applied to another money lender named Peter for a loan to pay Paul and that he was required to mortgage some of his furniture in order to obtain this loan. Soon after, he was forced to allow this furniture to be sold at a pittance; he borrowed more money to keep up the interest on the first loan and it was then that he mortgaged the last article of furniture in his already poverty-stricken home and upon these two loans, secured from these money sharks he paid interest at the exacted exhorbitant rate that these merciless extortioners demanded. He could not seem to satisfy these money sharks who then sought to foreclose on the last vestage of furniture in his home, the officers were removing the articles from this already scantily furnished abode, and when the officer seized the baby's bed and as he made an effort to remove it from the room, the frail little grief-stricken wife and mother who had suffered and sacrificed to help her husband meet the payments and demands of these blood suckers; seeing the bed of her baby being taken, pluckily seized an ax and defied the officer to further molest her home and shelter. The officer realizing the dire extremity of this little woman and seeing murder in her wild and frantic eyes, left the home and went back to the Justice Court and procured a warrant against the woman for interfering with an officer in the discharge of his duty, and this was the match that lighted the fire of the revolution among the good people of Atlanta and thanks to the Grand Juries, Judges of the higher courts, the honorable lawyers, and citizens of Atlanta these law breakers, robbers and home wreckers of these days were prosecuted and made to pay the penalty for their evil doing. The Justice Courts were abolished, laws were enacted to prevent the repetition of these diabolical systems, and thank God there has evoluted from this cesspool of pollution two magnificent institutions—one is the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association and the other is the magnificent and efficient system of Municipal Courts in Georgia." Applause.

"Ladies and gentlemen, I would be unfair and unjust if I did not say to you that there were two or three judges of the Justice Courts, and some of their bailiffs as well as a very few of the money lenders who were high class gentlemen and who were at all times ready to do the right thing." (Applause.)

"Gentlemen of this Association, I say to you that the Russell Sage Foundation could not have dreamed of the greatness of this monument it builded and that you are so graciously and loyally preserving.

"I have investigated and with a great deal of interest and pleasure the law under which you operate. I want to say to you that if you follow the letter of that statute and the spirit of this law you are not only earning for yourself a dignified and honest livelihood but you are doing a service to that class of people for whose protection this great Sage Foundation was founded (applause) that no other Association in all the world can possibly render (great applause). In conclusion let me beg and admonish you not to allow the unscrupulous to become members of your Association who will take a short cut to violate this law to get a little more interest. Keep your own hands clean and coöperate with each other and vigorously prosecute those who would attempt to bring into disrepute this magnificent system you are fostering. (Applause.)

"I want to thank you, gentlemen, for inviting me here and to assure you that I have enjoyed the festivities of this occasion more than I can express.

"I thank you."

The concluding speaker of the evening was Hon. B. S. Barker, executive secretary of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce:

"Mr. Toastmaster, Ladies and Gentlemen:—It is with great pleasure that I accepted the invitation to make you a brief address tonight, as I am vitally interested in what you are trying to do.

"The first thing which attracted my attention is the high methods and clean practices that your group of small bankers have ever carried out in Atlanta, this has resulted in the sympathy and support of a wide influence in your favor, not only from prominent citizens, but from officials of Atlanta and the State of Georgia. I note with pleasure tonight the presence of Chief Justice R. B. Russell of the Supreme Court, of State Examiner Thos. R. Bennett, of State Banking, Attorney Carl N. Davie, as well as the presence of Judge L. F. McClelland, of the Municipal Court, and others, which I know signifies their full sympathy and interest in the work in which you are engaged.

"Salary buyers, high rate lenders are in my opinion one of the causes of domestic troubles and often cause great hardship and distress to the wife and children of the working man. The illegitimate lenders do not require the wife to sign—in fact, they do not want the wife to know of the transaction, and learn of it when the husband's salary is tied up, often for several weeks, and many times a good job is lost; it is then that the innocent wife and children are made to suffer. These bankers, as I look at them at this function members of this splendid organization, make it a family affair. They require both the husband and wife to sign, and make loans where it will help and relieve distress. They are lenient and treat those in need and those that have sickness in the family with great consideration.

"I think you have a splendid organization and are doing a wonderful work. Atlanta is indebted to you for the great service you are rendering its people. You have at all times the whole-hearted support of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce in working out a helpful financial plan which benefits a certain class of our citizens who have no opportunity whatever of securing loans from the larger banks.

"So long as your business is carried on along the same high plane as I am sure applies to your methods today, the Chamber of Commerce will continue their full support in your behalf."

All addresses were extemporaneous. After much applause the hall was cleared and the dance began with many Charleston dancers present. Many friends of those present at the banquet were invited to attend the ball, and there were approximately one hundred couples on the floor. Noise making favors were in abundance. Along with fruit punch with, and without helped to put every one in a happy mood. The music was delightful and extraordinarily high class and inspiring to both the old and the young.

At twelve midnight a luncheon of sandwiches, cakes and fruit punch was served during intermission.

Everyone was going strong when the rendition of Home Sweet Home spelled finis.

The fifth annual was a delightful affair and many new friends were made.

MARYLAND

The Maryland Industrial Lenders Association held its first 1926 meeting in the Board Room of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, Tuesday, January 19th, at 7:30 P. M. The largest crowd ever to attend a monthly meeting was in attendance. Treasurer Goldrick made a report of the financing of the dinner dance in November, a deficit of $9.50 was reported.

Chairman Hood gave a short but snappy talk on the financing of the Association so that it might carry on without hindrance for the want of funds, and promised that no further deficit would occur during his administration. We hope everyone will join wholeheartedly in helping Mr. Hood keep good his promise.

Chairman Holden of Publicity reported that he had been successful in getting news items of interest in two Baltimore Newspapers, one Cumberland and Hagerstown paper. Good work, George, keep it up!

Law Committee, Chairman Gardner, reported that he was about ready to roll up his sleeves and get to work on several matters of importance to Licensed Lenders in Maryland. We expect to hear from the good work of Chester Gardner frequently from now on.

Viligance Committee Chairman Broce reported progress.

Membership Committee Chairman Potter reported his Committee functioning in perfect order.

Mr. Rosenfeld of the Bonded Finance Company spoke interestingly on collections, the filing of salary assignments, etc.

Upon motion a letter from National Chairman Edgar P. East with regards to a meeting of State Chairman was tabled.

Chairman Hood instructed Mr. Moore of Philadelphia to take the chair for the purpose of a general discussion of "Case One" comprising many elements of credit and collection methods for educative purposes compiled by the Industrial Lenders Technical Institute of New York City.

The consensus of opinion was as follows: The loan should not have been made. The Application Man's investigation was not conducted properly. The collection methods were conducted in a spirit of service. The loan was not profitable and should not be renewed.

HOWARD T. MATTINGLY, Secretary.

NEW JERSEY

The quarterly meeting of the New Jersey Industrial Lenders' Association was held at the Hillwood Inn, Trenton, New Jersey on Thursday, January 21, 1926.

The members were met at the Trenton Station at 10:30 A. M. as guests of the Trenton Lenders' Exchange, and were conducted on a sight seeing tour of Trenton, visiting the many historical points of interest, including a most interesting trip through the Lennox Pottery Works where the world's finest Ming china is produced.

Great difficulty was experienced by the guards in the plant in keeping the members from hypothecating any of the thousand dollar plates. Our friend Van Horn was at the door when the members came out and no one was allowed out until they were thoroughly searched.

After which, the members were driven to the Hillwood Inn where a most delightful luncheon was served to the satisfaction of all present.

After luncheon Mr. Charles H. Watts, President of the Beneficial Operating Bureau of New York City, in his ever pleasing manner, introduced Mr. Dayton Oliphant, one of New Jersey's foremost attorneys, who gave us a most delightful little talk on the ways and means by which the industrial lenders could coöperate with the legal profession of the state and accomplish more and add to the good-will of the community by the careful handling of delinquent accounts. He rather stressed the point of the forceful collection methods of years gone by and implored the members to use more discretion and show more leniency to the delinquent borrowers, who through circumstances, were unable to meet their obligations on the exact date when due.

That Mr. Oliphant's little talk was greatly appreciated by the members, was manifested by their rising vote of thanks, after which Mr. Watts introduced to the members, Mr Leon Henderson, Associate Director of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation of New York City. Mr. Henderson in his talk was very quick in notifying the membership that he was a native of New Jersey, being fortunate enough to be born in Millville, New Jersey, a rather unknown little spot in our fair state that has produced more statesmen and well-known men, such as Mr. Henderson. He gave us a résumé of the activities of the foundation to the present date and their experiences in England. He pointed out that our business was closely allied to the credit or instalment houses of today and that the foundation was at the present time conducting a survey of this business and requested each member of the Association to lend such aid as they possibly could in obtaining information as to the charges made by these instalment houses over and above the retail price of the article in which they dealed. He reported that in several instances, the difference between a retail store and an instalment house was over five hundred per cent and that the foundation is endeavoring to find ways and means of combating this deadly practice to the consumer by exposing this practice through national publicity, rendering a service not only to the community but to the small loan business at large.

The meeting was then called to order by Chairman Alberse and the roll call was responded to by the following members:

American Equity Corporation, Trenton; Beneficial Loan Society, Jersey City; Beneficial Loan Society, Newark; Beneficial Loan Society, Orange; Beneficial Loan Society, Patterson; Beneficial Loan Society, Trenton; Beneficial Loan Society, Elizabeth; Bergin County Loan Association, Hackensack; Community Finance Service, Inc., Elizabeth; Community Finance Service, Inc., Jersey City; Community Finance Service, Inc., Atlantic City; Community Finance Service, Inc., Camden; Community Finance Service, Inc., Newark; Equitale Loan Society, Newark; Gibraltar Loan Society, Newark; Guaranty Loan Company, Camden; Household Finance Service, Inc., Newark; Household Loan Company, Trenton; Max Knobloch Loan Company, Newark; Mercer County Loan Association, Trenton; National Loan Association, Trenton; Newark Cash Credit Company, Newark; Newark Cash Credit Company, Jersey City; New Jersey Finance Company, Jersey City; Peoples Loan Company, Jersey City; Protective Investment Company, Paterson; The Van Horn Agency, New Brunswick; The Van Horn Agency, Trenton.

Among our guests were Mr. Charles H. Watts, Mr. E. R. Klein, Professor Bell of the Industrial Lenders Technical Institute, Mr. Frederick K. Fisher, Mr. Bumsted, Mr. Leon Henderson of the Russell Sage Foundation, New York City and Mr. William H. Boullt, Superintendent of Community Finance Service, Inc.

Chairman Alberse rendered a very splendid report on the progress of the loan business in the past year and that the fraternal feeling between the state banking department and the members of the Association was becoming more friendly than ever before, and that the department was always willing to coöperate with us and sincerely believes in the members of this Association.

The Secretary reports that he was met with splendid response to his appeal to the membership for a copy of the loan papers as now used by the members for the Executive Committee in determining the ways and means of obtaining uniform papers. He reports that the response of the members to his call for dues was not met in the same way and that there were quite a few members who had not, as yet, forwarded their dues.

The Treasurer reports at the time the office was turned over to him by Mr. Long, that he received from our former Treasurer, the amount of $528.33, which was deposited to the credit of the Association at the Newark Trust Company in Newark.

Receipts to date were $886.67, a total of $1,415. Disbursements $4.55, cash on hand January 21, 1926, $1,410.45. Treasurer's report was ordered filed.

Chairman, William Young, reported through Mr. Hansche, that he had six new applications for membership and that his committee was coöperating with him in every way.

Mr. Watts on behalf of the legislative committee reports that there is nothing stirring at the present time and that the committee was ever watchful and pursuing the waiting tactics.

Mr. Van Horn on behalf of the Committee, appointed for the selection of a seal for the Association, submitted two designs which were passed among the members. Unable to reach a definite decision, the designs were returned to the committee with the power to choose for themselves. Mr. Van Horn on behalf of the Executive Committee offered a written report which was accepted as read and ordered placed in the files. It was regularly moved and seconded that the committee be allowed $500 to defray expenses of the coming annual meeting of the Association to be held in the City of Newark on or about the 18th of March. Said motion was carried. The Secretary then turned over to Mr. Simonsen as Chairman of the Executive Committee, the various sets of loan papers as received from the members for perusal of the Committee.

The following applications were offered by the Secretary for membership in the Association and it was regularly moved and seconded that they be accepted and notification of same be sent to them by the Secretary.

Arrow Loan Society, Hoboken; Montgomery Loan Company, Jersey City; Journal Square Loan Company, Jersey City; Columbia Finance Company, Jersey City; Mutual Benefit Loan Company, Jersey City; Capital Loan Company, Inc., Union City.

Professor Bell of the Industrial Lenders Technical Institute of New York City gave an interesting talk on the work accomplished by the institution which work was further explained by Mr. Frederick K. Fisher of the Beneficial Loan Society. Chairman Van Horn offered a bill of $11.40 expense for this meeting, which upon motion, the Treasurer was ordered to pay.

W. P. Hanshe, Secretary.

LENDERS' SPECIAL WRECKED ON WAY HOME FROM TRENTON MEETING

As far as Messrs. Hansche, Boullt, Warden and Marion of "Community" and Lambert of "Guaranty" are concerned, the activities of the day didn't stop when the quarterly meeting of the New Jersey Industrial Lenders Association adjourned in Trenton on January 21st. Fact of the matter is, the real activities developed on the way home.

Mr. Lambert in the goodness of his heart, invited the other gentlemen to ride home with him to Philadelphia in his car. They all accepted. Everything started out nicely. Lambert's eight-in line, superhetrodine bus purred its way out of Trenton at about 5:30 P. M. It was raining—and therein lies a story. Before the city limits were reached Mr. Lambert playfully tried to chase a cop up a steel girder. The officer, although Irish, seemed to lack a sense of humor and refused to play. What he said made the engine backfire and almost melted the brand new baloon tires. However, with the aid of the fast falling fog, the officer was eluded and the journey resumed.

Now Mr. Lambert had equipped his superhetrodine with one of those new fangled windshield wipers. The mail order house from which he bought it said it would work. Fact, it was guaranteed to do its allotted job. But apparently they had neglected to call the guarantee to the attention of the windshield wiper itself. Be that as it may, the fact remains that the wiper wiped only when the car hit a bump. Mr. Lambert hit enough to assure a fairly clear vision. That seemed to be his definite intention. So engrossed was he in making the darned contrivance work that he bumped off the road and laid the car on its side—ditched, as it were. He claimed that the fog made it impossible for him to see the road. The other men have various opinions of the matter.

In the scramble that followed, voices could be heard inside the car. "Hey, get off my neck," said one. Another was heard to remark, "Gee, Bill I hope you didn't break that $1,000 plate." We just want to make a statement here that during the course of the day the boys had visited the plant of the Lennox Pottery Works where the most expensive Ming Chinaware is made. We want to say also that the Company does not sell at retail from the factory and besides Bill Hansche never had a thousand dollars. Use your own judgment.

As a result of the episode Mr. Warden is sold body, boots and breeches on the theory that a man can get what he wants if he puts himself in the proper frame of mind. To fortify his conclusion he explains that as they left Trenton he kept humming to himself the popular ditty "I'm Sittin' on Top of the World." He just couldn't get his mind off it and sure enough in a short time he found himself "sittin'" on top of the world,—that is, all the world he had any immediate interest in. This particular world was confined to the inside of Mr. Lambert's upset car and was made up of layers or strata just like any world should be. The first layer or strata was Hansche, the Second Boullt—and with Warden sittin' on top.

But to get the proper angle of this upsetting incident it must be considered that Mr. Warden is a feather weight, tipping the scales at about 125 pounds, while Mr. Marion is in the heavy weight class, weighing at about 220. Bill Hansche acted as shock absorber for Boullt and Warden when the car laid down, while Marion tried to displace Lambert in his position at the wheel. Hansche in his scramble for freedom mistook the isenglass for daylight with the result that he shoved one leg through an otherwise perfectly good side curtain. Warden being the nimblest of the lot got clear of the wreck first and when Boullt emerged he was frantically tugging at Marion (the heavy weight) and so far had been able to accomplish little more than pull off the above-mentioned Marion's shoes and socks.

By the time all this had happened the fog had descended in earnest and everything was as dark as the inside of last year's derby. The car was finally set straight with the aid of a five-ton truck that chanced by. Everything was set to continue the journey. There was only one thing that interferred—they couldn't see more than a yard ahead. Time was swiftly passing by and with the prospect of agitated wives, drastic measures were decided upon. Hansche and Boullt were elected to act as guides. They accepted the election reluctantly, having become the least bit suspicious of Mr. Lambert's intentions. They walked slowly, cautiously, down the middle of the road while Lambert followed with his car, using them as "channel buoys," so to speak. In this way they were able to proceed until several more midnight tourists caught up with and passed them. Boullt and Hansche jumped aboard and Captain Lambert played follow the leader. Fortunately the car ahead was going in the proper direction and in the wee small hours our "adventurers in the night" found themselves on familiar ground. What happened after they arrived home, many hours behind schedule, is a personal and closed story.

OHIO

We trust that the readers of your valuable paper may be interested in hearing something of the annual Mid-Winter meeting of The Ohio Loan Association, which was held at Columbus, Ohio, on Wednesday, January 27, 1926, with headquarters at the beautiful new Niel House.

The weather man was on hand with a bag of tricks in the shape of a blizzard, but was unable to forestall our attendance or dampen our enthusiasm.

The noon luncheon was attended by eighty-six persons, and after the luncheon a splendid address was delivered by Mr. F. D. Sickles, Secretary of The Retail Credit Association of Columbus, Ohio.

The evening banquet was one of the largest and most successful ever held by the Ohio Association and was attended by 146 persons. At this meeting Mr. Leon Henderson, Associate Director of the Russell Sage Foundation, made an address, and among other things pointed out the fact that a study of the system which has been inaugurated in the United States is being made by the English people to the end that a law similar to the uniform bill will probably be enacted in England to correct the money lending evil which now exists in that country.

Mr. Cyrus Locher, Director of Commerce of the State of Ohio, delivered an address upon the subject of "Investigation of the Land Selling Situation in Florida" and proved to the entire satisfaction of the audience that the opportunities in Florida are not to be compared with those which actually exist in Ohio and elsewhere.

The most important business coming before the Association on this day was the adoption of a new Constitution and By-Laws and we would have your readers know that the name of our Association is now "The Ohio Industrial Lenders' Association."

The new Constitution and By-Laws among other things provides for a Board of Directors consisting of seven persons; and in an election which was held after the adoption of the new Constitution, the following Board of Directors was elected:

Col. D. H. Pond, Dr. C. G. Mueller, Mr. L. K. Osborne, Mr. T. R. Schoonover, Mr. M. L. Anderson, Mr. J. P. Michael and J. Fred Anderson.

Immediately after the election the new Board organized by election of the following officers:

President, Col. D. H. Pond of Cleveland; Vice President, Mr. L. K. Osborne of Columbus; Treasurer, Mr. J. P. Michael of Columbus; Secretary, J. Fred Anderson of Springfield.

The Ohio Lenders Association now has a paid publicity agent in the person of Mr. B. D. Streng, Hartman Building, Columbus, Ohio, and Mr. Streng was present and was introduced to the membership and was heard by them. Mr. Streng made quite a favorable impression. He is a newspaper man of long experience and publicity work and his value is evidenced by the fact that he got across a lot of publicity in Columbus and elsewhere relating to our Mid-Winter meeting.

We regret to report the death of Mr. W. E. Hamlin, a member of our Association, who formerly had an office at Cleveland, Ohio. Suitable resolutions were adopted at this meeting covering his death.

The following new members were elected into membership: Lincoln Loan Co., Cincinnati, Ohio; Citizens Loan Co., Greenfield, Ohio; Welfare Loan Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

It was the sense of the meeting that The Ohio Lenders' Association is heartily in accord with the principle of the idea of the National Association that the State and National dues should be collected at one and the same time and that the State Association should collect an amount of dues sufficient to cover the expenses of membership for each of its members to become members of The American Industrial Lenders' Association.

We still adhere, however, to our principle of basing our dues on the average loan balance of the member for the preceding year, and we earnestly hope that some method may be arrived at between the two associations so that Ohio by paying a certain percentage of its income may thereby permit all of its membership to become members of and enjoy the numerous benefits constantly flowing from membership in The American Association. We were honored by the presence of several members and friends residing outside of Ohio. From New York City came C. H. Watts and Leon Henderson; from Philadelphia came Dr. C. G. Mueller; from Indianapolis came J. H. Aufderheide, W. A. Zumpfe, George C. Grinsteiner and D. R. Reynolds, and of course, no convention would be complete without the presence of M. I. Marsh, of Chicago, with his lightning interest calculators.

J. Fred Anderson, Secretary.

The Columbus Industrial Lenders Association held a very enthusiastic meeting in January in the offices of the Ohio Finance Co., 43 W. Long St., admitting one new member into the Organization. Received applications from two others. We now have eleven out of a possible sixteen in our Columbus Organization.

This being our annual election, J. J. Aldrich of the Aldrich Finance Co., was elected President; B. L. Thuma of The Capitol Loan Co., Vice-president; P. J. Flynn of The Beneficial Loan Society as Secretary; J. W. Smith of The City Finance Co., Treasurer; J. G. Gaffney of The Ohio Finance Co., as a member of the Board of Directors.

The Organization has done much to promote harmony between the chattel loan and the credit houses of the city. Never in the history of the chattel loan business in Columbus has as much friendly coöperation been enjoyed between the credit houses and the loan men as we experienced the past few months, which worked to the benefit of all, and the fault seems mainly to have been with the loan men. It appears that they have not been doing enough talking to sell their business to the general public,—that about all the public learned of our work was what they heard from the dissatisfied borrower or the professional dead-beat.

Our meetings have improved both in interest and in numbers in attendance, and we are planning for bigger things for the future.

P. J. Flynn, Secy.

ILLINOIS

The regular quarterly meeting of the Illinois Industrial Licensed Lenders Association was held Friday evening, January 29th in the Rose Room at the Morrison Hotel, Chicago.

A turkey dinner was served at 6:30 p. m. to an appreciative and enthusiastic meeting of seventy-four members and guests and to judge from the compliments received it was a complete success. Our guests of honor were Mr. Leon Henderson, Associate Director of the Russel Sage Foundation and Judge James S. Baldwin now sitting in the Circuit Court in this city and who was at one time Assistant Director of the Department of Trade and Commerce which has supervision of the small loan business in Illinois.

Our business meeting was called to order at 8 p. m. by Chairman Albert P. Snite, who wore his every-ready smile and genial manner.

Treasurer J. D. Lynch reported a good balance on hand and all bills paid.

Secretary Sanderson reported a membership of sixty-nine and sixty-eight members in good standing.

Chairman Snite presented applications for membership from Household Finance Corporation, 4753 Broadway, Chicago, Mr. A. R. Wick, Manager, and Local Loan Company, at 1554 Ogden Avenue, Chicago, Mr. Paul O. Nielsen, Manager, and Mr. Peter Burr, Assistant Manager. Motions were made and seconded and their applications accepted.

Mr. Charles R. Napier spoke of the effect of full-page educational advertisements, which appeared in recent issues of Chicago Commerce, the magazine issued by the Chicago Association of Commerce, and said he has received calls from executives of two large Chicago firms requesting information regarding the way in which loans are made and one man was satisfied to the point of wanting to refer needy employees of his company to members of this Association for loans, when it would be helpful. Mr. Napier explained to us a recent Supreme Court decision on conditional sales contracts which changes all previous law on the subject and we now know that an individual cannot give, through bill of sale or chattel mortgage, any better title in personal property than he has; meaning briefly, that a mortgage, whether recorded or not, would have no standing if the property was covered by conditional sales contract which was not fully paid.

Mr. Napier has been appointed Chairman of the Chicago Crime Commissions Committee on Sheriff, Coroner, Bailiffs and Clerks and is still the most active friend we have in Illinois.

Secretary Sanderson reported on correspondence and the receipt of a number of letters from members in different cities and States and the satisfactory help which is given in the collection of accounts.

Mr. L. C. Dunn, Western Supervisor for the Beneficial Operating Bureau was introduced and we know he will feel at home with us and be interested in Association matters.

Chairman Snite spoke of the absence of Mr. Claude McCurdy, of the Bratt Loan Company, Chicago, because of a minor operation and announced the appointment of a Director of Department of Trade and Commerce in Illinois.

Judge Baldwin gave us a very interesting as well as humorous address and expressed his pleasure in being our guest once more.

Mr. Leon Henderson, of New York,

Associate Director of the Russel Sage Foundation, was introduced by our Chairman and received a cordial welcome.

Mr. Henderson spoke with exact understanding of our ideals in business and the service we are rendering, and devoted part of his very interesting talk to mention of the report of Dr. Louis N. Robinson on the small loan business and told us: "after reading it he did not think there need be any material change in the uniform Small Loan Law."

We were delighted with the personality of Mr. Henderson and know he made seventy-three warm friends at our meeting. Chairman Snite invited Mr. Henderson to be our guest April 30th, and he said he would be with us if possible.

John H. Sanderson, Secretary.

TEXAS

Copy of Solicitor's Memorandum which appeared in Internal Revenue Weekly Bulletin No. 52. Section 214 (a) 7 deductions allowed: Bad Debts. Article 151: Bad Debts. (Also Section 213 (a), Article 31.) IV-52-2518, S. M. 4591.

REVENUE ACT OF 1921

A taxpayer who lends money in Texas at usurious rates may claim as a bad debt only the difference between the amount loaned and the sum of the payments received as interest and the payments received on the principal.

He need not report as income any amounts received with reference to such debt as interest until the amount of money loaned had been returned to him. All payments received in excess of the amount loaned are income.

An opinion is requested as to whether certain losses sustained by A, a resident of Texas, during 1923 are allowable deductions. The taxpayer loans money at usurious rates (from 10 per cent to 15 per cent per month) and has claimed as a deduction the difference between the face value of the note and the amount which has been received as payment on the principal.

In one of the cases cited by the collector a loss was claimed where the taxpayer had received in interest in two years considerably more than the face of the note. In another case the taxpayer had received 9 dollars interest in two years on a 10 dollar note and claimed the entire amount of the note as a loss.

Under the laws of Texas, interest in excess of 10 per cent per annum is usurious. Article 4982 of the statutes provides:

> Art. 4982. May recover double usurious interest paid.—If usurious interest, as defined by the preceding articles, shall hereafter be received or collected upon any contract, either written or verbal, the person or persons paying same, or their legal representatives, may, by action of debt, instituted in any court of this State having jurisdiction thereof, in the county of the defendant's residence, or in the county where such usurious interest shall have been received or collected, or where said contract has been entered into, or where parties paying same reside when such contract was made, within two years after such payment, recover from the person, firm or corporation receiving the same double the amount of such usurious interest so received and collected. (Acts 1907, p. 277).

The courts of Texas in construing the provisions of the statutes relative to interest and usury have held that each payment made upon a contract affected with usury is a payment upon the principal, applied by law, notwithstanding it was paid and received as a payment of interest. (International Building Association v. Biering, 25 S. W., 622, 26 S. W. 39; Cotton v. Thompson, 159 S. W. 455.) The Courts have also held that payments on a usurious mortgage amounting to the face of the loan, however applied by the company, constitute payment in full. (National Loan and Investment Co. v. Stone, 46 S. W., 67.) In Peoples Building, Loan and Savings Association v. Bessonette (48 S. W., 52) it was held that since the part of the note providing for usurious interest is void the maker is not confined to his statutory right to recover double the interest paid but may apply such payment on the principal debt.

In view of the laws of Texas relative to usurious transactions and the decisions of the Texas courts, construing such statutes, it is the opinion of this office that a taxpayer in Texas who lends money at usurious rates may claim as a bad debt only the difference between the amount loaned and the sum of the payments received as interest and the payments received on the principal. Such amount is all that he can collect under the law and, therefore, all that he may claim as a bad debt under the provisions of section 214 (a) 7 and article 151, Regulations 62.

Inasmuch as the decisions of the Texas courts hold that each payment made upon a contract affected with usury is a payment upon the principal, applied by law, notwithstanding it was paid and received as a payment of interest, a taxpayer in Texas who lends money at usurious rates need not report as income any amounts received with reference to such debt until the amount of money loaned has been returned to him. All payments received in excess of the amount loaned are income.

A contract for interest at usurious rates is not illegal under the laws of Texas in the sense that it is criminal or violates some positive law and the penalty imposed by article 4982 is not incurred by merely contracting for such interest. The lender who receives or collects usurious interest lays himself liable to the penalty and in a suit to collect the principal the court would apply the usurious interest received against the principal sued for.

Since it is not illegal under the Texas statutes to lend money at usurious rates or to receive usurious interest, the taxpayer is not engaged in an illegal business. In view of this fact, Office Decision 1139 (C. B. 5, 84) does not apply, and any loss sustained in the manner prescribed above is deductible. Where the total payment made on the loan as interest and principal are equal to or in excess of the face of the loan no deductible loss is sustained.

A. W. GREGG,
Solicitor of Internal Revenue.

UTAH

A newspaper clipping from Salt Lake City which recently came to hand intimated that the Utah Small Loan Law had been modified in some particulars, and I therefore wrote to the State Bank Commissioner. His reply stated that there has been no change in the state law, but that on account of a joker in one of the last sections so-called money lenders were able to evade the provisions of the law by taking out a pawnbroker's license in Salt Lake City.

Through the efforts of the Attorney General, County Attorney for Salt Lake County, and the State Bank Commissioner, the City Attorney for Salt Lake City was induced to amend the city pawnbroking ordinance to exclude those engaged in the small loan business

I have acknowledged receipt of his information and congratulated him on the stand he has taken.

LEON HENDERSON,
Associate Director,
Department of Remedial Loans,
Russell Sage Foundation.

VIRGINIA

The "red star" day of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association has come and passed. The business session began at ten o'clock in the morning and lasted until five-fifteen. The dinner began at six-thirty o'clock and with the dance lasted until twelve o'clock, with a big attendance, account of which will reach you in time for the next INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS issued. Please hold open the front page if possible, and it will probably run on to the second or third page because there was something doing every minute. We had letters from all over the country.

The meeting approved of the State Chairmen Association proposal. Mr. Young and Mr. White of the Pennsylvania and West Virginia Associations were present. The address of welcome was given by Mr. W. H. Swartzchild, President of the Central National Bank, and representative of the Richmond Chamber of Commerce. The response in behalf of the State Association members was made by Mr. Virgil R. Goode of Richmond. Added to this was the introduction of Mr. Leon Henderson of the Russell Sage Foundation, all of which made a good start for the day's work. We will be sure to get a copy to you before the first of the month, of the speeches which we want published, together with the minutes.

The names of the officers elected are: Mr. L. E. Pope, Richmond, Virginia, Chairman; Mr. J. J. Price, Roanoke, Virginia, Vice-Chairman; Mr. Frank Bray, Norfolk, Virginia, Secretary; Mr. J. E. Burnett, Richmond, Virginia, Treasurer; Mr. E. P. East, Richmond, Virginia, Chairman of the Executive Committee, and also two extra elected to the Executive Committee.

You will, no doubt, receive a letter from Mr. Pope also.

The year has been a hard one as Chairman but I enjoyed it. We have not accomplished as much as I hoped to, but after the closing of the festivities last evening everybody declared it a great success, therefore, I owe great thanks to the other officers, committees and members for their wonderful coöperation, not only during the year, but during the last few weeks' preparation for yesterday and last evening. I also wish to thank the National Secretary for his coöperation for we received much encouragement from him. EDGAR P. EAST.

WEST VIRGINIA

The regular meeting of the West Virginia Industrial Lenders Association will be held in Charleston at the Hotel Ruffner, Thursday, March 18, 1926.

There will be a short business session at ten o'clock followed by a noon luncheon to members and guests.

The afternoon session will be opened with an address by J. H. Aufderheide, former National Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders Association. Mr. Aufderheide will give a synopsis on "Organization and progress of Industrial Lenders." The remainder of the session will be taken up with short talks and several interesting papers will be read by the different members.

This will be the first time in the history of this association to hold a banquet in connection with a business meeting and nothing is to be spared to put it across in good form.

The banquet will start promptly at seven thirty P. M. Immediately preceding the big feed, we are to enjoy an address from either Chas. G. Mueller or C. H. Watts, subject, "A Business Little Understood." Also State Banking Commissioner, Hon. H. A. Abbott will have something very interesting to talk to us about.

Promptly at ten thirty the floor will be cleared for dancing. Music will be furnished by "The West Virginians"—an organization which has been conceeded to be the best in the State.

If, in the rush, you fail to receive a formal invitation, we offer this one as a substitute: "EVERYBODY WELCOME, COME AND ENJOY THE SHOW," MEMBERS OF CAST, PUBLIC OFFICIALS, LADIES, GUESTS, and LENDERS.

Cordially yours,
WM. B. GRIMES,
Chairman Entertainment Committee.

THE BRITISH MONEY LENDERS' BILL

From Charity Organization Quarterly, January, 1926.

The Joint Select Committee on the Moneylenders Bill made its Report on July 29 and framed a fresh Bill. The Report is brief and contains no discussion of the evidence and no reasons for the proposed changes in the law. The evidence has recently been published. The Committee's Bill has now been amended in the House of Lords, where it passed its third reading on December 1. It is much to be hoped that the Bill will not be passed by the House of Commons in its present form.

The object of some of the provisions of the Bill appears to be to harass the moneylenders, whether he be a fair one or an unfair one. But moneylenders we shall have always with us, and they will be none the less harmful for being unnecessarily worried. Some borrowers go to them out of pure folly; others, of a humbler sort, in real distress. Whether fools or destitute, it is of no social value to penalize them. Yet when you harass the lender he will contrive to harden his terms to the borrower. For usury is of a secret nature and difficult to control by legislation. The most one can attempt is to let the ignorant borrower know precisely what he is doing, to prevent him from getting too deep into the mire, to check lending on false pretenses, and to hinder misuse of the Courts.

Take the proposed excise duty. A moneylender has now to pay a fee of £1 every three years for his registration, however many places of business he may have. The Bill requires him to take out an excise license at an annual fee of £15 for each of his places of business. This amount may be a mere trifle to the moneylender who deals in large sums. To the small moneylender in the back street, who was not represented among the witnesses before the Select Committee, the fee will be a serious consideration. She (for it is believed to be generally a woman) will extract it from the borrowers and they will thereby tend to become entangled worse than ever. Or, in the alternative, she will do without a license. Strangely enough, she is often regarded as a benefactor by her oppressed clients. She will warn them not to give her away. The risk of detection is small. Without a license she cannot go to Court, but she seldom wants to do that, and her borrowers are not of the sort that would take advantage of the weakness of her legal position. Whatever happens, she will continue to do her business. It is too firmly established to be killed by a fee. However, it would appear from the evidence before the Select Committee that moneylenders of the class who have offices of their own would welcome an increase in the fee. It might be increased for those moneylenders who wish to lend more than £10 to any one person in any month.

Again, under the Bill a license may be refused to an applicant who fails to produce to a petty sessional Court satisfactory evidence of good character. What will be the result of this except to give the moneylender a little extra trouble? He would normally have no difficulty in persuading someone to testify that he is "of good character." It is not because he is not what is ordinarily considered "of good character" that he is troublesome. The Select Committee here is perhaps influenced by the analogy of pawnbrokers, in whose case enquiry into character is necessary in order to keep out receivers of stolen property. But would-be moneylenders are not criminals.

The other proposed disqualifications for obtaining a certificate are reasonable, e. g., conviction of an offence under the Moneylenders Acts. These restrictions, however, might be enforced under the present system of registration without sending the applicant to a Court for a certificate. There is much to be said for a suggestion made by Truth that a finding by a Court that a moneylender's transaction is harsh and unconscionable should also disqualify him.

Incidentally, the Courts would have a considerable addition to their work under the proposed scheme, as is indicated by the fact that there are, at a modest estimate, 4,000 registered moneylenders in the County of London alone.

Apart from all this, it would be somewhat unfortunate to dignify with a license from the State an occupation which is at present ostracized.

The provisions in the Bill about bankruptcy proceedings are not a mere harassing but a serious attempt to put an end to lending to persons in an unsound financial position who are of sufficient standing to be made bankrupt. The Bill provides that for the purpose of bankruptcy proceedings a debt due to a moneylender shall be deemed to include only the amount lent together with interest at 5 per cent per annum, and that not until all the debts proved in the estate have been paid in full shall the moneylender receive the higher rate of interest to which he may be entitled. The importance of bankruptcy proceedings to moneylenders is apparent from the evidence given before the Select Committee by an Official Receiver in Bankruptcy to the effect that 30 to 35 per cent of the Receiving Orders in his Division for the first five months of 1925 were made on the petitions of moneylenders. Under the proposed law the moneylender would have to be extremely careful about lending without security.

Another blow dealt at the big moneylender is less important. It is in the clause which makes it illegal to issue circulars about moneylending or to advertise about the business in a newspaper except only what amounts to little more than the name and address of the moneylender. Surely there is a certain lack of sense of proportion in this proposal to create a new offence and at the same time to put the moneylender on a level with the barrister and doctor who may not advertise. There are other advertisements which cause more widespread harm and waste. Under the existing law a moneylender is already subject to penalty if he writes to an infant or if he by any false or misleading statement fraudulently attempts to induce anyone to borrow money. That ought to be sufficient. What we need to avoid is driving the moneylender underground. The more he is compelled to work in the dark, the more troublesome he is likely to be. It is interesting to learn from the evidence that it is mainly the London moneylenders who rely on circulars for getting business.

However, the law about bankruptcy and circulars affects only the big men, and will not in practice apply to the more numerous class of small money lenders who lend to the poor, who are not made bankrupt, and who find their usurers without any circulars.

It is satisfactory that the Committee has failed to succumb to the demand for a legal limitation of the rate of interest. This, when attempted, has always been evaded and has led to reprehensible subterfuges. The Bill, however, provides that interest exceeding 48 per cent. per annum shall, unless the contrary is proved, be presumed by the Courts to be harsh and unconscionable.

It is satisfactory also that the Bill now evinces an intention to remove the ambiguity in the term "rate of interest." It is provided that when a loan is repayable by installments every installment shall, for the purpose of calculating the rate of interest, be considered to be made up of principal and interest in the proportion that the sum actually lent bears to the difference between that sum and the total amount to be paid to the lender. This is based on the suggestion made by the Government Actuary in his evidence. Unfortunately we are there left in the air and the good intention is unfulfilled. The Bill should go on to a complete adoption of the Government Actuary's suggestion and should add that the above-mentioned difference shall, for the purpose in view, be considered to be the interest for the period of the loan on the average amount of principal outstanding from day to day. Some illustrative examples should be set out in a schedule. This method of calculating the rate of interest is admittedly not an exact one. It breaks down when a loan is large or extends over a long period. The Bill should prescribe the requisite restrictions on the application of the method.

Having prescribed a method of calculating the rate of interest, the Bill might well go on to require that whenever a money lender states the terms of a loan which he grants or is prepared to grant he shall state also what is the rate of interest according to that method in cases to which it applies. Though it is true that most borrowers concern themselves only with the amount they have to repay and not with a theoretical rate of interest, yet some of them would like to have the information. To require the information to be always given would enable a closer comparison to be made between the terms offered by different money lenders than is possible at present, and, by thus facilitating competition among them, might tend to check the taking of unduly high rates of interest.

In view of the fact that many ignorant borrowers do not know how they stand with regard to a loan which they are repaying, the provision of the Bill that a money lender must, on demand, at any time supply the borrower with information as to the state of the loan is excellent, though the proposed charge of one shilling for this service is too high. It should also be laid down, as has been proposed by the Liverpool Women Citizens' Association which has specially investigated money lending among the poor, that the terms of a loan shall be given in writing to the borrower free of charge at the time when the money is lent. There should also be a written receipt for every payment made by the borrower. In the back streets transactions are now sometimes entirely oral, and the opportunities for fraud are obvious.

The Bill requires that when a money lender gives information as to the state of a loan during its currency he shall show inter alia "the amount of the interest accrued, due and unpaid." He is not told how to calculate this amount, and requires guidance here just as he does in order to enable him to calculate the rate of interest. The Bill is defective on this point.

There is a certain highly objectionable kind of penalty for default which the Bill attempts to abolish. According to a prevalent form of contract, when £10 is lent on condition that £12 is repaid in twelve monthly installments of £1, the borrower undertakes that if he is late with an installment he immediately becomes liable to pay £12 less what he has already paid. This means that he might have to pay £2 for just over a month's use of £10. To prevent such unfair contracts there is a clause in the Bill providing that when a loan is repayable by installments and the borrower is late with an installment the money lender cannot recover any more than the amount actually lent together with interest thereon up to the date of payment "at the rate properly chargeable." The latter phrase is obviously too vague to be allowed to stand as it is. Even when the phrase is properly amended the clause will still be open to the objection that it will lead the money lender to induce the borrower to substitute for the contract a fresh one for the outstanding amount, with the result that he will be in the money lender's hands for longer than he intended. Another objection is that the clause leaves out of account a useful and fair method which is also now customary, viz., that when the borrower is late with an installment he shall simply pay penal interest on the amount overdue. This method has the advantage of saving him from being called upon to pay suddenly a comparatively large sum, and at the same time provides a means of keeping him up to the mark. But this penal interest ought to be moderate, whereas in practice it is excessively big.

A burden is placed on the borrower in the provision that no proceedings shall lie for the recovery of a loan of less than £3. The intention evidently is to stop the borrowing of a smaller sum than £3. This restriction can, of course, be easily evaded in practice by nominally borrowing £3, and then repaying the next day such part of the amount that is not wanted. But the borrower who wants a smaller sum than £3 will not rise to this, and the money lender is not likely to show him the way. A man, for instance, may be in desperate need of £1, with no resource but the money lender, but may want to involve himself as little as possible. The money lender will tell him that under the law he must borrow £3. He is likely to comply. It may make all the difference between a mere temporary loan and an indefinite entanglement. If he can succeed in finding a money lender who will, in spite of the irrecoverability, advance him only £1, the terms will naturally be specially onerous. It may be a secret affair, a loan taken by a woman without her husband's knowledge, with the money lender extorting his claims by means of a threat of exposure.

This instance of the borrower wife is not an uncommon one. In fact, there is much to be said for the adoption of the suggestion which has been made by a solicitor with wide experience in the East of London who proposes that it should be a criminal offence for a money lender to lend money at interest to a married woman without her husband's consent.

It should be definitely provided in the Bill that a transaction with an unregistered (or unlicensed) money lender shall be void. It is true that the Courts have hitherto held that an unregistered money lender cannot succeed in a suit. But the point has not been quite free from doubt. The present Bill provides that a money lender's transaction brought about by the sending of a circular shall be void, and it is desirable that the same disqualification shall be specifically applied to him if he carries on his business without legal authority.

The Bill is, curiously, badly drafted in many respects. A few instances can be given. Thus, in one sentence the Bill promises to refer to the proposed license as a "money lender's excise license," and in the very next sentence refers to the license by two other phrases, neither of which is in accordance with the promise. The Bill, while it provides that if a money lender charges for "expenses" the amount shall be set off against the principal, fails to repeal the words in the existing Act which enables a Court to allow what is fairly due for expenses. There is mention of a rate of 4 per cent. per month "or the corresponding rate in respect of any other period"; of course the latter phrase is worse than superfluous.

BALTIMORE ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE HONORS DR. MUELLER

Dr. Charles G. Mueller, President of the Community Finance Service, Inc., with headquarters in Philadelphia, and branches in most of the important American cities, has been notified of his appointment as a member of the Committee on Industrial Financing of Small Loans, by the Executive Secretary, A. S. Goldsborough, of the Baltimore Association of Commerce. Dr. Mueller has been asked to initiate or suggest some ideas or activities for this committee to undertake which will be useful to some special line of business, or to business in general, or which will be advantageous to the community at large. Knowing something of Dr. Mueller's fertile brain and dynamic energy, we may expect things to happen on this committee during the coming year.

ANOTHER DECISION AGAINST THE SALARY BUYERS

Brief statement of case of G. M. Davis vs. Trout Investment Company tried Jan. 14-15, 1926, before Judge E. D. Thomas and a jury in Superior Court of Fulton County, Ga.

This case was filed in November 1924. It was a petition seeking an injunction against the defendant because he had charged the plaintiff 20% per month interest on a loan of $20.00. The plaintiff testified that he borrowed $20.00 from the defendant on or about Aug. 1, 1924, and paid him the sum of $1.00 per week for four weeks; that the defendant was threatening to turn the salary assignment he had given the defendant to secure said loan over to plaintiff's employer, thereby causing him to lose his position, and plaintiff asked the court to prevent defendant from doing this or from filing suit on said assignment.

The defendant filed a cross bill in which he claimed he bought $20.00 worth of plaintiff's salary with his employer Georgia Railway & Power Company, and that it was a sale and not a loan. On cross-examination the defendant testified that he did not post the $500.00 bond as required under the acts of 1904 as codified in Section 3449 of the Code of Georgia.

Counsel for the plantiff then moved the court to grant a nonsuit against the defendant's cross bill, but before this motion was passed upon by the court (which motion the court was most surely going to grant) counsel for defendant voluntarily dismissed his cross bill. Counsel for defendant then moved the court to grant a nonsuit against plantiff's main petition but instead of granting said last mentioned motion the court directed the jury to return the following verdict "We, the jury find for the plaintiff the relief sought." A judgment was then rendered by the court making the temporary injunction previously granted in said case permanent and also a judgment against the defendant for the costs of said case.

Joseph D. Lewis represented the plaintiff (G. M. Davis).

T. J. Ripley represented the defendant (Trout Investment Company).

WHY CONNECTICUT, INDIANA AND MISSOURI BONDS COST MORE

We thought you would be interested in the enclosed correspondence, especially the letter of the Towner Rating Bureau, New York of January 13 which gives a very clear-cut picture of their point of view with respect to certain types of lenders bonds.

It would seem to us that in drafting the uniform small loan law in future, care should be exercised that only the proper description of the risk or hazard to be undertaken by a bonding company should be set up. We think it would be all right for you to use any or all of their letter in the NEWS or possibly it might be better to advise Mr. Henderson of the Sage Foundation of it so in drafting laws, the proper phraseology may be used to avoid a condition such as confronts us in Connecticut and Indiana.

CHARLES H. WATTS.

New York City,
January 13, 1926.

Charles H. Watts, Esq.,
President, Beneficial Operating Bureau,
135 Broadway, New York.

Dear Sir:

Failure to answer your letter of December 11th last was due to the fact that Mr. Towner has been out of the office a great deal attending meetings and hearings and was unable to give your letter the personal attention that he desired and, in his absence, I am taking the liberty of writing you on the subject.

Licensed Money Lenders have invariably been rated by this Bureau at $5.00 per thousand per annum, minimum $5.00, but in a few cases a higher rate has been advised. In Indiana the rate was increased from $5.00 per thousand to $10.00 per thousand because the Statute requires a new bond each year thereby creating "cumulative liability." In Connecticut the rate is likewise $10.00 per thousand because the bond required by the Connecticut Statute gives third parties "a direct right of action." The Connecticut bond is only $1,000 so the premium is $10.00 But in Missouri a bond of $2,000 is required and this bond likewise gives third parties "a direct right of action," but because of the larger bond the rate charged in that State is $7.50 per thousand per annum.

With the exception of these three States the $5.00 rate is applied. If the Indiana Statutes are changed so that a new bond is not required each year, with result that the surety will not be exposed to "cumulative liability" we can meet that situation by advising the same rate as charged elsewhere for a similar form of bond. "Cumulative liability" imposes upon the surety company a doubling of liability, which very naturally requires an increased premium for the increased hazard.

Yours very truly,
MARTIN W. LEWIS,
Asst. Mgr.

1925 YEAR BOOK COMMENTS

Among the persons and institutions acknowledging the receipt of the 1925 Year Book which was mailed in December, we find the following comments:

"I have not had an opportunity to read it all through, but it is extremely interesting, and I am looking forward to a chance to get at it."—JOHN S. BRADWAY, Secretary of The National Association of Legal Aid Organizations, Philadelphia.

"This book is a very interesting and useful one to me, and I highly appreciate same."—JAMES A. LYONS, Manager of the Guarantee Loan Company, Philadelphia.

"I wish to acknowledge with thanks the two copies of the Year Book you sent me. I am examining them with considerable interest and realize that they will be extremely valuable to me. I think congratulations are in order on the attractive appearance of the book and the dignified way in which the material is presented. I hope it will have wide distribution."—LEON HENDERSON, Associate Director, Department of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation, New York City.

"I have not had time to more than just glance through it, but it looks good to me. I know it represents considerable arduous work on your part. I want you to know that I appreciate your interest and enthusiasm and thank you on behalf of my associates and myself for all the good work you have and are doing in behalf of the small loan business generally."—L. C. HARBISON, Chicago, Ill.

"I again wish to thank you for the complimentary edition of the Year Book of the American Association for 1925. I believe it is without a doubt the best the association has ever published.

"After glancing through it one cannot help but be impressed with the important position that the association is taking in the national financial activities of the country, and when we stop and consider that only a few short years ago the first uniform law was introduced many felt that it spelled finis for the majority of those then engaged in the business, yet the Year Book for 1925 portrays a concrete example of what can be and has been accomplished through square dealing.

"Passing on through the book to the reports of the various committees; the experiences of some of the field men; the hardest collections, etc., one is obliged to pause and ponder how so much real meat and constructive matter can be included within its 137 pages. It is indeed a real digest of the activities combined with a sort of informal experience meeting and cannot help but be of very material benefit to either the man who is now actively engaged or ever has been in any way identified with the business and I can frankly say that the courtesy copies that I receive from year to year are read from cover to cover with interest and profit to myself.

"At this time permit me to extend to you, the members of the American Association and to any of our old friends in Harrisburg with whom you may come in contact the season's best wishes."—W. HALL CROWELL, Los Angeles, Calif.

"I have received and read the 1925 Year Book. Please accept my gratitude for your kindness in sending me the volume. Your convention at Providence must have been admirable and I am sorry that my attendance at the American Bar Association Meeting in Detroit prevented my being one of the audience during your instructive sessions."

COPY OF BACK COVER PAGE AD IN "THE CITY BUILDER." ATLANTA, GA., DEC., 1925

The need to borrow money cannot be abolished by any law, so should be regulated by law for the welfare of the state and the protection of necessitous borrowers of good character and industry.

The reason for nearly all loans is to finance emergencies growing out of family life, such as births, marriages, illness, deaths, coal, clothing, interest, taxes, insurance, etc.

The members of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association do not compete with banks. Banks do not care to make risky small loans repayable in installments.

The members of this association are men of high character and the business is under the supervision of the banking department of Georgia.

When friends and employees need financial help in sums of $10 to $300 send them to us.

James R. Bartol, who installed the Community Discount System in more than fifty cities and towns of Pennsylvania, and many similar agencies elsewhere, died at his home in Richmond, Va., yesterday. George A. Shreiner, president of the Community Discount Company, North Second street, this city, was advised of Mr. Bartol's death today. LENDERS' SOCIETY IN SESSION HERE

Delegates From All Parts of State Attending—Buchman Presiding

Representatives of the Industrial Lenders' Association came to this city from various parts of the State today for the regular quarterly meeting of the organization. The local branch of the association has prepared to make the visitors' stay a pleasant one, and a varied program has been arranged. Vernon L. Buchman, of the Trenton organization, is chairman of the meeting.

A reception committee welcomed the visiting delegations when they arrived at the Clinton Street Station at 10:30 o'clock. The delegates then were taken on a bus tour of historical points and other interesting places in the city. With the coöperation of the Chamber of Commerce, arrangements have been made for a visit to the Lenox Pottery, where the delegates will be taken through the plant.

The Chamber of Commerce has arranged to provide the visitors with pamphlets and other descriptive matter pertaining to Trenton and the interesting features of the city.

Luncheon was served at Hillwood Inn at 1 o'clock, followed by the business meeting, which will close the day's activities.—Trenton Evening Times, Jan. 21, 1926.

COOLIDGE SEES VIRTUES IN INSTALLMENT PLAN

System Preferable to "Running Up" Dangerous Bill at Store, He Says

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12 (A. P.).—The present-day vogue of buying everything from baking pans to bungalows on the installment plan appeals to President Coolidge as having some advantages at least over the old practice of "running up a bill at the store," and "perhaps never paying it at all."

The President told callers today that as a boy in Vermont he often watched with concern the process by which some of his neighbors had their purchases chalked up until the totals reached dangerous proportions. He considers a definite obligation to pay at stated intervals far preferable to the old way, and does not take much stock in assertions that widespread installment plan sales are endangering the country's prosperity, so long as the practice does not go too far.

EUROPEAN COLLECTIONS

You may have heard of C. R. de Min, now at 179 Fulton Street, The Hague, Holland, as being a little fellow who collected about a dozen accounts that were doubled up on Philadelphia lenders, where the borrower had escaped to Holland or Germany.

Mr. de Min, as you will note, is still in Europe, and we want to have you run a little news note in the next issue of the NEWS, saying to anyone that Mr. de Min will absolutely collect accounts for a reasonable charge, or do any work of any kind associated with the collection of accounts, in an honest manner and his charges will be reasonable. We recommend him very highly, and our only thought in passing this on to you is that he might be of service to some of our members who may have skips over the water.

HELD AS LOAN SWINDLER

Morris Plan Borrower Said to Have Obtained $5,160 in Year

On complaint of officials of the Morris Plan that he had swindled the loan concern out of $5,160 in a year by giving fictitious names and addresses when taking out loans, Morris Rosenfeld, 31 years old, of 14 West 118th Street, was held in $2,500 bail, charged with grand larceny, by Magistrate August W. Glatzmayer in Morrisania Court yesterday. He will have a further hearing today.

Rosenfeld was arrested on Saturday in the Morris Plan branch at 391 East 149th Street, the Bronx, where he was trying to get a $400 loan. According to the police, a search of his apartment revealed three other applications on different branches for $500 each.

Rosenfeld, according to the complaint, gave a fictitious name and address when applying for the loan, and then gave fictitious names at the same address for references. Then, according to the charge, he would arrange to get the mail at that address and would furnish his own references.—New York Times, Jan. 4, 1926.

CINCINNATI, O., Dec. 16.—Mortgage liens on any vehicle or vessel subsequently seized under the federal prohibition act, based on loans made without a previous investigation into the responsibility, moral and financial, of the persons seeking the loan can not be recovered.

This, in effect, is the ruling handed down yesterday by Federal Judge Smith Hickenlooper here in the dismissal of a number of intervening petitions filed by mortgagees setting up mortgage liens on automobiles seized in liquor transportation cases.—Columbus Citizen, Dec. 18, 1926.

SERVICE

The issue for the month of February is certainly crammed full of good things. News of the progress made in the different State Associations. I read with much interest the account of the Georgia Industrial Lenders' meeting on January 12th. Judge L. F. McClelland certainly qualified as a pinch hitter, fattening his batting average with a safety to right field on Florida and a hit to left on Prohibition, then made a home run on Evolution. Even though he admits he was not informed in advance, he covered well.

The Loan Manager in his duties many times finds himself facing the borrower in much the same position as Judge McClelland faced the Georgia meeting, except that he cannot meet his audience with a story or a statement of facts, but is in most cases called to render a service in addition to finding a way to relieve the borrowers' present need of money.

Much has been said and written about educating the borrower. This is good. He can be diplomatically criticized on some of the things he has done and coached on the things he can do to improve his credit standing. He can be instructed about office hours. You can point out on the calendar the date the first payment is due. He can be told what he should do if he makes up his mind or is forced to move. He can be told that prompt payments makes a desirable borrower and many other things, but I think the average loan manager is losing one of the most effective branches of his business, service.

The United States Chamber of Commerce has sent forth fifteen rules for business conduct. In seven of these fifteen rules the word "service" or "services" appears. I feel that the loan manager should take an interest in his customer. Invite him to bring his financial troubles to the office. Explain to him what he should do in case of sickness or during periods of non-payment. Suggestions can be made as to how the borrower might obtain a better paying position. Caution them with the dangers or obstacles they will possibly have to encounter in going into business for themselves if leaving a fairly good paying regular position, just because some unprincipled salesman has tried to make them believe they can make much better money in a restaurant or confectionery, just because the salesman wants the commission for putting over the deal.

My experience has always been that I would prefer dealing with a man who had a regular monthly income, even though it was not the best position in the world, in preference to a man who is trying to get in business for himself, particularly where he has had little or no experience in dealing with the public, and no knowledge at all of the business he anticipates taking over.

In fact there is no limit to the service an experienced loan manager can extend to his borrowers, and to coach them to bring their troubles to the office gives the loan manager an opportunity of first protecting his investment and the security back of it. The manager who has been in business for three or four years will be able to make many helpful suggestions by the experience gained from the thousands of people with whom he deals.

To have the borrower come to you in case of a garnishee or that he has run into some other party's machine and damaged it, or a furniture company is about to repossess a part of his furniture because of non-payment, while the purchaser thinks the goods were not as represented, or any other disagreement regarding his chattels or income, the loan manager has the opportunity of reviewing the case briefly and if it would appear that the borrower was liable or at fault, which in about sixty-five per cent of the cases the defendant is guilty, by a slight increase of the loan or a suggestion to approach the party who thinks they have been injured, adjustments can ofttimes be arranged which would save time and court costs.

Use and follow up the word "service" whenever you have an opportunity for to-day almost every line of endeavor is advertising a special service of some kind, and the industrial loan business offers more opportunities to extend personal service than any other line of business that the public deals with outside of possibly the banks.

This form of service takes a little time to be sure, but brings its reward by way of the satisfied borrower sending others to your office. Time thus spent could easily be charged to advertising, if it were necessary to make an allowance for it.

AN OLD TIMER.

THE SPIRIT OF SERVICE

The service policies of a corporation are not founded solely upon some occurrence which may have happened in the past. A service policy may be roughly defined as a plan of procedure and a definite attitude toward the public which permits its business to be carried on with the least friction, and thereby acquires the greatest degree of public good will.

To formulate a workable service policy, to define the ethical relationship between service staffs and customers, and to fully and properly realize the duty it owes the public, is a primary duty of the chief executives of any corporation which is dependent upon public support for its growth and prosperity. It requires, in the executive controlling the corporation, a vision of future needs of the corporation as well as future wants of the customers.

That this vision of service has long been a factor in the loan business is so obvious, that the business of to-day and that of ten years ago presents no grounds for comparison. It is not a comparison, it is a contrast.

Old-time loan men, if they reflect upon the vicissitudes of the business since they joined it, will have long since mentally noted these changes:

From haggle and barter—to a uniform fixed charge.

From tricks of trade—to open square dealings.

From the customer beware—to the customer be satisfied.

From the old-time bawler-out—to courteous indirect collection methods.

From the uncertain terms of contract—to recognized, definite, fully explained contracts.

From misleading advertising—to truth in advertising.

From dingy, dark "confidential offices"—to light, airy, bank-light offices.

From the position of a public but necessary evil to a recognized influence for public good.

The loan business occupies a financial field that is unique in that it caters to a class of credit which, in the bank sense, is not credit at all but constitutes a mere credit risk.

Necessarily, the loan men for many years have been in contact with people whose entire lives are hemmed in and circumscribed by debt, whose children are raised under conditions that do not tend toward a full realization of proper standards of American citizenship, and whose financial affairs sometimes attain such complexity that an otherwise upright person will think his course futile and hopeless, and will voluntarily sacrifice his reputation, his friends, and his credit in order to avail himself for a time of money, credit, or merchandise, which he knows that he has not the ability to repay.

It is only natural, therefore, that with a new conception of duty to the public, and a new conception of what loan service may become, that the public would react favorably to the new loan business. The passage of the Uniform Small Loan Law, the strict policing of the business by National and State Associations, the abolition of dark, cramped, cubby-holes for offices, and substituting for the old-time bawler-out of the modern, courteous, tenacious, ingenuous, assistant manager or investigator, have all played their part in the moulding of public opinion and the formation of a new type of public service.

It has not been so long since the loan man who tried to find out why his customer needed a loan, was considered to be asking an impertinent question. It was none of his business why the loan was wanted. All he had to know was whether or not he could collect the money. Times have changed. With the modern conception of public service, the almost universal budgeting of customers in one form or another, loan managers have developed an intimacy of relationship with their customers' affairs, and a friendliness of feeling and of spirit that was totally unknown a few years ago.

The modern loan manager, with his budget, founds his service policy on the belief that only by getting the customer out of debt can he hope to make a good customer of him. Paradoxical as it may seem, a good customer is one who makes one or two loans and then has no further need for loan service. Instead of becoming a constant contributor of principal and interest, he recommends a relation or a friend, and an endless chain of good-will is built up. Instead of one debt-ridden, unfriendly, contentious customer, the modern loan manager has a friend who is willing and anxious to recommend his service to all of his friends and relations who may be in need of it. Each of these new customers who pass through the loan office credit mill and emerge financially solvent, educated in the handling of their own personal finances, and with the added confidence that comes only with the assurance of established credit in time of unexpected and possibly dire need, is a living advertisement for the loan manager who has built him up and taught him the things which every man must know and practice in order to hold a proper position in the community. In order to amplify this constructive service, and to make it available for persons who would not ordinarily come within its credit scope, many loan managers prefer to build up their rejected customer voluntarily and without charge, knowing that the small time and effort involved will result in the establishment of a firm friendship, and, eventually, in the making of a loan that will supervise itself voluntarily and without friction, and will advertise the loan manager's helpfulness, his fairness, and his service policy. Here again, the budget service plan comes into play, makes a customer, a friend, and an advertisement that redounds to the credit of the financial factor—the Loan Man. In addition, the various chain organizations are attempting to so locate their offices that the public may be served promptly and without undue travel or loss of customer's time as well as loss of time or effort on the part of the loan staff. This attitude is reflected in the establishment of more and smaller offices, rather than the concentration of capital in a lesser number of large offices.

It may be argued that the larger office, running in oil, would draw as much trade as two small offices, and at less expense.

Men with true visions, however, know that the race is not always to the swift. The winner will be the man who serves the public surely, faithfully, and efficiently, in all ways, and who makes it as easy as possible for the customer to repay money, as well as to borrow it.

This is service. Whenever a loan man's conception of his duty to his customers allows him to embrace this creed of service as his own, and perform it so automatically that it never occurs to him that he is doing an unusual thing, then will the loan business have risen to a higher plane, and its position as a financial field for public service not covered by any other type of invested capital be fully recognized. The day of quibbling about legislative matters, or fractions of interest percentage to be charged, of collection methods, and of coöperation of various chain-loan organizations and the individuals employed by them, will be a thing of the past.

Coöperation among loan men, friendliness on the part of the borrowing public, recognition on the part of the law makers and law enforcers, and a sure, adequate return on invested capital, will be the accepted condition, and not the unusual as it is to-day.

Base your service on the Vision:

From haggle and barter—to a uniform fixed charge.

From tricks of trade—to open square dealings.

From the customer beware—to the customer be satisfied.

From the old-time bawler-out—to courteous indirect collection methods.

From the uncertain terms of contract —to recognized, definite, fully explained contracts.

From misleading advertising—to truth in advertising.

From dingy, dark, "confidential offices" —to light, airy, bank-light offices.

From the position of a public but necessary evil—to a recognized influence for public good.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

We wish to tell you of a very pleasant gathering the N. H. I. L. A. had—Monday, Feb. 15th. In view of the fact that D. J. Cote, our Chairman, has been transferred to another state, it was necessary that we elect new officers, and the following were elected: F. A. Brodeuer, new manager of the American Loan Co., Chairman; B. Swirsky, of the Swirsky Loan Co., Vice-Chairman; Mrs. Sarah F. French, of the Mutual Loan Co., Secretary; Simeon Sharaf, of the Sharaf Loan Co., of Concord, Treasurer. We had the pleasure of having with us A. G. Fimmurman, of N. Y., and H. Morgan, of Phila., who gave a talk of much benefit to all present. We also invited Mrs. D. J. Cote, Mrs. F. A. Brodeuer, Miss Victoria Guerin (bookkeeper at the American Loan Co.). Miss Aletta M. French (my daughter), as guests of the evening. We had dinner at the Carpenter, and all agreed that the evening had been very pleasantly spent. The members of the State Association presented D. J. Cote, our retiring Chairman, with a lounging Robe, which was accepted in the same kindly manner as it was presented. Am including the cutting from our daily paper, which got some things mixed—and did not print it as we gave it. Although we are a small association, we trust we may have much interest in the work, and that we may have a much larger number in the future.

VIRGINIA

The eighth annual meeting of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Jefferson Hotel, Richmond, January 22d.

The business meeting was called to order by Chairman East at 10:00 a. m.

Before proceeding with the regular order of business the chairman introduced W. H. Swartzchild, president of the Central National Bank, Richmond. Mr. Swartzchild welcomed the members on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce, and also spoke briefly of our position to do a great service to the general public.

Attorney Virgil R. Goode, on behalf of the Association responded and thanked Mr. Swartzchild for his welcome and splendid address as follows:

"Responding on behalf of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association, I know I speak for every member present in saying that this association is glad to meet here and to enjoy the charming hospitality for which this city has ever been noted in history, story and song. I wish to express our appreciation of the cordial and gracious welcome accorded us by the Chamber of Commerce of this city through its distinguished representative, Mr. Schwartzchild.

"As strange as it may seem, I must confess that this is the hour of my conversion. The usual address of welcome is rather set to form and altogether uninteresting, but Mr. Schwartzchild has made his so instructive and interesting as to justify addresses of welcome for all times to come.

"I shall not take the time to tell Mr. Schwartzchild some of the very interesting things about our business, but it is a fact that the Small Loan Business is a sensitive one in that it comes only where invited and stays where wanted; and that in Virginia to-day, there is more than two million dollars capital in this business.

"Upon the opening of this, the eighth annual convention, we cannot help pausing and allowing our thoughts to wander back to the birth and purpose of this association.

"The General Assembly of Virginia, in 1918, after it had, in its own words, 'recognized that the business of loaning small sums of money upon security that is not acceptable to banks and financial institutions, does and will exist, and there is a real need for the enactment of a law that will enable its continuance under proper supervision and restrictions,' passed the Uniform Small Loan Law, which establishes and regulates the small loan business upon fair and lawful terms. It was at this time that the business represented here to-day, had its birth in this state.

"The pioneers of this business in Virginia were faced with many difficult problems. The business was new and the eyes of the public were directed upon it, watching its development. It was soon learned by the individual businesses that the problems of one were more or less common to all and that the combined experience and study of all would be beneficial to each and every lender in the state. It was for that reason that this association was formed, having as its fundamental principle, the improvement of the small loan business. Since that date, seven such conventions as this have assembled in which men, whose long experience and careful study and high ideals have aided this association in accomplishing its aims. To these men, this association owes grateful thanks.

"The purpose of this association has a refined meaning not perceptible at first sight. It is the improvement of service and help rendered to the public who borrows money from our members.

"I recall hearing a talk made at one of the meetings of this association by a gentleman who had made a close study of the help that might be rendered to the borrower. He suggested a close contact, a discussion with the borrower of his home conditions, his working and financial conditions, with the ultimate view of advice and help on the part of the lender. This reminded me of a legend that is carved on a stone arch over a certain church which reads, 'This Church is conducted for the benefit of the people outside.'

"Such have been the aims and ideals of this association during the past eight years, that it has been worth while permits of no argument, and I am confident that this meeting and those to be held in the future will be pervaded by the same high purposes.

"In conclusion I once more want to thank Mr. Schwartzchild for his kind words of welcome and to express our appreciation of the courtesy of the Richmond Chamber of Commerce.

On the motion of Mr. Young, of Philadelphia, a rising vote of thanks was given Mr. Schwartzchild.

The Chair called upon Leon Henderson, of the Russel Sage Foundation, to address the members.

Mr. Henderson told the members what the Russel Sage Foundation had done and what they were doing in different states. A rising vote of thanks was given him for his able address.

Mr. East called on Mr. Burnley, supervisor of Small Loan Licensees, and he said the Banking Department appreciated the coöperation that they had gotten from the members, and they had had no complaints from any source for over a year.

C. H. Watts spoke briefly and said in response to the previous speakers that their principles were our principles, that we were trying to give a service that was helpful to our customers.

Chairman East said before we started business, he wished to thank all the officers of the Association for their coöperation in helping him during his term of office as Chairman during the past year.

The secretary read letters from the following gentlemen, regretting they were not able to attend the meeting: Messers. W. P. Woll, Geo. Hodson, Colonel Hodson, Dr. Mueller, Mr. Hood and Mr. Osborne.

The secretary called the roll and the following members were present:

Norfolk: Citizens Small Loan Sociey, Empire Company, National Small Loan Society, Beneficial Loan Society, Norfolk Loan Society, Atlantic Small Loan Company, Norfolk Security Company.

Portsmouth: Beneficial Loan Society, Portsmouth Security Co.,

Lynchburg: Lynchburg Loan Society.

Two of these members consolidated with other offices, one went out of business and the remaining three are still in business, but we have not been able to get them back into the Association.

All members dues are paid for the year 1925, except one, the Virginia Security Company, of Roanoke.

Most of the members have paid for the first half and some for the full year of 1926.

This was referred to the Auditing Committee to report back at the afternoon session.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

Membership. Chairman Christensen, being out West and not able to attend, on motion of Mr. Watts, seconded by Mr. Bradshaw, it was agreed that the secretary's report would do for the membership Committee.

Legislation. Chairman Moss gave a general outline of what his committee had done during the year, and they did not look for any adverse legislation during this session of the State Legislature. However, they were not asleep on the job.

Publicity. Chairman Phillips said he had been able to get newspaper write-ups on our various meetings which we had held during the past year.

Vigilance. Mr. Pope said he was glad to report that his Committee had had nothing to do as there had been no complaints of any kind.

Friendly Relations. Chairman East reported that our relations with the banking department were very cordial and there had been no trouble of any kind.

Mr. Moore reported that all the newspapers were now putting our classified advertising under a special heading "Loans up to $300."

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

Mr. Biel reported that the special case he reported last meeting had been continued until March. This is a case where a customer of theirs was appealing against a judgment on the ground that our law was unconstitutional.

Mr. East called for report as to how the Exchange Bureaus were working in the different cities.

Mr. Burnett, of Richmond, said they only had five members in Richmond, and they took their lists around each morning.

Mr. Bray of Norfolk and Portsmouth, said they had nine members and they mailed their lists out each night, and reported back over the phone to each other before 10 a. m. next morning.

Mr. Price reported all four offices in Roanoke were coöperating now, and Mr. Long, of Lynchburg, reported both offices in Lynchburg were coöperating.

William Young, of Philadelphia, spoke on the benefits of Exchange Bureaus, and he advised not to overload our customers.

Mr. Watts said not to be members of the Exchange, showed a lack of confidence in each other. He advised us to get out and create new business and don't hammer the other fellows business.

Mr. East named the following members to act as a Nominating Committee for the election of officers and report back their slate in the afternoon. Messrs. Edge, Chairman; Pope, Moss, Price and Moore.

RECESS UNTIL 3 P. M.

Afternoon Session. Mr. Appleby, chairman of the Auditing Committee, reported that he audited the treasurer's books and found them correct. On motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Bray, the treasurer's report was approved.

The Nominating Committee recommended the following members be elected as the Executive Committee: L. E. Pope, J. J. Price, H. E. Burnett, F. Bray, E. P. East, J. S. Edge and E. F. Moore with the further recommendation that L. E. Pope, as chairman; J. J. Price, vice-chairman; H. E. Burnett, treasurer; F. Bray, secretary; and E. P. East, chairman of the Executive Committee.

During the election of officers, V. D. Moss took the chair.

There being no further nominations, Mr. Herbert moved the nominations be closed, Mr. Bradshaw seconded the motion. Carried unanimously.

Mr. Watts moved the By-Laws be suspended and the Secretary instructed to cast one ballot. Mr. Moss seconded the motion. Unanimously carried.

Mr. Pope took the chair and said he appreciated the honor of being elected chairman again and he would do everything in his power to further the interests of the Association.

Mr. Watts pledged Mr. Pope their hearty coöperation and would give him every assistance in their power.

Mr. Young on behalf of the Pennsylvania Association congratulated Mr. Pope on being elected chairman.

Mr. East, retiring chairman, thanked the officers for their assistance and coöperation during the past year.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

Mr. East brought up the subject of Uniform Papers again. He explained that a committee composed of Messrs. Moss, Pope, Moore, Bradshaw were to try and get their respective attorneys together and try and settle on some definite set of papers.

Mr. Moss reported that it was practically impossible to get attorneys to agree with each other on these things. One wanted one thing, and one another.

Mr. Watts said it seemed that the papers prepared by attorney Goode had been accepted and paid for by the Association, something ought to be done about it. He moved that the chair appoint another committee to see what they could do about straightening the matter out.

The chair appointed a committee of two, Mr. V. D. Moss, chairman and C. H. Watts, with instructions to report back at our next meeting.

Mr. East brought up the subject of automatic membership in both the Associations and he thought each state member should be compelled to take out a membership in the American Association.

Mr. Watts suggested that we approve in principle and the State Secretary collect dues for the American Association too, and turn this over to the National Secretary. This was carried unanimously.

Mr. East brought up the subject again of State Chairman holding meetings twice a year, once at the National Convention and one at some other place to be decided on later. This was the State Chairman east of Ohio.

Mr. Pope spoke in favor of it and Mr. Watts of the Beneficial, said they were in favor of it and a lot of good could be derived by the exchange of ideas by the State Chairman.

After a discussion of the expense, this matter was held over.

The chair asked some one to volunteer to write an article to be published in The Lenders News once a month. H. E. Burnett, J. J. Price and Earl H. Biel agreed to prepare papers.

Mr. East suggested that somebody get up a sample advertisement as we were all interested in advertising.

Mr. Watts said he would like to see everyone bring in their best newspaper advertisement and circular with the amount of application received and the amount of loans made on this advertisement. Mr. Pope suggested that each individual bring in a copy of their advertisement and results gained, at our next meeting.

Mr. Phillips suggested that we have one man in each city to act as chairman of that district and organize the members in his locality. He suggested the chair appoint these men to act for different districts.

Mr. Taylor of Roanoke moved that a chairman be appointed each district and the different district chairman organize the committee and report to the Association meetings what had been done. Mr. East seconded that motion and carried.

Mr. Pope appointed for Norfolk and Portsmouth, F. Bray. For Roanoke, J. J. Price, for Lynchburg, A. J. Hillsman and for Richmond, H. E. Burnett.

Mr. Herbert of Roanoke made application for membership for the Roanoke United Small Loan Corp. Mr. Price seconded the nomination, carried unanimously.

Chairman Pope said there had been a lot of comment on us holding the meetings too often and he would like suggestions from the members. Mr. Phillips suggested that we change three times a year. Mr. Price suggested that we hold them four times a year as he thought we would have a larger attendance.

Mr. East made a motion that we continue as at present to hold the meetings every sixty days. This was put to vote and thirteen voted to continue as at present and hold the meetings every sixty days, ten voted against it. Motion carried.

Time and place of our next meeting was left up to the Executive Committee. H. L. White, Chairman of the West Virginia Association, invited the members to come to West Virginia and attend some of their meetings.

Leon Henderson, of Russell Sage Foundation, gave an invitation to representatives of all state organizations to call at the Russell Sage Foundation office, in N. Y., at any time, and they would receive a cordial welcome.

The Chair appointed to act as auditing committee, E. F. Moore, and J. S. Edge.

He also appointed a secretary to take charge of the Membership and Publicity Committee and act in conjunction with the different city organizations.

Mr. Moss moved that we give a rising vote of thanks to our retiring chairman, E. P. East. Mr. Burnett seconded the motion. Mr. Watts made resolutions of appreciation to the Federal Security Company, of Lynchburg in sending Miss Scott to represent them here at this meeting.

Miss Scott expressed her appreciation of the welcome given her.

Mr. Pope asked our retiring chairman, Mr. East, to act as Master of Ceremonies for the evening entertainment. He understood an elaborate program had been prepared for us during the evening.

Mr. Watts moved that we give a rising vote of thanks to the Entertainment Committee.

There being no further business, the meeting adjourned at 5:15 p. m.

Banquet

The prominent speakers addressed us in the evening were: Leon Henderson, Associate Director of Remedial Loans, of Russell Sage Foundation. Berkley D. Adams, chairman, State Corp. Commission. M. E. Bristow, Chief Banking Examiner. W. Sam Burnley, Examiner of Small Loan Licensees of State Banking Department. Col. John Saunders, Attorney General, and Louis Epes, member of the State Corporation.

STEIMLE ELECTED VICE-PRESIDENT

At the annual election of the Associated Credit Men of Atlanta held last month at Henry Grady Hotel, Atlanta, Georgia, our own Edward Steimle, secretary-treasurer of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, was elected vice-president.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 28, 1926.

Hon. Jerome Jones,
Editor Journal of Labor,
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Sir: In Re: State laws requiring lenders of money and salary buyers to obtain license and execute proper bond as a condition precedent to doing business.

Permit me to call attention of labor officials, through the columns of the Journal, to the fact that a great percentage of the 120 "small loan companies," operating in Fulton County, Georgia, as purchasers of salaries and wages, cannot collect in courts on current contracts, because they have not complied with the simple requirements of the law as set out in the Civil Code of Georgia.

The Court of Appeals of Georgia, on September 2, 1925, in the case of McLamb vs. Phillips (129 S. E. 570), declared all contracts dealing with sales of wages, or loans of money on wages, to be VOID, unless the company doing business had been licensed and bonded, under the Statutes, when the transaction occurred.

This is merely given publicity for the reason that any company doing a loan business without submitting to the regulations of the law, is primie facie a menace to the economic well-being of the laboring class and to society generally.

Experiences of this office teaches that representatives of labor, and executives of the larger corporations in this state must acquaint themselves with the social evil of loan sharkery in all of its different forms—and must coöperate with the bona fide loan and salary buying companies in this state, with a view of resisting in the courts the contracts of "hole in the wall," "outlaw" loan companies, before the economic evils of usury can be reduced to a minimum.

Respectfully submitted,
J. L. R. Boyd,
General Counsel, Atlanta Legal Aid Society.

LOAN SHARK DRIVEN OUT OF OHIO, LOCHER SAYS

State Has Granted 246 Chattel Loan Licenses, Director of Commerce Points Out, 16 More Than Year Ago. Lenders Must Report to Department

The loan shark virtually has been driven out of Ohio.

This statement was made, Saturday, by Cyrus Locher, state director of commerce, in announcing that the state has granted 246 chattel loan licenses, an increase of 16 over a year ago.

"The elimination of the loan shark," said Locher, "has been brought about largely by the activities of the blue sky department, with the coöperation of the Ohio industrial lenders, banks and building and loan associations."

Industrial lenders operate in Ohio under the provision of the Lloyd act and reports are made to the department of commerce. Loans are made on chattels to the extent of $300, the interest rate being fixed by law and determined by scientific actuarial computations.

Investigation has revealed that about 85 per cent of the people have no collateral that would be accepted at banks as security for loans and the industrial loan business has been established for the purpose of accommodating this class of citizens, it is explained.

Money borrowed from industrial lenders finds its way back, it is declared, to local merchants in payment of small accounts, although there are many instances where the money has been used as a down payment on a lot and formed the nucleus of a fund with which to erect a home.

Coöperation between the Ohio Industrial Lenders Association and the Department of Commerce, it was declared, has placed the small loan business on a substantial basis, enabling one without banking credit to obtain funds at lawful rates of interest to tide him over in cases of emergency.—Columbus, Ohio, Dispatch, Feb. 21, 1926.

BAKER IN FLORIDA

LOAN SOCIETIES ARE NUMEROUS IN JAPAN

Tokio, Jan. 30 (A. P.).—There are 14,444 coöperative loan societies in Japan by the latest government figures. How important these societies are in Japanese life may be gauged by their deposits which total about 490,000,000 yen. Their total advances to members is given at 440,000,000 yen. The popularity of the societies is attributed chiefly to the interest paid, the average being 6½ per cent. In addition, borrowers are charged an average of 11.3 per cent per annum.—Indianapolis Star, Jan. 31, 1926.

TOO MANY ORGANIZATIONS?

Two tributes to trade associations:

Colonel Willey and Mr. Locock, who visited the United States in the interest of the Federation of British Industries, reported that one cause of American industrial success was the trade association, adding "The habit of meeting together frequently and exchanging experiences has proved to be of the greatest value to American industry." And further, "the leaders are much more ready in the United States than with us to take an active part in the work of these associations, even at great personal sacrifice."

Second tribute:

O. H. Cheney, vice-president of the American Exchange-Pacific National Bank, recently told the Sheet Metal Ware Association that the time was near when a business men's membership in a trade association will be an important factor in his banker's judgment of his credit rating, for, he explained, membership was a test of character since it showed ability to get along with one's fellowmen. Furthermore, said Mr. Cheney, membership shows intelligent business methods, and in general the soundness of the industry.

Too many organizations? Not a bit of it. Too many poor organizations? Of course. There are too many bad apples, too. But there can't be too many organizations which have a worth-while, definite purpose to accomplish and go at that job intelligently and economically.—February Nation's Business.

MERCHANTS IN MOVE TO GIVE DEBTORS AID

Finance Company Organization to Assist Debtors in Squaring Accounts Announced at Meeting

BARBOUR IS PRESIDENT

Secretary Reports Indication for 1926 Business Good; Friendship with Wholesaler Strengthened

Formation of a new Merchants' Finance Company with authorized capital of $100,000 by more than thirty retail merchants in Toledo for purpose of assisting debtors in financing their accounts was announced at the annual meeting of the Retail Merchants' Board at the Chamber of Commerce Thursday night.

Through this corporation the merchants of Toledo are pioneering in a progressive means of financing accounts and promoting credit.

Sam C. Barbour, of the Thompson-Rainie-Barbour Company, is president of the new company; Louis B. Busse, of the Franklin Printing & Engraving Company, is vice-president; George B. Stites, of the Lion Dry Goods Company, treasurer, and George C. Morrison, of the Merchants' Credit & Adjustment Bureau, secretary and manager.

Under the plan of the organization a customer of Toledo stores who needs help in financing his bills may secure a loan of three, six or nine months after making a list of his obligations and covering them all. In this way many accounts may be consolidated.

The company is incorporated under the loan laws of Ohio.

J. H. Combs, secretary, indicated in his report that the outlook for 1926 showed prospects of very good business for the retailers.

"There are greater problems, however, for the retail merchant to face than ever before," he said.

"Gigantic combinations in production to lower costs and immense development of purchasing power to cut costs of distribution are in the making. It is a time when all merchants should forget petty animosities and work together for the good of the retail business."

Combs indicated that friendly relations between local wholesalers and retailers had been strengthened during the year.

He pointed to the passage of the chain sale regulatory ordinance by city council as an outstanding act of coöperation in Toledo in recent months. Solicitors have been on the increase in the last few months and more than 700 have applied to work the stores during the year.

S. D. Vinnedge, of Lamson Brothers' Company; Alfred B. Koch, of the LaSalle & Koch Company; J. N. Zeckhauser, of the Tiedtke Brothers' Department Stores Company; T. H. Deardorff, of the Toledo Rubber Company, and Fred N. Goosman, of the Goosman Piano Company, were elected to the executive board. Holdover members are H. E. Anderson, Sam Logan, Karl Hillebrand and Arthur Thorner.

Thurman "Dusty" Miller, editor of the Wilmington Star-Journal, spoke on "Sportsmanship."

J. A. Rainie, retiring president of the board, was toastmaster.—The Toledo Times, Jan. 29, 1926.

THE MODEST REQUIREMENTS OF A SECRETARY

Walter D. Burr, who is president of the Wire Bound Box Manufacturers' Association, talked to the Business Secretaries' Forum out in Chicago the other day, and said that among other things a successful trade association secretary should

Be something of a financier;
Know something about advertising;
Know the rudiments of accountancy;
Know something about statistics;
Have initiative;
Be something of an orator;
Have political ability;
Be something of an author.

These are requirements not much more than we expect from a President of the United States.—February Nation's Business.

ST. LOUIS LOAN SHARKS DECLARED AMONG MOST RAPACIOUS IN U. S.

Expert Finds Legislation Permits Usurious Interest Rates

Loan sharks in St. Louis and Kansas City are the most rapacious of any in ten states and nineteen cities visited by Leon Henderson, head of the Department of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, who has been making a preliminary survey of loan shark conditions in Missouri with a view to determining whether the Foundation will give assistance in presenting to the 1927 Legislature the "Uniform Small Loan" law which is now in operation in twenty-three states.

The lowest rates charged by Missouri money lenders is 260 per cent per year, according to Henderson's findings as announced by him yesterday, and instances have been found where the rate has reached 600 per cent.

Automobiles Collateral

In St. Louis Henderson found that loans with automobiles as collateral often net as much as 400 per cent to the lenders and several cases were found in which a borrower of $50 paid from $120 to $180 interest for one year's salary loan and was still being held for the principal of $50.

One St. Louis railroad worker told of borrowing $10 at Christmas time in 1924 and of paying $2.50 "renewal charge" every two weeks until January, 1926.

"There are about sixty loan sharks doing business in St. Louis," said Henderson, "and a lawyer who has handled usury cases against them for twenty years says there is $1,000,000 invested with a turnover every four months, which gives St. Louis an illegal business of more than $4,000,000 annually.

100 Per Cent Returns

A return of 100 per cent on the capital invested is common. One loan shark office with a capital of $15,000 netted $13,000 profit last year, according to an employe who has since left the business.

Henderson came to Missouri at the request of several social and protective agencies which desired to ascertain whether it is feasible and possible to champion the "Uniform Small Loan" law at this time. This law aims at the elimination of loan sharks and places the lending of small sums on chattels and wage assignments on a decent basis under the direct supervision of the banking department.

Law Good Remedy

The law has proved an adequate remedy for conditions such as exist at present in Missouri and the states having such constructive legislation have never repealed or modified its provisions.

Welfare agencies report serious disturbances to family incomes because of the excessive rates paid, and because of garnishee proceedings to collect usurious loans, Henderson said.

A garnishee filing in Kansas City for a loan that had been repaid many times cost a steel company employe his job at a critical time when a baby had just been born into the family. Other interested agencies, such as Legal Aid societies and Better Business Bureaus, also report weekly trouble with the unscrupulous lenders.

Blames Inadequate Legislation

According to Henderson, the viciousness of the situation in Missouri can be laid at the door of inadequacy of legislative regulation.

"Eighty-eight per cent of the people have no bankable credit," said Henderson, "and it is this group that is constantly being confronted with financial crises that only cash in hand can meet.

"In every other field of borrowing, such as bank loans, property loans, etc., the borrower has positive protection, but in the small loan for emergency, necessitous purposes, he meets the lender on unequal terms."

The Uniform Small Loan Law has grown out of eighteen years of study and research of the small loan problem by the Russell Sage Foundation, which has assisted public-minded groups in many states to pass this effective regulation. The law requires all lenders of small sums with chattel and wage assignments as collateral to be licensed by the banking department in much the same manner as the blue sky law requires licenses of securities salesmen.

State Audits Books

It requires the banking department to make frequent audit of the transactions of each licensee, and to investigate any individual or concern reported to be making such loans at a rate higher than the banking rate.

"This positive protection takes the enforcement of usury laws in such transactions out of the limited and clumsy recourse of the poor and isolated borrower and places it where it rightfully belongs—under the strict regulation of a state department that is equipped for such defence," Henderson said. "The law also requires chattel mortgages and wage assignments to be signed by wife and husband in case the borrower is married. It defines loans so that there is no possible evasions by recourse to "third-party, innocent purchaser," and allows interest only on unpaid balances, besides requiring the lender to give the borrower a complete record of each transaction.

"Salary Purchasing"

"'Salary purchasing,' either of earned or unearned salary, becomes a loan, and such lenders must be licensed and supervised. A maximum rate of 3½ per cent interest on unpaid balances, shown by various studies to be necessary for such transaction, is permitted. Bond is required, and stiff penalties for violations are carried by the law, and the expenses of enforcement are borne by license fees paid to the Banking Department.

"Everything seems to be against the borrower in Missouri. Some employers fire employes whose wages are garnisheed, and thus furnish an effective weapon for the shark to collect his illegal fees. Garnishment cannot be filed legally against a Missouri resident without judgment, but certain courts are not too careful about this."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Feb. 14, 1926.

INTEREST LIMITATION LAWS DISCOUNTENANCE JUNIOR FINANCING FOR HOMES

Association's Study Backs Up Request for Legislative Adjustment

So-called usury laws in the various states, adopted to protect the borrower who is faced with some dire necessity from the exactions of extortionate and unconscionable lenders, are having an effect never intended by the legislators upon the use of second mortgage loans in the purchase of homes, according to a detailed study of interest laws and junior financing which has just been made by the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

The Association's study is the basis of its request that laws governing interest rates on second mortgages, in states where such laws are in effect, be adjusted so as to permit interest rates on second mortgages to correspond as nearly as possible to the actual cost of the type of financing in each locality.

Keep Money From Financing of Home Ownership

"Under the law of supply and demand the cost of such financing is, in most states of the Union, greater than the maximum interest rate permitted by the laws of those states to be charged," resolutions adopted by the Association state.

"The effect of this condition is to keep out of the second mortgage business much capital that otherwise might be attracted into this form of investment."

Adjustment of the laws governing interest rates on second mortgages is needed if capital is to be drawn freely into service to finance the purchase of homes and if the cost of such financing is to be kept as low as possible, the Association points out.

"Second mortgage financing, which has such a large part in making possible the widest extension of home ownership, is legitimate and useful. But it is suffering under laws which were never intended to restrict mortgage investment," a report made to the Mortgage and Finance Division by its committee on junior financing states. The report, made by Samuel N. Reep, of Minneapolis, is based on a study of second mortgage financing in twenty-five cities.

Present Rates Only Gauged to First Mortgage Costs

Present statutory maximums are gauged in amount to first mortgage financing, the report brings out. They ignore the fact that second mortgage credit, with the higher margin of risk necessarily involved, is worth considerably more than first mortgage credit.

Because second mortgage credit is worth more than the statutory maximums, second mortgage financing cannot be done on a business basis directly with the borrower unless it is done in violation of the law. Where lenders deal directly with borrowers there are attempts to camouflage the transactions, so that the law may be evaded. The would-be evaders are not aware of the fact that usury cannot be legally camouflaged in any way whatever.

Camouflages Attempted

All over the United States, therefore, because of the fact that most men do not wish either to violate the law or to hazard the drastic penalties of the law, the second mortgage and land contract business has become a discount business. In other words, instead of financing the borrower direct, the lender will purchase the second mortgage and land contract paper if it has been executed. This procedure is not affected by the usury law, because any man has the right to sell his mortgage or his contract at any rate of discount. If he wishes to do so he may even sell at 100% discount, which would be giving it away. The one discounting such paper, if the transaction has not been camouflaged, is not amenable in any way whatsoever to the usury law, provided that the mortgage or contract is not already tainted with usury in the hands of the seller.

Legislatures in passing laws fixing interest maximums have had in mind protection from unprincipled lenders of borrowing made under the pressure of great need, for example, that for food and clothing for a freezing and starving family. The borrowing of money for the purchase of a home is not in this class of necessitous borrowing. Only in isolated communities where there may be a monopoly condition of capital could there be any setting aside of the law of supply and demand for second mortgage purposes. Statutory maximums operate only to keep capital from flowing into channels where the credit is worth more than the statutory maximums.

The Small Loan Law as worked out by the Russell Sage Foundation, and as passed by one-half the legislatures of the United States, has already gone through the same history through which the second mortgage and land contract business is now passing, the report states. Investigation by the Foundation revealed the fact that it would require 42% on unpaid balances, or 3½% per month to attract capital into the small-loan field. About one-half the states in the Union have adopted 3% and 3½% per month on unpaid balances as the statutory maximums in that field of financing.

The report suggests that a similar separate bill be passed in regard to mortgaging for the financing of homes that would provide a maximum rate for such mortgage loans selected because it is the rate which is required to attract capital into that particular field. It is suggested that it might be made the duty of the superintendent of banks to determine the worth of second mortgage credit, and that a small commission of experts might be appointed to advise him in this respect.—News Service from National Association of Real Estate Boards, Feb. 13, 1926.

CLEVELAND HOST CITY TO A. I. L. A., Sept., 1926

Its Foundation and Growth

By Convention Board,
Cleveland Chamber of Commerce

From an isolated trading post in the wilderness in 1796 to a thriving, bustling metropolis of a million souls today—this, in a nutshell, is the history of Cleveland.

CLEVELAND CONVENTION BOARD

The city has grown, not by leaps and bounds, but by steady, substantial processes, until it now ranks fifth in the United States in population. It is among the thirty largest cities in the world. Situated, as it is, on the southern shore of Lake Erie, at the logical and most economical meeting point of ore, coal and limestone, Cleveland has become a power in industry and holds an enviable position in international commerce.

Early settlers of Cleveland little dreamed that in the short span of one hundred and twenty-nine years their trading post of a score of people would grow into a city covering 68 square miles of densely populated land, or that the ground for which they paid as low as thirty cents an acre, would later sell as high as $25,000.00 per front foot and have a total assessed valuation of nearly two billion dollars. In those primitive days who could visualize this remarkable growth?

Skyscrapers have replaced the log cabins of early pioneer days, miles and miles of paved streets, thronged by thousands of motor vehicles and pedestrians have taken the place of a few Indian trails, while thousands of magnificent homes have sprung up on the ground that a century ago was wilderness and waste.

Moses Cleaveland, Founder

Cleveland owes its location to Moses Cleaveland, chief surveyor for the Connecticut Land Company, who set out in the Spring of 1796 to survey a tract of 3,000,000 acres that is now Northern Ohio. Cleaveland and his small band of associates landed on the banks of the Cuyahoga river where it joins Lake Erie, on July of the same year. In September they laid out the site of the city a mile square on the bluff overlooking the lake.

Early growth of the city was slow and marked by many hardships and much suffering. Four years after its founding Cleveland boasted a population of but 25 persons. In 1820 there were 600, which grew to 6,071 in 1840. From that time to 1880 Cleveland practically doubled its population every ten years. In 1900 the population reached 381,000 and in the last quarter of a century this figure has almost been tripled. These figures tell the story of Cleveland's growth more graphically than words:

Year	Population
1800	25
1820	600
1840	6,071
1860	43,417
1880	160,146
1900	381,768
1920	796,841
1925	*1,000,000

*—Estimated by U. S. Census Bureau method, and includes population of the suburbs, or what is known as Greater Cleveland.

Lake Port Development

Development of Cleveland as a lake port, a big factor in placing the city in the front rank of industrial centers, played an important part in the growth of population. The first steamboat on Lake Erie, the "Walk-in-the-Water," made her maiden trip from Buffalo to Cleveland in August, 1818. At that time there were numerous small sailing vessels plying up and down the lake and many of these brought new faces to Cleveland. Daily arrivals of boats loaded with five or six hundred persons were not uncommon. Many of these emigrants foresaw the material advantages of Cleveland's geographical location on a great inland waterway and went no farther.

But it was not until the year 1852 that the ship "Baltimore" entered Cleveland's harbor with the first cargo of iron ore from the Lake Superior region and paved the way for a great industry. More than 800 large ships now ply the Great Lakes. Millions of tons of iron ore are transported from the mining districts by this huge fleet, making possible the tremendous activities of Cleveland's industries. Coal and grain also represent a large part of the traffic of lake vessels and contribute no small part toward Cleveland's commercial and industrial progress. It is estimated that fully eighty per cent of the vessels engaged in the iron ore, coal and grain trade are owned and managed by Cleveland interests.

With 14.2 miles of lake frontage, protected by a breakwater five and three-fourths miles long, a harbor amply supplied with docks, both along the lake shore and along the banks of the Cuyahoga river, Cleveland is well able to meet the demands of this ever-increasing business on the lakes.

Railroad transportation facilities, industries, banks and business houses, schools and churches, municipal and civic enterprises have developed to an equal extent. Latest records show that Cleveland has 3,048 manufacturing plans, operating on paid up capital of $762,585,000, and having a yearly pay roll of $275,000,000.00. These plants annually turn out products valued at more than one billion dollars. Bank deposits in Cleveland in the last few years have averaged more than $700,000,000.00, while latest reports show an annual total of bank clearings of more than five and one-half billions. There are more than 400 miles of street railway lines in Cleveland, over which a half billion passengers ride each year. Seven trunk railroad lines, six interurban and twelve motor bus lines enter the city. Cleveland has 225 public and parochial schools, 410 churches, 2,420 acres of parks, 959 miles of streets and 855 miles of sewers.

Cleveland Transformed

It has been within the last ten years that Cleveland has thrown off the garments which gave it the general air of an overgrown country town and assumed modern, metropolitan habiliments. Big changes have been wrought in the business section of the city, featured by the construction of numerous immense buildings. One recently completed ranks as the second largest bank building in the world. The erection of a skyscraper housing what is declared to be the finest theatre in the world represents another recent achievement in Cleveland's advancement.

This unprecedented rise in new construction has not been confined to the business section. Taking the figures for one year we find a total construction value of more than $106,000,000, of which $36,722,000, or thirty-five per cent, was devoted to building operations in Cleveland's suburbs. In the same year building permits for single dwellings and apartments were issued to provide for 7,270 families within the city limits. As building operations have kept pace with growth in population, real estate values have risen sharply. In one suburb alone values have jumped from $2,000,000 to $38,000,000 in ten years. This is typical of the rise in values in other suburbs surrounding the city.

Man of vision though he was, Moses Cleaveland could not by any stretch of imagination foresee this remarkable growth. When he had completed the task of laying out the city which was to bear his name, he returned to Connecticut and told his employers: "I believe the child is now born that may live to see that place as large as Old Wyndham" (Conn.). (The population of Old Wyndham in 1920 was 13,801.)

While this growth of population and values was remarkable, it represents only the beginning of a long list of notable achievements. Cleveland now leads the world in the manufacturing of many products. It is the most healthful of the large cities in the United States; it has some of the best hotels in America; it possesses the most magnificent Public Hall in the world; it has one of the finest art museums in existence; it represents the greatest iron ore market in the world and is a leader in the automobile industry.

Back of all this looms the spirit of progress born in the hearts of those early trail blazers, and inherited by each succeeding generation—to Cleveland's everlasting benefit.

FIRST L. A. CONVICTION FOR USURY

Los Angeles usurers must go to jail.

This, in effect, was the decision of a jury of 12 which today returned the first criminal verdict against a usurer in this county.

They found S. Wasser, 703 East Hedgeworth street, guilty of the crime of usury in a trial before Judge William E. Frederickson.

The action was brought by James Jefferson, head of the California Association Against the Practice of Usury, 220 California building, acting in behalf of Jacob Tabak, 122 North Breed street, Wasser's victim.

Sentence will be passed on Wasser by Judge Frdeerickson at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Under the law he can both send the convicted man to the county jail for any period up to six months in addition to imposing a heavy fine upon him.

The case was prosecuted by LeRoy Reames, deputy under City Prosecutor J. M. Friedlander who has been assigned to the conduct of all usury prosecutions.

Reames will conduct the prosecution of A. H. Seccombe, money lender, the first man to be arrested since The Record's anti-usury campaign. Seccombe will come to trial January 15.

The charge against Wasser was bitterly fought.

Evidence presented showed that the convicted man had practiced what the courts have termed the most vicious form of usury—the exacting of a bonus for the making of a loan.

Taback, owner of the cigar stand at First and Broadway, had sought the loan of $7,000. He needed the money immediately. Wasser, in offering to make the loan, exatced a bonus of $7,900 plus the full legal rate of interest.

In order to make this bonus appear "regular" and not usury Wasser, the evidence showed, made out two checks—one for $7,000 and the other for $1,900.

He gave both checks to Toback but accompanied him to the bank where he caused the borrower to cash the $1,900 check and hand the money back to the lender. In this way he had hoped to show he had not exacted a bonus.

The jury was out but 25 minutes when it returned its verdict.

The conviction, on a criminal charge, of a usurer was heralded today by attorneys and officials of the Anti-Usury association as one of the greatest blows yet delivered against the extortionists who have been operating unmolested here.

PROBING MANY CASES

With the law defined, Reames together with Friedlander and William V. Krowl, the city prosecutor's chief deputy, plunged into an investigation of more than two dozen cases now before them.

In all instances where a clear violation of the usury law is found, Friedlander declared, complaints would be issued and arrests made. In instances where companies have committed the usury it is the prosecutor's intention to bring into court not only the higher officials but the directors of the companies.—Los Angeles Record, Jan. 4, 1926.

McLAMB v. PHILLIPS. (No. 16115.)

(Syllabus by Editorial Staff)

1. Licenses. 39—When statute imposing license amounts to prohibition of contract made without compliance with license law stated.

As statutes imposing license taxes when designed merely to raise revenue do not impliedly nullify contracts made in contravention thereof, generally, where license required by statute is not imposed only for revenue but requires registration or licensing primarily to protect public from acts mala in se, or from improper or irresponsible persons, their imposition amounts to positive prohibition of contract made without compliance with and in violation of statute, and by implication renders such contract void.

2. Pawnbrokers and money lenders. 4—License law for protection of public.

Purpose of Civ. Code 1910, 3446-3465, prohibiting persons from engaging in business of making loans on wages or salaries without license therefor, is not to raise revenue but is for protection of persons compelled to resort to borrowing of money on small personal property security from improper or irresponsible lenders, who have failed to comply with statutes providing for such protection.

3. Pawnbrokers and money lenders. 4—Unlicensed purchaser of salary held not entitled to recover.

In views of Laws 1920, pp. 215, 219, 220 (Park's Ann. Code Supp. 1922, 1770(a), 1770(m), 1770(p), 1770(q), where undisputed testimony of plaintiff was that at time of contract he was engaged in buying wages and salaries, as defined by statute, and had not complied with requirements of Civ. Code 1910, 3446 et seq., as to giving bond and making oath and obtaining license, judgment denying recovery thereon was proper.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Peter W. Meldrim, Judge.

Action by S. McLamb against Clifton Phillips. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

H. P. Cobb, of Savannah, and R. R. Jackson, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error.

F. R. Youngblood, of Savannah, and Dorsey, Howell & Heyman, of Atlanta, for defendants in error.

(Syllabus Opinion by the Court)

JENKINS, P. J. (1) 1. While statutes imposing license taxes and providing for their collection, when designed merely to raise revenue, as in the license of real estate agents, do not impliedly nullify contracts made in contravention of their provisions (Toole v. Wiregrass Development Co., 142 Ga. 57, 60-63, 82 S. E. 514), the general rule of law is that, where the license required by the statute is not imposed only for revenue purposes, but requires registration or licensing primarily for the purpose of protecting the public from acts mala in se, or detrimental to good morals, or from improper, incompetent, or irresponsible persons, as in the case of unregistered or unlicensed druggists or physicians, their imposition amounts to a positive prohibition of a contract made without a compliance with and in violation of the statute, and by implication renders such a contract void and uninforceable. Taliaferro v. Moffett, 54 Ga. 150, 153; Murray v. Williams, 121 Ga. 63, 48 S. E. 686; Jalonick v. Greene County Oil Co., 7 Ga. app. 309, 311, 66 S. E. 815; Singleton v. State, 14 Ga. App. 527(3), 533, 81 S. E. 596; 37 Corpus Juris, 260; 17 R. C. L. 560.

(2) 2. The act of 1904 (page 79) embodied in Civil Code 1910, 3446-3465, prohibits any "person, firm, or corporation" from engaging "generally, regularly, or collaterally to any other business, in the business of making loan on * * * wages, or salaries, or in the business of buying wages or salaries, without first obtaining a license for carrying on such business." Section 3446. Such a license, where the business is to be conducted within the limits of an incorporated city or town, must be obtained from the proper municipal officer issuing licenses, and where conducted within such limits, from the ordinary of the county. Section 3447. As a preliminary condition to the granting of such a license, the applicant is required to file with the mayor of the town, or the ordinary of the country, a $500 bond, conditioned upon "the faithful performance by the licensee of the duties and obligations pertaining to the business so licensed, and the prompt payment of any judgment which may be recovered against said licensee on account of damages or other claim arising directly or collaterally from any loan of money or sale of wages or salary." Section 3449. The only provision of this act that relates to the raising of revenue or to moneys derived from the issuance of such licenses and the giving of such bonds is that the "ordinary or officer issuing the license shall receive, for each license so issued, a fee of one dollar and fifty cents." Thus the manifest purpose of these statutes is not the raising of revenue, but is the protection of that portion of the population which, because of small means for temporary adversity, is compelled to resort to the borrowing of money on small personal property security, or to the sale of salaries, from improper or irresponsible lenders who have failed to comply with the statutes provided for such protection.

(3) 3. Irrespective of whether or not the Judge of the Superior Court was right in overruling the certiorari of the lender or purchaser of the defendant debtor's salary from a judgment of the Municipal court in favor of the defendant, on the ground that the transaction was a loan and not a sale, the judgment of the Superior Court was never the less correct, since, under the undisputed evidence and the testimony of the plaintiff himself, he was at the time of the contracts in question "engaged in the business of buying wages and salaries," as defined by the statute, and "had not complied with the requirements of the act of 1904, embodied in the code sections 3446 et seq of the Code of 1910, as to the giving bond and making oath and obtaining the license required."

Judgment affirmed.

STEPHENS and BELL, JJ., concur.

On Rehearing.

JENKINS, P. J. This cause arose on a petition by an alleged purchaser or assignee of wages, against the employee, to collect the amounts represented by two alleged assignments or bills of sale, one for $20.40 and the other $6.80. The municipal court found for the defendant, and the Superior Court overruled the plaintiff's certiorari, basing its judgment primarily on the ground that the trial court, under the evidence, was authorized to find that "the transaction was not a bona fide purchase of wages but a loan." There was testimony, as referred to in the judgment, that $15 was actually paid for the $20.40 alleged assignment or sale, and that, several months after this alleged assignment or bill of sale was executed, the defendant executed another assignment in the same amount, but no money was paid to him, such assignment being made "for no other consideration than the further forbearance to collect the amount" previously assigned, and that on the latter date the $6.80 assignment was executed; $5 being paid as its consideration. The plaintiff testified also, in referring to the $20.40 assignment, that "there had been several previous transactions * * * involving the same principal sum and the same rate of discount"; that "it was often several months before he received payment of the money advanced; and that he forebore enforcing the payment by sending in notice to the employing railroad company or otherwise for the reason that it would inconvenience (defendant) and everybody concerned." We cannot say that, under this testimony, the municipal court, sitting without a jury, and the Superior Court on certiorari, were unauthorized to find, as to the $20.40 transaction, that, if the original transaction were a bona fide purchase, "there was no room for other transactions involving the principal sum, neither was there room for the application of a rate of discount," and that "forbearance has no place" in such a transaction. But there appears to be no evidence authorizing such a finding as to the $6.80 assignment. For this reason, and as an additional reason why the judgment of the court below was correct as to the $20.40 item, irrespective of such finding, the original syllabus of this court was planted upon the further ground that both transactions were illegal and unenforceable, even if they be taken as bona fide sales or assignments, since the plaintiff admittedly was then engaged in the "business of buying wages or assignments," and had failed to give the preliminary bond and obtain the license required by the act of 1904, embodied in section 3446 to 3465, inclusive, of the Civil Code of 1910. Ga. L. 1904, p. 79. It is only necessary to consider this phase of the ruling, to which the motion for rehearing and the able and scholarly briefs of counsel are directed.

While it is the duty of courts and juries to strip from an alleged assignment or sale of wages the false and fictitious vestments in which it may be clothed, and to look to real facts and circumstances which manifest a usurious loan, notwithstanding express written verbiage, both the Supreme Court and this court have uniformly sustained bona fide actual assignments and sales made in conformity to statute. Jackson v. Johnson, 157 Ga. 189, 121 S. E. 230; Covington v. Rosenbusch, 148 Ga. 459 (1), 97 S. E. 78; Centralnof Georgia R. Co. v. King Bros., 137 Ga. 369, 73 S. E. 632; King v. State, 136 Ga. 709, 71 S. E. 1093; Atlanta Finance Company v. Lusford, 32 Ga. App. 787 (1), 124 S. E. 813.

The Legislature, by the act of 1904 (Civil Code, 3446-3465), as quoted in the second division of the syllabus, enacted and espressed and positive prohibition against any person engaging "generally, regularly, or collaterally * * * in the business of buying wages or salaries, without first obtaining a license for carrying on such business," and required the giving of a bond, for the benefit of persons whom might be injured by acts or omissions under the statute, as a condition precedent to such a license. This law in both its original title and language, covers a legitimate business for the bona fide purchase of wages or salaries, as well as businesses and pretended transactions which are merely camouflages for usurious loans and discounts charges. There seems to have been no subsequent legislation effecting this manner of licensing and transaction of such legitimate business and sales. While the act of 1920 (Georgia L. 1920, pp. 215-222; Park's code, Supp. 1922, 1770(a)-(s), by its title and language, regulates 'the business of making loans in sums of $300, or less * * * and * * * the assignment of wages or salaries, earned or to be earned, when taken as security for any such loan," (italics ours), it has been held not to cover a bona fide assignment or sale. Tollison v. George, 153 Ga. 612 (1), 614, 112 S. E. 896; Atlanta Joint Terminals v. Walton Discount Co., 29 Ga. App. 225, 227, 114 S. E. 908. See, also, as to other legislation regulating rates of interest and discount, Ison Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 17 Ga. App. 177, 62 S. E. 726. The act of 1920 nullifies and precludes enforcement of certain loans and salary assignments given to secure the same when made in contravention of its provisions as to special licensing by the state bank examiner and as to rates of interest or discount, so that the present transactions would be unenforceable thereunder, if they be treated as loans, as was done by the judge on certiorari (Ga. L. 1920, pp. 220-222; Park's code Supp. 1770(m), (p), (q); but nothing in that act or any other legislation has apparently either expressly or by implication repealed the law of 1904 so far as it relates to a business of actual bona fide buying of wages or salary. That original act, to this extent, therefore, remains in full force; and it remains to consider its effects upon the transactions here in question, if taken in whole or in part as actual purchase or assignment. The rule expressed in the first division of the syllabus supported by precedents of the Supreme Court of this court, is substantially as recognized by other courts and text writers that such agreements without the required license are void and unenforceable, where the license is required for the public protection and to prevent improper persons, dealers, and to stock brokers, pawnbrokers, peddlers, inn keepers, plumbers and other like professions and vocations from acting in a particular capacity and not for revenue purposes only and such a general rule has been formerly applied to liquor dealers and to stock brokers, pawn brokers, peddlers, inn keepers, plumbers and other like professions and vocations. 13 Corpus Juris, 423 (Section 353 (3)); 37 Corpus Juris, 269 (Section 137); 6 R. C. L. 701 (Section 107), 692 (Section 98); 25 Cyc. 633; Clark on Contracts, 385; Gilley v. Harold, 118 Tenn. 115, 101 S. W. 424 (5); Barton v. Port Jackson, etc., 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 397; Cook v. Pierce, 2 Houst. (Del) 499; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 122 Ill. App. 40; Buckley v. Humason, 50 Minn. 195, 52 N. W. 385, 16 L. R. A. 423 (2), 36 Am. St. Rep. 637; Flora v. Hartman, 61 Ind. App. 440, 109 N. E. 846; Johnson v. Berry, 20 S. D. 133, 104 N. W. 1114, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159; Randall v. Tuell, 89 Me. 443, 36 A. 910, 38 L. R. A. 143; Schnaier v. Navarre Hotel and Importation Co., 182 N. Y. 83, 74 N. E. 561, 70 L. R. A. 722, 108 Am. St. Rep. 790.

"Where a statute enacts, for the purpose of securing a more effectual compliance with its requirements in respect to the licensing of certain occupations, that no one shall engage or carry on any such occupation, until he shall have obtained a license as provided by the statute, it is an expressed prohibition without more particular words." Hall v. Bishop, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 109. The statute here in question expressly prohibits the carrying on of the business without the prescribed bond and license. It is manifestly not designed, with a mere nominal license fee of $1.50, to collect or enforce revenue, but is primarily and almost solely intended to protect a great mass of the borrowing population from improper or irresponsible dealers, who might otherwise unduly profit from their distress and necessity. Similar legislation has been recognized by the Court of Appeals of Maryland in Wight v. B. & O. R. Co., 146 Md. 66, 75, 125 A. 881, 884, 37 A. L. R. 864, to be a proper and legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. As was there said:

"In the very nature of the thing, money lending or wage brokers carry on a business public in its nature, and dealing with necessitous persons often incapable through ignorance or the impelling force of their needs from protecting themselves have opportunities for extortion and unfair dealing which, unless restrained by proper and reasonable regulation, they may use to the detriment and injury of their patrons."

Nor is it necessary that "a statute should impose a penalty for doing or omitting to do something, in order to make a contract void which is opposed to its operation." Gunter v. Lackey, 30 Ala. 591; McGehee v. Lindsy, 6 Ala. 16; Black v. Oliver, 1 Ala. 449, 35 Am. Dec. 38; Walker v. Gregory, 36 Ala. 180. "The imposition of a penalty by statute is only material, in that it shows an intention upon the part of the Legislature to prohibit the act penalized. It is the prohibition and not the penalty that renders illegal agreements and violation of the statute." Clark on Contracts, 388; 13 Corpus Juris, 420 (Section 351), 424 (Section 356; 13 Corpus Juris, 356. The fact, therefore, that the act of 1904 contains no criminal penal provision will not, in the face of its express language and manifest purpose, defeat its inhibitions.

It is further argued on the alleged purchaser that, since the legislation and alleged business relate only to mala in prohibita, and not to mala in se, such contracts will not be avoided. This, however, is not the rule. "Formerly a distinction was made in determining the question whether the contracts were illegal between acts mala prohibita and those mala in se, but the old rule no longer obtains. Either, under all modern authorities, nullifies the contract." 6 R. C. L. 694 (99), 701 (106); 13 Corpus Juris, 420 (351); Clark on Contracts, 386. The only limitation or exception to this rule, as recognized in this state, is that the statute must not be designed primarily for the collection or enforcement of revenue. See, as to the broader rule even as to revenue statutes in other jurisdictions. Benjamin on Sales (Corbin's Ed.) par. 825.

But it is insisted that, since sections 3462 and 3463, embodying the only civil penalties contained in the act of 1904, provide merely that, for failure to observe the requirements of the act, the trangressor "shall forfeit the license and all interest charge on the loan," and, "the license under which said business is conducted shall become ipso facto void," such language must be held to comprehend within itself the entire purpose of the Legislature, and to preclude entirely any implied forfeiture or avoidance of contracts made in the absence of the required license and bond. It was this question that caused the grant of the motion for rehearing, as we desired to consider anew this point, and wanted the assistance of the able counsel who appear of record in resolving the difficulty. This contention appears without merit. As was argued by counsel for the borrower:

"This section relates to persons who have obtained a license, because it would be absurd to say that a person, firm, or corporation having no license at all should 'forfeit the license and all interest charged on the loan.'"

Likewise, the language in terms relates only to a "loan," and does not cover actual sales of wages or salaries, which are also expressly included in the prohibitory provisions of the act in question. As counsel further urge:

"If section 14 is construed to prescribe all the results that follow from a failure to obtain a license, then an unlicensed person, under the act, stands in a better position than a person having a license. The unlicensed person, therefore, would be subjected to less punishment than the licensed person. This would result in an absurdity. It would thus follow that there would be no reason for any person to comply with the act and to obtain a license, and there would be no means whatever provided in the act for its enforcement. It would render the act a nullity, and in effect nullify all its provisions. Every law is to be given a reasonable interpretation, and the policy of the law is to be gathered from the intention of the law making power in the passage of the act. The act itself expressly and in terms prohibits the carrying on of this business by unlicensed persons. Under all the authorities this prohibition clearly shows the legislative intent to make the business when carried on by an unlicensed person contrary to law, and all contracts made in violation of the statute and of the policy declared therein void and unenforceable. To so hold renders the act reasonable and effective. The holding to the contrary would make the act unreasonable and ineffective, and would impute to the law making power the doing of a vail and idle thing."

After full consideration of the additional contentions and arguments presented on rehearing, the original judgment and syllabus are adhered to.

Judgment adhered to.

LEVELING THE PEAKS AND VALLEYS OF BUSINESS

Old jokes concerning "lying statisticians and statistics" fall flat in the face of our present need of more and better factual data in modern business management and intelligent industrial control.

Trade associations can render to their members no more valuable service than perfecting their methods of gathering, compiling and reporting to them and making available to the government and public, current figures which will give a composite picture of what is going on in the industry. It is on the basis of such facts that not only the producer, distributor and consumer may act intelligently but also the Secretary of Commerce is enabled to report the trends of industry and business.

The peaks and valleys of supply and demand in commodity markets—sometimes called the "ups and downs" in business—are due in no small degree to the lack of dependable figures to guide or influence judgment in the individual regulation of production and distribution. Individual errors in estimating or guessing as to production, shipments, stocks, etc., in the aggregate often culminate in overproduction and the stagnation of distribution in many lines, to the great loss and detriment of all concerned—unemployment and market demoralization are some of the by-products.

Why don't we have these vital figures?

The answer is, we do, in a number of outstanding and successful lines which appreciate their value—but with the remainder the chief reason is the unwillingness of business to give up its figures because it has not fully realized the value and use of statistics in business management.

Secondly, and also most important, is the fact that too many forms used for presenting these facts have been arranged to gratify the ambition of the statistician and fail to convey the information readily assimilable by the average business man—they are too complicated.

The task of the Trade Association in dealing with this problem is twofold.

First—to convince its members of the great value of developing vital facts as to what is going on in the industry and the practical use which may be made of them in control and management.

Second—since the Supreme Court has stamped with its approval the gathering and distribution of trade statistics as information, as a legal and legitimate activity for trade associations to engage in, associations should reconstruct where necessary, their machinery and methods of developing and reporting facts of interest to those concerned.

Further, that it is desirable that these reports be standardized to an extent which will make them reasonably comparable with those in allied lines, thus rendering an additional service.—Chamber of Commerce U. S. A. Bulletin.

OFFICIALS WARNED OF "LOAN SHARKS

Dyer Declares Lenders Are Using Federal and D. C. Employes to Cover Up

Learning that the loan shark law is being violated by wholesale throughout the scores of Government establishments in Washington, with many thousands of District and Federal employes fleeced of a large percentage of their pay, Representative Dyer, Republican, of Missouri, author of that law, is writing to the chief clerk and other officials in each department or establishment of the Government advising them to warn their personnel.

The loan sharks, Mr. Dyer says, are using certain Government employes to cover up their own unlawful activities in loaning many thousands of dollars a week at usurious rates of interest. He is anxious that all people of the National Capital may be informed fully about the law and protect themselves under it against the loan sharks.

Violations of the law will be brought by him to the attention of the proper officials in the District in his campaign for enforcement.

One of his letters of warning was sent to Bertrand Acker, chief clerk of the Department of Interior, and reads as follows:

"I beg to inclose herewith a copy of public act No. 359, and invite your special attention to same. It has come to me that this law is being violated through using certain employes of the Government in certain departments in Washington.

"I think a word from you to the employes in your department that any one directly or indirectly violating this law will be dismissed from the service would have a good and wholesome effect. Some money sharks under cover I am sure are using employes to carry on this nefarious business that we thought we put an end to some years ago in the enactment of the law referred to. As I was the author of this legislation, I am anxious for it to give the best possible results for the good of the people of the District of Columbia."—*The Sunday Star, Washington, D. AMERICAN "THANK YOU" LEAGUE

Will You Sit Up, Smile and Consider? "Thank You"

Will you say "Thank You"?

Will you ask your family, friends and employes to say "Thank You"; urge all with whom you come into contact to voice that short and simple expression of appreciative courtesy?

It's a simple thing to ask and an equally simple thing to do, yet the rewards will be large, and almost immediate, for courtesy is the road to friendship.

Not alone is the courteous custom of saying "Thank You" the hallmark of gentle birth, thoughtful training and a kindly nature, but it is an evidence of wisdom—it opens closed doors, breaks down sales barriers and swells dividends.

Don't overlook that fact. If you can't or if you won't say "Thank You" simply because it is the kindly, correct and graceful thing to say, say it because it will make friends and sell goods.

And yet foreign editors and returning travelers charge that we, as Americans, have so far forgotten the "Thank You" of common politeness that we are charged, as a nation, with intentional rudeness or crude ignorance.

Is the Charge True?

Is it possible that we of the land that supposedly leads in enlightenment lag behind in the observance of the commonplace amenities of everyday business and social intercourse? If so the time has arrived to bring about a change.

Will you say "Thank You"?

Thank You! We knew you would. And will you do even more in this determined effort to refute this charge of national impoliteness?

Will you sign the enclosed card and thereby become a well-wisher and an abettor of an organization that has as its sole purpose the wider dissemination of the exchange of a common courtesy? An answer, supplemented perhaps by an opinion, or a suggestion, would prove that you are in sympathy with this cause. It would be helpful.

Will your answer come soon? We believe it will, and because of that belief, we say "Thank You."

Very truly yours,
Roy Crandall,

CURBING OF SPECULATION IS UP TO BANKERS

New York, Jan. 25.—Fearful of present speculative tendencies, J. H. Tregoe, Executive Manager of the National Association, in a statement issued to the 30,000 members of the association today, points out that bankers can correct almost overnight any dangerous business tendency, but that there is a temptation in some banking circles to neglect the safeguarding instinct for the money-lending instinct.

"My respect for the power of our banking institutions is most profound," Mr. Tregoe's statement reads, "but I feel that in too large a number of instances the money-lending instinct, rather than the safeguarding instinct, is uppermost and eventually plays havoc with credit.

"I don't know at present of a single dangerous tendency in the present business situation that could not be corrected almost overnight if bankers' judgments directed them toward tightening the purse strings. In no business institution is it so important that credit fundamentals should be understood and lived up to as in the bank. A slip in banking judgment or an indulgence of speculative tendencies exacts a heavy price and is far more serious than the mistakes in judgment made by credit departments in appraising the safety of buyers. Our organization can work day in and day out against injurious or unwise practice, but, if the banks help to keep these practices alive, our work and preaching will be in vain.

"Preaching has its merits and its compensations but it is a religious force alone and its powers to change people and correct unethical trends is a slow process usually and after generations the inventory of results in many instances is negligible.

"As I have browsed for more than four decades in the fields of business, I have learned to realize that the greatest power in the business field is the banker. Where there are errors to correct, unwise tendencies to check and reforms to bring about, preaching alone is a slow process whereas the dictates of the banking fraternity can operate immediately. As the nation's reservoirs of credit, banks exercise extensive powers, and as such they are prime ministers to many of their borrowers. Business could not function without these reservoirs of credit that are just as necessary as the reservoirs of water to the sanitation and life of a community.

"The powers of our banking institutions have grown enormously in the past fifty years. In 1876 there were 2,086 national banks with a combined capital of 505 millions; deposits of 629 millions, and loans of 963 millions. Their circulation was 315 millions and their specie holdings only 17 millions.

"In 1921 there were 8,155 national banks with $1,276,000,000 capital and $1,566,000,000 surplus and profits. Loans of $10,978,000,000; deposits of $12,144,000,000 and circulation of $705,000,000.

"The national banks have made more progress since 1921 and all of the commercial banking institutions of the country show total resources exceeding many times the resources of fifty years ago. When the nation began to expand its borders into the Northwest and the Southwest, land speculation became rife and there was an orgy of it in the first two decades of the Nineteenth Century. The banks of those days did not restrain the speculative tendency but helped it along. The crash came in 1919, overwhelming many mercantile and banking institutions. I can find in all our industrial and financial history no great disaster that cannot be accounted for largely by some lapse of banking judgment. This was patent to us in 1919 when the speculative fever gripped so many of our banking institutions which helped to bring about a condition with disaster and wreckage in its wake.

"If we are going too far in our speculative tendencies and the banks are willing to loan funds for speculative purposes, what matters it how much we may preach against this tendency? The condition will continue merrily until the crash and the day of reckoning come."—National Ass'n of Credit Men., Dept. of Public Relations.

LOAN SHARK IS NOW VANISHING

Russell Sage Foundation, Supported by Money Lenders, Has Helped Put the Trade on a Sound Basis

By Elizabeth G. Stern

The lending of money on a large scale is a great enterprise, part of the business of banking, but the lending of money on a small scale has for many centuries been held to be a disgraceful thing. Its practices have been considered part of the shameful forces of society, and with justice. Some of the most poignant tragedies of the self-respecting poor in our great cities have come through those secret little offices where money is lent "without security" and in small amounts. Some of the most bitter oppression has been practiced by merciless money lenders whose prey usually has been the workingman's earning, let us say, a thousand dollars or so a year, with a family to support—sudden emergencies of sickness, unemployment or accident forcing him to seek some means, however costly in the end, to obtain loans.

This workingman has no property to offer as security, nor has he bonds or stocks. Therefore he cannot borrow from the banks. He has only his "character," his wages, his scanty household goods and his promise to pay. The one man who would lend him money on these terms is the man at the loan office. And so he has been obliged to submit to whatever extortionate terms were set for him.

Most of the loans were for sums under $300. But until recently the business of making these small loans has been subject to the same rules of law as the lending of larger sums. Legally, a lender could not charge more than six per cent. (or whatever the contract rate in his particular State happened to be), but actually laws for scores of years had not troubled the lender. He made his own terms; his business was carried on outside the law.

New Law in Fifteen States

Ten years or so ago newspapers were full of the rapacity of the loan sharks. The man engaged in lending money to the poor was out for all he could get. The term "loan office" was justly an epithet of disgrace, from which decent citizens turned. But in the last ten years there has developed a "small loan" business run by men who are doing their work not as a philanthropy, but for profit, not for sentimental reasons or for "uplift"—and yet holding to a high ideal of business ethic sponsored by a great social service agency.

The social service agency is the Russell Sage Foundation. The lenders working with it are members of a national organization called the American Industrial Lenders' Association, which, since its formation in 1916, has been influential in having passed and enforced the Uniform Small Loan law, worked out by the foundation. This law has made a revolutionary change in the lending of money to the working men of the country. In fifteen States the law has already been passed. In eight more part of its provisions exists. The lenders' organization itself, through its Chairman, E. P. East, and L. C. Harbison, the Legislative Chairman, has been working for this law.

Perhaps the best way to understand the import of this change is to recall the so-called "small loan business" as it was practiced in the past. Confusion, secrecy and lawlessness were its characteristics. When, fifteen or so years ago, public inquiry was made into the business, it was shown that poor people were paying from 10 per cent a month to 1,700 per cent a year for the small sums they borrowed. Payments were so twisted that a man could pay endlessly for a sum once borrowed. A smart money-lender could make a slave of the wretch once in his clutches. In 1910 the Russell Sage Foundation decided to study the situation. Its proposed laws were the result of this investigation.

Dr. Louis N. Robinson, formerly head of the Department of Economics at Swarthmore College, since 1923 has been surveying the small-loan business, its history and processes before the reforms suggested by the foundation were inaugurated, and the results of those reforms in the past ten years.

Extent of the Trade

Dr. Robinson finds that, contrary to opinion, the "small-loan" business is not a business of the East particularly, but flourishes most, whether East or West, in large industrial cities. The farmer requires another sort of lending agency. The loan offices were usually started by individuals who often developed chains of offices, scattered through a city, a State or larger territory. There were no companies; no stock was sold. Each man conducted his business in secret. Neither the public nor the money lenders themselves knew anything about the size of the business as a whole and little of its relation to money lending in general. The only organizations existing among small lenders were the banding together of the money lenders in a few cities to black list customers known as "bad pay," and these lists were kept secret. The rates of interest were fixed, as were the terms of payment, by the will of the money lender.

"The rates," says Dr. Robinson, "varied considerably. One large 'chattel-loan company, which had offices in many important cities in East and Middle West, charged 10 per cent a month on loans under $50. One 'salary-loan' man who had been in the business in the old days before any reform was made told me that legitimate firms' took 10 per cent a month interest—that was a conservative rate. Newspaper investigations revealed that Boston lenders charged all the way from 3 to 10 per cent a month. Kansas City 15 per cent straight, Philadelphia 20 per cent. In Pittsburgh you might pay from 72 to 300 per cent a year, and in Chattanooga from 200 to 300 per cent, whereas in Indianapolis it was 1500 per cent, and in New Orleans it shot from 600 to 1700 per cent a year. It depended on what the lender thought he could get in interest entirely. A workingman who would borrow, let us say, $100 to pay a doctor's bill, might pay a money lender seventeen times as much as his original loan and still owe the principal in the end."

However, it was apparently not only the original loan which the borrower carried, and for which he paid interest. "Most loans," Dr. Robinson found, "had of course to be renewed. Sometimes, when a poor fellow had paid his loan over and over again and began to protest at the charges and interest on the accumulated amount (though it took courage to do this), the common practice of the lender was to switch his loan to another branch office, ostensibly to another lender, as the borrower would think. This meant new payments and added interest again."

WAGES AS SECURITY

Most frequently money was lent on so-called "salary security," for which the lender could take the borrower's salary in payment. Not only could he take a man's wages after interest had covered the loan again and again, but if he found the man protesting or "slow," he could cause the unfortunate to lose his job in addition. For the lender would go, as an extreme measure, to the borrower's employer. And employers felt that a worker who sought the loan offices was extravagant and undesirable as an employe.

"We have been studying the records sent us by loan offices in seventeen States," said Dr. Robinson. "We received 10,000 such records filled out, each month, through the coöperation of the prominent lenders. Our study shows that the two original causes that bring people to ask for these small loans are the universally human ones—sickness or death in the family, and loss of a job."

The 10,000 questionnaires received by Dr. Robinson in the course of his survey reveal that money is borrowed to pay bills for medical expenses, coal, clothing and rent, furniture, assistance to relatives and the education of children. The largest sums borrowed in the small loan offices is for doctor's bills.

These loans constitute a "demand" in the economic sense; that is, as Dr. Robinson points out, the people who want loans can pay for them. Over four-fifths of the borrowers studied were found to be native-born white people, born and reared amid American surroundings. The people who come to loan offices are not, therefore, beggars or disreputable people, but hard-working and honest and reliable.

MOVE FOR REFORM

Philanthropic societies dabbled in the problem. Churches, lodges, employers, groups of citizens, made loans to needy borrowers, asking a moderate interest or even none. Newspapers made war on the loan sharks. Determined but spasmodic efforts were made to drive them out of the cities, and their offices were raided by police. Lenders were haled into court. States passed special loan acts.

As a result of all this, "remedial loan associations" were established. They performed an admirable service. Those who helped to raise the capital of these societies were largely board members of other philanthropic societies in their cities, men interested in the work not as a business measure but as a public service.

But it was apparent that remedial loan societies could not obtain enough capital to supply the demand. There was need for a business basis in the making of small loans. The man who applied for loans earned from $30 to $35 a week, the woman from $15 to $20. They were obliged to pay in small weekly or monthly sums. There was no reason, Dr. Robinson points out, for this business to be run as a philanthropy.

In 1914 the Russell Sage Foundation helped to enact in New Jersey a law that struck a direct blow at the loan shark. It cut off the business of making small loans from other forms of lending, and made it possible for a lender to make small loans in a decent, dignified way within the law.

Lenders who had long lived outside the law found they could do a reasonable business under the new law. They decided to help toward a legalized, supervised, small loan business in which they could engage and not be ashamed. In 1916 a group of loan men met in Atlantic City and sent a letter to the Russell Sage Foundation inviting its assistance and advice.

NEW JERSEY LAW

This group adopted a platform the first plank of which was the welfare of its members, and the second, "to protect the borrowing public against extortionate practices." The Russell Sage Foundation sent a representative to the meeting. Other conferences between the two groups followed and out of them was finally evolved the principle of the so-called Uniform law.

Since the drafting of the Uniform law the new American Industrial Lenders' Association has consistently preached and worked for the principles and methods set by the Russell Sage Foundation for the business. It has pushed the enactment and enforcement of the Uniform Small Loan law, which has brought a new era into this business, Dr. Robinson points out. The law provides that interest shall not be more than 3½ per cent a month; no fees, commissions, charges, shall be demanded; interest shall not be collected in advance or compounded, and shall be reckoned only on balances. The lender must be licensed by the State and his business supervised. Not more than a tenth of a man's salary can be taken at one time for debt. Punishment for extoritionate interest is not, as before, only the loss of interest or or excess interest, but a fine of $500 and six months in prison.

Deceptive advertising for the most part has been eliminated. Standard forms of application are used. The secret doorway is discarded. And, best of all, the cost to borrowers is less than a third of what was charged by the best of the old-time loan sharks.

The small-loan business has come into the open. It calls itself now the business of "industrial lending." The offices look much like small banks. Corporations to do small-loan business are now organized, and stocks and bonds are offered to investors. Where previously the goal was to make a fortune through the sharpest method conceivable, the aim of the new type of men engaging in the business, Dr. Robinson finds, is to make profits by financial service at reasonable cost to the borrower. Married people go to the loan offices to borrow money for their homes, small business men also.

The national and State organizations of lenders now hold public conventions which are addressed by prominent men. Various phases of the business are discussed openly at these meetings, and the public has opportunity to acquaint itself with its nature.

"The making of small loans," says Dr. Robinson, "was always a necessary business, but because it had no proper legal setting, it was carried on outside the law. The Uniform law has made it a legal business, and by bringing it into the open has raised its standards with its status."

While the greater number of States having large industrial cities have enacted the Uniform law, there are still some which have not yet taken the step. Dr. Robinson believes it is prejudice, combined with a mistaken notion of how the business is carried on, that stands in the way of their doing so. The Russell Sage Foundation's Department of Remedial Loans, under the direction of Leon Henderson, is urging the extension of the Uniform law.

FIRST ANNUAL BANQUET

Connecticut Industrial Lenders' Association, Hotel Taft, New Haven, March 24, 1926

At 7:00 P. M. Wednesday, March the 24th, the first annual dinner and dance got under way, attended by 152 members and their guests with Charles H. Watts officiating as toastmaster. The Rev. Richard H. Clapp, pastor of the United Church of New Haven, pronounced the invocation and later in the program delivered a speech on the Small Loan business. He stated that he was both pleased and entertained at being invited as it opened a new situation to him as previously he had known of this form of the loan business. He recalled "A hard boiled, hard shelled Yankee loan shark" in his small home town and said that common human decency was what is needed in business, especially as three-fourths of the people can't do business in the usual commercial way and said he was sure that we filled that need.

Both Mayor John B. Tower and Bank Commissioner were confined to their homes by sickness. Thomas A. Tully, President of the board of aldermen, spoke for the mayor, saying, "It is a fine thing for people carrying on any line of business to get together and compare notes. In the old days when competitors went after rivals in business with a blackjack and a gun I can very well recall, but there has been a change in practically every form of industry and these meetings give satisfaction to those who find they are ahead of the game and stimulus to those who are behind." With these words he then welcomed to New Haven the some 150 from all parts of the state.

Lester Shippee, deputy bank commissioner, spoke for Commissioner Byrne, declaring that the small loan business has been on a higher plane since the Small Loan act has been passed and since the Connecticut Association organized in an effort to police the business. The guests voted unanimously, following Mr. Shippee's short speech to send a telegram to Mr. Byrne expressing their regrets at his illness.

Leon Henderson, associate director of the remedial loans department of the Russell Sage Foundation of New York, sharply criticized the firms in credit business calling them "credit loan sharks." In introducing Mr. Henderson, Toastmaster C. H. Watts, stated that the Russell Sage Foundation used to be the bogey-man of the money lenders but now the small loan men and the foundation were endeavoring to so regulate the small loan business that they were mutually admiring each other. During Mr. Henderson's very interesting address he spoke on tolerance, saying, "Tolerance is needed in the small loan business and you are gradually approaching the true and perfect worth of tolerance as a gauge is being developed and applied. Tolerance of viciousness and ignorance is becoming less and less and men in your business who will not fit the gauge will automatically drop out for they will not be tolerated." Referring to the installment business Mr. Henderson said, "The foundation is interested in the small loan business as a social proposition. The Russell Sage Foundation undertakes to maintain representation of the small necessitous borrower and enable him to maintain his independence. Very few people have touched on the cost to the necessitous buyer and the difference between the cash price and that on the installment basis. Recently I was struck with this particular thing when I realized that these men are not selling merchandise but are selling credit and are credit loan sharks. There is something unholy and most unrighteous in demanding usurious rates for credit, and it cannot help but be a serious prejudice to a family's standard of living when at the beginning of the year from 25 to 30 per cent of his income is signed away."

Dancing and singing were furnished during the dinner by the Misses Foreto, Lucelle Gagliardi, Lillian Brooks, Irene Dalton, and Lucia Cavallaro, while Stevens Wuilchynski played a violin solo.

Following the dinner and the speakers dancing was the order of the night which lasted until midnight.

The entertainment committee included: L. W. Merritt, chairman, A. G. Zimmerman, H. P. Stephenson, F. G. Reuter, L. W. Scarpa, R. C. Bernhardt, and T. C. O'Brien.

THE CONNECTICUT LENDERS BANQUET AS OBSERVED FROM THE SIDELINES

Connecticut's first big eats and jig got a flying start under the guidance of Charles H. Watts as toastmaster, and we heard confidentially that Mr. Watts is a charter member of the toastmasters union and when it comes to toasting he sure does things up brown.

After invocation was offered by the Rev. Raymond H. Clapp, of New Haven, the first speaker introduced was Thomas Tully, who pinch hit in place of John Tower, the mayor of New Haven, on account of the mayor being sick. As usual Mr. Tully gave us the key to the town but from what I observed some of the boys were around to the family entrance of the city hall early in the afternoon and already borrowed the key and as possession is nine points of the law they proceeded to paint things red.

The next speaker who is dear to the hearts of all Connecticut lenders was Mr. Lester Shippee, Deputy Bank Commissioner, who spoke in place of Mr. J. B. Byrne, the Bank Commissioner, who was very ill. A telegram was sent to Mr. Byrne wishing him God speed in his recovery.

The last speaker introduced by the toastmaster who like all good banquets was Mr. Leon Henderson, Associate Director Russell Sage Foundation of New York, and Mr. Henderson made 151 warm friends. Mr. Henderson was the principal speaker of the evening and was received very well.

While the hotel was feeding 152 hungry folks, some of which had not eaten for two or three days in anticipation of this affair and let me say right here that New Haven sure knows good eats, a very fine entertainment was provided which included several splendid soprano solos which were particularly enjoyed by both the toastmaster and an official of the New England Equity Corporation and would you believe it these two hardened loan men actually blushed and the latter started to smoke his cigar putting the lit end in his mouth first which proves he was excited. Another feature of the entertainment was a clever little toe dancer who afterward burned up the floor with the best exhibition of the Charleston we ever saw, who was followed by both a piano and a violin solo.

Dancing followed the speakers and it was a real treat to see some of the old timers doing their stuff and take it from me these old timers shake a mean hot fox trot. Being that this is strictly confidential and I don't want to mention too many names I must say that those two cashiers from the Beneficial office in New Haven, who not to be outdone, staged a Charleston exhibition all their own proved that the Charleston was originated in New Haven and not below the Mason-Dixon line.

When I first hit the place I noticed that all hands were tagged and knowing that quite a few in attendance were Scotch it could not have been tag day as they would not buy tags, I was at a loss to explain it until a man stopping at the hotel and getting off at the wrong floor stood at my elbow and looking through the door asked me with a smile on his face if this affair was a reunion of emigrants as only emigrants wear tags and getting hot under the collar like all good loan men should never do I informed him what was going on and he turned on his heel and dashed off which leads me to believe he was a skip, however I think it was a very good idea as it gave us an opportunity to introduce ourselves and also gave us a chance to meet this guy face to face who we talked so many times to over the telephone, it also worked out well in another case as a gentleman walked up to me as I was about ready to go home and said, Mishter can you tell me what it says on here, pointing to his tag, and thinking he had forgotten his glasses until I smelled his breath I told him, and he said thanksh I wasn't quite sure whether I came from Norwich or South Norwalk.

Not until Home, Sweet Home was played and the orchestra could not be induced to play an encore did the majority of the guests leave notwithstanding that they had a long ways to travel. A great many folks came in their cars and some Fords were noticed and where mid-night connections could be made the others used the New York, New Haven, and Heartless although the committee had arranged a change of rubber heels at midway points for those who chose to walk.

All hands agreed that the first annual was a huge success and the committee responsible, while they are too modest to acknowledge the fact, were none other than Lou Merritt, the genial manager of the Beneficial Loan Society's office in New Haven, and our own secretary, Bill Miller, from Hartford, the Insurance city, and Bill whispered to me that he had insured the success of the affair with one of those insurance companies who afterwards told him that if they had to pay a claim they would skin him alive or something like that which accounts for his dashing around with that worried married look although he is single but eligible (Take notice girls). If this works out all right I am going into the matrimonial agency business.

So great did the first annual go over that many expressed their desire to have these functions every other Saturday night and judging from the attendance promised for next year's second annual the committee will have to hire an armory or move the New York Hippodrome up to Connecticut and believe me these Connecticut boys could do it.

WHAT THE INDUSTRIAL LOAN BUSINESS NEEDS IN ADVERTISING

By E. N. Plummer,

Manager Personal Finance Co., Bristol, Conn.

I am not going to attempt to tell you what advertising is. You know that as well as I do. No satisfactory definition of advertising has ever been evolved but, just as we know what a tree is without knowing its Latin botanical name, we know what advertising is without being able to define it.

The thing we are all interested in is not what advertising is, but what it can do for the Industrial Loan business. I believe it can do three things:

1. Bring applicants into the loan office to seek loans.
2. Increase the prestige and repute of the business.
3. Raise the status of the business by putting before loan office employees a higher ideal of service which they will be led unconsciously to live up to.

To deal properly with our first conception of what advertising can do for us; namely, bring people to our loan offices, we must ask ourselves five questions:

1. What do we want to bring into the loan office?
2. What appeal is most likely to accomplish it?
3. How can we present this appeal most effectively?
4. What medium shall we use in presenting it?
5. What is a reasonable cost per loan for advertising?

You know the class of people we want to bring into our loan offices—not householders, but housekeepers; not people with bankable credit; not those who think our business is conducted on an eleemosnary basis and consider themselves abused when asked to pay the costs the hazards of the business make necessary. The whole justification for the scientific interest rate is that our loans are risky loans. Therefore, advertising should point specifically to the class of people to whom risky loans are made; namely, people whose character is their only asset.

A woman came into one of our offices recently who had $3,500 equity in a home and asked for a loan. One of the employees of our company pointed out to her that while she could not borrow $200 from the bank with which she formerly dealt, she could borrow $300 at a lower cost than she would have to pay us for $200. She thanked him and did it.

I think some of you hardboiled loan men are amused at this, but the Beneficial Operating Bureau is sold on the fact that we must give loyal acquiescence to the spirit as well as to the letter of the Uniform Small Loan Law which is predicated on our loans being risky loans.

Our customers must always be of the class of poeple who possess no bankable credit. Otherwise, our whole raison d'etre is destroyed.

As to our second question, "What appeal is most likely to bring them in?"

I should say that primarily it must be a simple appeal. It must be attuned to the emotions rather than to the intellect. It must rely on pictures and the simplest of words.

A veteran advertising man once declared he could tell how long an advertiser had been in business by the shortness of the words, sentences and paragraphs in his advertisements. Simple, direct and colloquial language is always the most effective.

A new advertisement writer is very apt to wish to show his cleverness and learning by using complicated or stilted diction. There he is wrong. There is nothing harder than to make simple language impressive, and there is nothing so impressive as a message properly set forth in simple, easily understood language.

Here are two or three of our advertisements which have proven very effective. The first of these appeared on the classified page.

MONEY LENT on Character

Our friendly loan service is based on the fact that almost everyone is honest. No endorsers required—the transaction is between husband, wife and ourselves. 24-hour service. We lend up to $300 to housekeepers. Strict privacy. Only lawful interest. Call, write or 'phone.

Here is another one:

The illustration shows a little girl bending over a cash tube in a store.

The headline reads:

SHE HELPS SUPPORT HER SICK FATHER

Here is the story:

Crippled, her father in a hospital, a brace bought with a Beneficial Loan enabled her to secure employment. We are proud to have aided this brave girl to contribute to her parent's support.

WE LEND UP TO $300 TO HOUSEKEEPERS

Only lawful interest. Helpful, friendly, fair. Call, write or 'phone.

Here is one of our advertisements that mentions money, but not in a sordid way:

"The MONEY we lend you is the same as other money, but the SERVICE we give you is different from other service. A little more friendly. A little more human. A little more helpful. Call, write or 'phone.

It seems to me that advertisements such as these which appeal in simple language to the elementary human emotions such as love of home, honest pride, and sympathy with the weak and the finer side of human nature are generally more effective than such worn out and obsolete phrases as "Quick Money," "Loans on Household Furniture Without Removal," etc.

Turning to the third item under bringing the people into our loan office—"How can we present this appeal most effectively?" We should base our appeal on the fact that everyone loves to look at pictures; that all display advertising should be illustrated and the illustrations should invariably be of a pleasing and attractive character. Next to this I would put imaginative, vigorous and forceful headlines, and after this simplicity of language.

The fourth question, "What medium should we use in presenting this appeal?" I can answer with a great deal of authority. The excellent and comprehensive system of statistics compiled in the Beneficial Operating Bureau, applying to over 105 loan offices, proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that the most economical way of bringing people into our offices is by printed circulars distributed by hand; that the second most effective way is form letters; the next telephone book advertising, and the last newspaper advertising. Remember, however, this is merely on a basis of bringing people into the loan office; that we are merely examining the first of the three things that advertising is required to do.

Newspaper advertising is, therefore, not indispensable on a purely dollar and cent basis of bringing people into the office, although it is the method generally used in the small loan business.

Now, let us turn to No. 5—"What is a reasonable expenditure for advertising the small loan business?"

The average loans in offices supervised by the Beneficial Operating Bureau run between $100 and $200, and the ideal cost for a loan is $2 per loan for direct advertising and $5 for newspaper advertising. Some of our offices cost more and some less.

In the case of new loan offices, the limit that can profitably be spent to bring the customer is the amount of premium we would have to pay to purchase his account, if it were on the books of a loan company which was selling out. Therefore, as accounts of this character usually bring a premium of over 10 per cent, I should say that from ten to fifteen dollars, or even twenty dollars, is the extreme allowable cost for new business in a new loan office.

When we come to the second phase of what we desire advertising to do; namely, to create favorable public opinion, I always feel as though we were climbing into higher, purer air. If our advertising presents a true picture of our business and the way it is conducted, it can present a very pleasing picture.

Credit is not merely a matter of lending money on our part, or borrowing on the part of our patrons. It has a very definite constructive influence on the lives of the people to whom we extend it. It is our task to picture this as it really is. The economy of proper clothing! The economy of proper medical attention and so forth.

We can show instances of dependent cripples who, through a loan, have been equipped with limbs which enabled them to become self-respecting and self-supporting members of society. We can show children who have been restored to health, ailing women who have been enabled to take vacations which have restored them to robust strength. We can show people who have been started in business by a Beneficial loan; homes saved, and hundreds of other pleasant and constructive things which our money credit system has brought to our customers. If our advertising reflects this as it must do to give a true picture of our activities, it is bound to create favorable public opinion.

In this creation of favorable public opinion, newspaper advertising is the more effective.

The third and last phase of our advertising is its stimulating effect on our loan office people. By creating an ideal they are forced almost unconsciously to live up to it. When we started to advertise "24-hour service" all our offices could not give such service. The problem was carried to our President and he said "Go ahead and advertise 24-hour service and it will force us to give 24-hour service." This is only one of hundreds of ways in which advertising can stimulate the service staff.

The foregoing sets forth in a very sketchy manner my conception of what loan office advertising should do. If I have opened new concepts to you, I have not spoken in vain. Some day a brighter mind than mine will see hundreds of things in loan office advertising that I have overlooked. That is the fascinating thing about every business, and about our business in particular. The fact that it is not something that is finished; it is a field of rich ore full of unrealized possibilities. It is up to all of us, executives, loan managers and outside men, to release these possibilities and thereby give a new meaning and a new purpose to our life work.

MARYLAND

The March meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was called to order promptly at seven-thirty P. M. in the Board Room of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, Tuesday, March 9th, by Chairman Hood.

About sixty Lenders and friends of Lenders being present and many lively discussions of interest were enjoyed by all.

Treasurer Jim Goldrick, Lenders call him Jimmie for short, reported all bills paid to date with a nice little surplus remaining on deposit; he did not state the exact amount, but it would probably buy cigars for our semi-annual meeting and banquet to be held some time in May, when new officers for the coming year will be elected and a meeting of interest to all is promised.

George Holden of the Publicity Committee not only reported progress but proved to the members from newspaper clippings that he was stepping right along having been successful in having two of the leading newspapers write a news item of the meeting.

The Law and Vigilance Committee reported many busy days since the last meeting and Messrs. Gardner and Broce and the Chairman are to be congratulated upon the good results accomplished.

Upon motion duly made and seconded the Victory Loan Company, 505 Calvert Building, Credit Service Incorporated, 207 W. Fayette Street, and Workman's Finance Corporation, 1003 Munsey Building, were admitted to membership, and we are grateful to Mr. Rosenfield for having been so busy and having worked so earnestly to bring about these splendid results.

Upon motion duly seconded a bill for $15.00 for several copies of case No. 1 of the Industrial Lenders Technical Institute, which was read and discussed at the January meeting, was approved and ordered paid.

Our good friend Bill Young, Chairman of the Pennsylvania Association, addressed the meeting, told some good jokes, and invited everyone to be present at the next Pennsylvania meeting.

Our chairman then called upon one who has made a long study of Industrial Loan Business not only in this country but in countries over the sea and the high spots of the address of our good friend, Mr. V. W. B. Hedgepeth, follows:

Results of An Independent Study of the Industrial Loan Business

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Maryland Association:

The subject is too broad for a single investigator. It seems to be big enough for a congressional investigation, or for any twenty of the multitude of investigating committees that are roaming about snarling at the citizenry and letting it be known, by heck, that something ought to be done about it and more laws should be passed to make our benighted patriots go do something or stop doing something.

Without any appointment from my superiors, I began an investigation of the money question, on my own account. One rainy day somewhere about fifty years ago, when as one of a bunch of barefooted boys, I pressed a none too clean nose up against the front window of our local bank in an effort to get a glimpse of the money devils within.

Some official, possessing a peculiar sense of humor, jumped through the front door and with a, "Scat, you brats, or I'll cut your livers out," made about forty boy feet speed down the streets and up the alleys and planted deep in at least one head a wholesome fear of bankers and all their works.

Those were the days when bankers sat behind musty cages, under dim lights, far away from half drawn curtains and believed serenely that they were of a superior class apart, and with Webster that "money is a medium of exchange."

Those were the days of few railroads, few good roads, no street cars, no automobiles, no electric lights, no telephones, no tin cans, no movies, no flying machines, no typewriters, no canned music, no mechanical devices within the house to render possible comfortable living without a backyard—rice was three cents a pound, coal oil fifteen cents a gallon, and mother baked the bread while Willie chopped the wood. The wants of the average citizen were limited, his emotional and intellectual outlets were few. Banking methods were unknown to him and business was a mystery. In short—Those were the good old days, God bless 'em:

With the discovery that "Business is Service" and "Money is Merchandise" the new era dawned.

Let us gambol over the last fifty years and see what the recording angels have entered up in life's books.

Not that it will mean much to most people. Few things do. Blessed are the dead: in the head.

Yet the sum total of these fifty years should shock the members of this Association and of our profession into something of a realization of the drift of our times and an appreciation of present universal service and commercial opportunity.

When I was five years old (1874) the world sat pretty snug.

My daddy had passed on—my mother was confronted with the hard practical problem of ekeing out an existence with a mighty few possible added comforts.

Our preachers—and their name was legion—consoled us with the thought that sometime, somewhere, somehow, if we would only hold out against the snares of the world—and be good—and quiet—and let the wicked kick us in the shins, or occasionally on the other side of the pants, we might awaken from our sleep in some distant day with golden crowns upon our heads, scepters inlaid with diamonds and sapphires, song books in our hands and tickets in our celestial pockets entitling us to literally sit up yonder on a cloud and watch the show.

The show was to consist mostly in watching the writhings of departed religious opponents, unbelievers and such other persons as defunct democrats and dead bankers.

Forevermore we faithful were to wave palms and sing, and do nothing much else but sing and wave palms during endless cycles of tropical years,—Yes, were sitting pretty snug, in our pens, with our corn, and an occasional bucket of intellectual slop.

Then, one day in the great year of 1874, something snapped in the brain of the world, or the damned up power of mortal or immortal mind broke loose, and the recorder of the times has noted that the succeeding years have brought down to us in their flood and entered up in the books of life as common knowledge of men—automobiles, airplanes, adding machines, mechanical calculators, aluminum, antiseptics, antiseptic surgery, artificial dyes, a thousand and one products and byproducts of coal and oil, automobiles, automatic couplers, barbed wire, Barbara Fritchie hams, bicycles, baseball, carborundum, cash registers, celluloid, correspondence schools, cream separators, flotation methods, darkest Africa illuminated, disc ploughs, dynamite, electric railways, electric welding, electric lights, electric heating and cooking, esculators, fireless cooking, speechless waiters, gas engines, harvesting machinery, illuminating gas, induction motors, linotypes, match machines, monotypes, movies, medicine as a science, North Pole, South Pole, Panama Canal, pasteurization, railway signals, Roentgen Ray, sewing machines, smokeless powder, marvelous surgery, submarines, radium, skyscrapers, subways, phonographs, telephones, typewriters, vacuum cleaners, wireless, wireless photography and power Einstein, Millakan, the electron, national growing pains, suicide as "this way out," to say nothing of the spiritualistic conception of the progress of the soul as opposed to the old notion of the awful fate of the unbelieving on the eternal frying pan.

(This last to me is the outstanding contribution of the World's War, and probably is the greatest single concept of all time.)

Along with all these beneficial contributions to life, the wash of the years, of course, threw up much waste and many curious and fearful products of the deep ignorance in high places, intolerance, paternalism, arrogance, bigotry, impertinent assumption, etc., which like fleas on the dog will keep us scratching for many years, but need not permanently impede our intellectual and spiritual progress.

We first think the thing, then we produce or fashion it. When we consider what man has thought of in fifty years, and almost instantly fashioned into a commercial product, we are appalled at what the coming roaring years will bring. Sir Isaac Newton said, "Give man infinite years and he will develop infinite power."

The appalling thing is not so much how many times man will multiply his commercial concepts, but the appalling thing is the power of man to absorb his own products, and where it will lead him. A group of minds developed the steam engine, the trolley, the auto, the airplane, and at once everybody wanted to ride on the cars, own an auto, or to fly. Broadcasting became a fact and every day 20,000,000 people listen in. The telephone ceased to be a plaything and right away every household had to have one. To-morrow, maybe, a new sunbeam will break through some dark place and we will all pounce upon it and ride gaily away.

Untold millions come into life and pass on and out and never see any pattern in the weaving of the years. It was inevitable that this new consciousness of creative power should of itself release a new set of forces that would upset the existing order. A few far-seeing men said, "We will grasp this thing and direct these forces." They became great merchant princes, and captains of industry.

Another few went about the business of financing these commercial crusades and took control of the banking thought of the country. Fifteen per cent of civilized mankind are in this business of distributing, (merchandise) and the banks seem to be efficiently serving the fifteen per cent.

The banks thus are becoming more and more class servants, and less and less the servants of the great body constituting the consuming or industrial public.

I once knew a man who said he couldn't see the woods on account of the trees, it seems to me that there are running around to-day in this banking world ten thousand bankers who can't see the real folks on account of the people.

It was also inevitable the awakening should bring about new forms of commercial service, or merchandising. The stores that live in these busy days must be real service stations. The folks want what they want when they want it. That demands from the merchant service, instant and real. Service is worth its price.

The world will not again lapse into a deep sleep. There are to-day many great leaders of forces who can still distinguish real folks from mass people and who have as a slogan, "The Service That Makes Service Possible." Custom has decreed that a certain form of merchandise called money shall be the medium for instantly making possible the exchange among men of all other forms of merchandise. Providing this form of merchandise for the great masses of the real folks of the world at a reasonable cost, is undoubtedly the greatest single merchandising service possible.

This, gentlemen, is the service of the Industrial Money-Lender as exemplified by our Association. If the lesson of these fifty years means anything to me it means undoubted position of our own industrial money lending idea as one of the basic, far-reaching, necessary functions in the progress of the world, as long as our present form of civilization endures.

As I pointed out to you on a previous occasion the industrial money lending service station answers the question of distributing merchandise to the extent of one hundred per cent, based on service for the honest deserving folks of the world, not only by making their marketing, and their comfortable living instantly possible but also by satisfying their minor cultural desires and in addition thereto providing a form of savings and investment responding to the full corporation test of one hundred per cent as to safety with reasonable return.

I believe in the immense and far-reaching future of our business. I believe in its dignity, in this complex commercial age, I believe that is as essential to universal human happiness as sunlight is to health.

I expect to stay in it until I die. If sometime, someone, shall engrave a line on the stone that marks my last resting place, he shall be thoughtful enough to write—"He believed in the destiny of his business and his only wish was to be remembered as one of its prophets," I shall rest content.

Howard T. Mattingly, Secretary.

Chairman Alberse in a brief report outlined some of the activities of the Association during the year, complementing the various committee chairmen on the splendid results obtained.

Secretary Hansche did not make a report for the reason that anything he might say would only be a repetition of what the various committees would say and his report would only conflict.

Treasurer Woodburn offered a written report which was read and by motion was ordered spread on the minutes.

Audit Committee Chairman Cameron, offered a written report of review covering a period of nine months from June 17, 1925, to March 18, 1926, in which the treasurer's and secretary's books were reconciled and found to be in accord. Upon motion his report was accepted with thanks and the committee discharged.

Membership Committee Chairman Young offered a written report covering his activities for the past year in which he advised that the association now had a membership of 71 and had lost but one member during the year and that was for the reason that they retired from business. Upon motion by Mr. Watts the report was accepted and a vote of thanks was offered to the committee for the wonderful progress made.

Entertainment Committee Chairman Van Horn reported that everything was in readiness for the luncheon to be served the convention and promised the membership the biggest time ever held by the association if they would be in attendance at the banquet to be held that evening.

At this time the official seal of the association came up for discussion and upon motion by Mr. Young seconded by Mr. Simonson the seal as selected by the committee for the selection of the seal, was adopted as the official seal of the New Jersey I. L. A. which could be purchased from either the Chairman or the Secretary at the cost of $2.00 per cut and the members were privileged to use said cut on all stationery, etc.

Publicity Chairman Zimmerman then offered his written report giving details of the work done by his committee, thanking them for the wonderful coöperation given him. The report was accepted with thanks and ordered filed.

Mr. Young then told the members of having received word of the death of Mrs. Sol Vogel, our former Chairman's wife and offered a motion to have the association draw up a resolution and have same engrossed to be either given to Mr. Vogel when he came East or have same sent to him in California. The motion was unanimously passed and the Secretary ordered to have same attended to.

The Secretary then read the application of the City Loan and Finance Exchange of Paterson and upon motion they were admitted to membership by unanimous vote.

The recommendations of the Auditing Committee was then taken under advisement and it was suggested that the Secretary write to the Remedial Loan Co. of Paterson advising them of their arrears and that unless the delinquent dues were paid before the next meeting they were to be dropped from the membership. The Chairman also appointed Mr. Margolis, Mr. Henly and Mr. Long as a committee of three to interview the Downtown Loan Co., The Guarantee Loan Co. of Jersey City and the North

Hudson Loan Co. to see whether they still wanted to retain their membership and if not recommendations are to be made at the next meeting that they be dropped. Mr. Simonson was appointed to see the Safety Loan Co. of Newark and Mr. Young offered to see the New England Equity Co. of Camden.

The luncheon hour having arrived, the meeting was adjourned until 1:30 P. M.

Afternoon Session

The nominating committee reported that they had selected the following names for the Executive Committee:

P. L. Alberse, V. L. Buchman, E. Woodburn, A. J. Simonson, C. H. Watts, A. E. Montgomery, William Young, J. C. VanHorn, and D. H. Cameron.

Upon motion the report of the nominating committee was received and the committee discharged with thanks by the members. Thereupon the chair called for additional nominations and none being heard, it was moved that the nominations be closed which was duly carried.

Mr. Watts then moved that the regular rules of the association be suspended at this time and instead of the committee going into session, the election of the officers take place from the floor. So carried and the name of P. L. Alberse was offered in nomination for Chairman, A. J. Simonson for Vice Chairman, V. L. Buchman for Secretary and E. Woodburn for Treasurer. No further nominations the Secretary was ordered to cast one vote for election. The Secretary then advised that the ballot box was stuffed with one for the above named candidates and that they were unanimously elected for the ensuing year.

Installation of the newly elected officers then took place and the minutes will be continued by the new Secretary.

W. P. Hansche, Secretary.

The Banquet

The Eleventh Annual Banquet of the N. J. Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Ballroom of the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, N. J., March 26, 1926.

The entertainment committee of which J. C. VanHorn was Chairman left no stone unturned to make the banquet a success. The tables were artistically decorated with flowers and favors were given all in attendance. Those present were told to watch the birdie while the photographer put in his work and we understand that Mr. Young has a supply of these photographs. Anyone desiring same can obtain one by writing him at his Philadelphia office.

Invocation was given by the Rev. E. W. Fuhrmann. C. H. Watts was toastmaster. He introduced Capt. Irving O'Hay as a soldier of fortune who was the principal speaker of the evening. Capt. O'Hay related his experiences in war and out and his discourse was instructive and amusing and was well received by his audience.

Miss Kathryn O'Neill sang a number of popular songs. She was accompanied by Mabelle Cowan and the orchestra. Dance music was provided for those who cared to dance and every one apparently enjoyed a pleasant evening.

Vernon L. Buchman.

Those who have least faith in government demand the most from it.

NEW JERSEY

The New Jersey Legislature of 1926 adjourned last month, defeating the proposed amendments to reduce the rate permitted on small loans in that State.

House Bill No. 254, purporting to regulate the State Bank Examiners' fees for examining loan offices was passed by the House, reached third reading calendar in the Senate but lost out in the jam and died. The prospects are with the reorganization of the Department of Banking, that the work and fees now connected with the examination of loan offices will be greatly reduced and remedial legislation will follow at the next session of the Legislature.

Harrisburg, Pa.
February 9, 1926.

Mr. Walter S. Herron,
404 Denckla Building,
Philadelphia, Penna.

Dear Mr. Herron:

I am not sure that I can attend the next meeting of the Pennsylvania Association at Wilkes-Barre, but I would like to know something about the different matters that will be considered at the business meeting and when they will be brought up. I am anxious to see the Pennsylvania Association go on record in favor of the new plan of collecing dues in the State and National organizations, basing dues of all offices on the $1.00 per thousand rate with no minimum or maximum and making all offices members of both Associations on payment of these dues to the State Association Secretary.

Ohio has already acted favorably upon the suggestion and Indiana will probably do so at their next meeting. To make the proposition workable it will be necessary for all the State Associations to agree to this plan, as unless it is unanimous, it will not work. It will necessitate each State Association's changing their by-laws with respect to dues.

Yours very truly,
George W. Kehr,
National Secretary.

Upon motion of Mr. Herron and seconded by Mr. Moss, the resignation of the Penn Loan Company, 13th and Columbia Avenue, Philadelphia, having discontinued business and complied with all the requirements of the by-laws, was accepted.

Upon motion of Mr. Herron, seconded by Mr. Moss, the resignation of the M. & L. Loan Company, 1507 Arch St., Philadelphia (they having complied with the by-laws), was accepted.

Nomination and Election of Members

The Secretary read the applications for membership of the following licensees:

E. cor. 13th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia; Family Finance Company, 401 Railroad St., Rochester, and stated the Executive Committee had approved. Upon motion of Mr. Watts, seconded by Mr. Moss, they were duly elected to membership.

H. M. Curry read a paper on "Training an Outside Man." On motion of Mr. Klein, seconded by Mr. Moss, the paper was spread on the minutes and was ordered published in the Lenders News.

These members were brought into the Association by Chairman Pope.

All the members were in good standing with dues paid to date, and most of them had paid their dues for the full year.

He also brought up the matter of the members paying their monthly assessment prompt the first of each month without being billed for it, and asked for the coöperation of the members in this matter. On motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Moore, the report was received and spread on the minutes.

Treasurer's Report

Treasurer Burnett reported that we had cash on hand, Jan. 22, 1926, $1,642.24. Receipts since $1,470.50, making a total of $3,112.74. Disbursements, $1,518.76. Balance on hand, March 25, 1926, $1,593.98.

Upon motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Moss, the report was received and spread on the minutes.

Executive Committee

In the absence of Mr. East, Mr. Pope reported what had been done at Richmond in regard to the test case whereby the constitutionality of the law was being attacked. He explained we had engaged attorneys to fight the case.

Upon motion of Mr. Mattingly, seconded by Mr. Moss, the report was received and spread on the minutes.

Legislative

Mr. Moss reported that no bills had been passed adverse to our business during the session of the legislature just closed. There had been six bills and one resolution introduced, that would seriously have affected our business if they had passed. He asked Oscar L. Shewmake, our counsel, to make his report of what had been done at Richmond during the session of legislature.

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA,
March 24, 1926.

To the Committee on Legislation, Virginia Industrial Lenders Association

Gentlemen:

As counsel employed by you to represent the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association in legislative matters for the year ending March 15, 1926, I beg to submit this, my report:

The General Assembly of Virginia convened in regular session on Wednesday, Jan. 13, 1926. Close examination of all measures introduced in both House and Senate from the opening day failed to disclose any hint of hostile or adverse legislation during the first three weeks of the session. So different was this from the experiences of former years that those in closest touch with the situation began to hope that at last the business of making loans under the Uniform Small Loan Law had become so thoroughly established that the attacks upon it made during past sessions of the General Assembly would not be renewed. These hopes, as the experiences of the next six weeks were to show, were not well founded; on the contrary, the period of quiet enjoyed during the first three weeks of the session was nothing more than a lull before the storm.

During the session there were introduced in House and Senate together seven distinct pieces of legislation, any one of which would have seriously affected the small loan business in Virginia, and any one of five of which would have proved fatal. Of these seven pieces of legislation, five were aimed directly at the small loan business. The other two were ostensibly designed to affect corporations, other than banks of discount and deposit, engaged in lending money, such as automobile finance companies, building and loan associations, etc., but the effects of either of these two bills, had they become law, would have been disastrous. I shall refer briefly to each of these measures in the order in which they were introduced.

1. On February 3, there was introduced by Messrs. Boschen and Folkes, members of the House of Delegates from the city of Richmond, a bill having for its object the complete repeal of the Uniform Small Loan Law. This bill was referred to the Committee on General Laws and was set for hearing on the afternoon of the following day. Hearing on the bill was postponed to Monday the 8th and again to Thursday, February 11. On the date last named the proponents and opponents of the measure were given full opportunity to present their claims and the hearing lasted more than two hours, at the conclusion of which the committee went into executive session and further consideration of the measure was passed by indefinitely by a vote of 9 to 2. Too much cannot be said in praise of the splendid explanation of the Uniform Small Loan Law, its history, its purposes, and its accomplishments made by Dr. L. N. Robinson, of the Russell Sage Foundation, and the complete victory won at this hearing is due in no small measure to his presence.

2. On February 8, Mr. Boschen introduced a bill, the title to which fully explains its object and the effects of which, had it become law, are obvious. It was generally understood that this measure was designed to affect automobile finance companies but it would have affected the industrial money lenders seriously. Its title was as follows:

"A bill to make it unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to repossess without legal process, except with the consent of the person in possession, any goods or chattels or other personal property in the possession of another which is subject to a contractual lien, reservation or condition, or where such property is held subject to a chattel mortgage, deed of trust or other similar instrument or writing; to declare that any provision in any such contract or other writing whereby the right of action on account of such repossession shall be void, and to prescribe penalties."

This bill was referred to the Committee for Courts of Justice and on February 9, was passed by indefinitely, and never taken up again.

3. A bill was introduced by Delegate Sinclair by request, providing that no debt should be enforced against the wife of any borrower notwithstanding that such wife might be an endorser, guarantor or principal obligor unless the loan was obtained and the proceeds thereof used for her sole benefit. This bill was also referred to the Committee on General Laws and was passed by indefinitely.

4. On February 17, Messrs. Boschen and Folkes introduced a bill to amend and reënact Section 14 of the Uniform Small Loan Law, so as to change the legal rate of interest on small loans from 3½% per month to ½ of 1% per month. Hearing on this bill was set for Monday, February 22. This hearing lasted more than three hours, after which the Committee on General Laws voted unanimously to postpone further consideration of the measure.

5. Perhaps the most remarkable piece of legislation introduced during this session was offered by Messrs. Boschen and Folkes on February 26. This bill was so extraordinary in its nature, so broad in its scope, so far-reaching and serious in its possible consequences that it is deemed well to quote it here in full. It reads as follows:

"To raise revenue for support of the government, to pay the interest on the public debt and support the public schools, by taxing loans carrying interest of more than six per cent per annum.

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia that any person, firm, association or corporation who loans money in this State for more than six per cent per annum shall pay one-half of said interest in excess of six per cent to the State.

"Every violation of this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25.00 nor more than $100 for each and every violation."

This bill was referred to the Committee on Finance and, after a hearing, its consideration was indefinitely postponed. This bill requires no discussion. It speaks for itself.

6. After the bill referred to in the foregoing paragraph had been disposed of, it was believed even by those most interested that no further hostile legislation would be introduced. What followed, however, serves to illustrate the need for constant watchfulness. On the afternoon of March 12, a bill was introduced in the Senate, as a substitute for one theretofore offered, which was known as Senate Bill No. 318. This bill proposed to amend the Tax Bill so as to provide for an increased license tax on private financiers and finance corporations. It was directed primarily at automobile finance companies but the industrial lenders were included in the broad definition of finance companies. Had the bill become law, the taxes paid to the State by operators under the Uniform Small Loan Law would have been practically doubled. This bill passed the Senate before those most affected knew it had been introduced. It was never printed. When it reached the House on the afternoon of Saturday, March 13, an amendment was offered, excepting industrial lenders from its provisions. This amendment was adopted by the House but rejected by the Senate, and the bill died.

7. On February 22, during the hearing on the bill to reduce the rate of interest, it was suggested by certain members of the Committee on General Laws that the supervision of those operating under the Uniform Small Loan Law by the Banking Division of the State Corporation Commission might well be closer than it is. I immediately stated to the committee that the industrial lenders would welcome the strictest supervision that the law could give and that an amendment subjecting the loan offices to the same examination as is made of the banks of discount and deposit would receive our support. The chairman of the Committee on General Laws appointed a subcommittee consisting of delegates Jesse, Sinclair and Warren, with instructions to prepare such a bill or amendment as would require more strict supervision of the loan offices by the Banking Division. The chairman of this committee requested me to prepare such an amendment which request I complied with and prepared a bill which met the approval of the Banking Division, the members of the subcommittee and the industrial lenders. This bill proposed to amend Sections 2 and 10 of the Uniform Small Loan Law. It would have been reported out by the committee but for reliable information which reached me to the effect that the moment it reached the floor of the House an amendment would be offered reducing the rate of interest provided for by the present law. In order to avoid this complication, I suggested to the committee that a resolution be offered in lieu of the bill. This suggestion met with approval and I prepared the suggested resolution, which read as follows:

"WHEREAS, There has been introduced in the House of Delegates of the General Assembly of Virginia, a bill to amend section fourteen of an act approved March 23, 1918, and since amended by acts approved March 9, 1920, and March 20, 1922, generally known and referred to as THE UNIFORM SMALL LOAN LAW; and

"WHEREAS, Reliable information on which intelligent action upon the said bill could be taken is not available at this time; and

"WHEREAS, By the terms of the said law the licensees thereunder are placed under the supervision of the Chief of the State Bank Examiner of the Banking Division of the State Corporation Commission with full power of investigation and examination; Be it

"Resolved, By the House of Delegates of the General Assembly of Virginia, the Senate concurring, That the Chief State Bank Examiner of the Banking Division of the State Corporation Commission be, and he hereby is, requested to make such examination and investigations of the business conducted and methods employed by the licensees operating under the said Uniform Small Loan Law during the years 1926 and 1927 as will enable the said Chief State Bank Examiner to furnish the General Assembly of Virginia, at the commencement of the regular session for the year 1928, or at the commencement of any special session that may be held prior thereto, with accurate information showing the net income earned on capital invested by each of the said licensees between Jan. 1, 1926, and Jan. 1, 1928, or between Jan. 1, 1926, and the date of the commencement of such special session."

This resolution was reported by the committee to the House and offered by Hon. R. O. Norris, Chairman of the Committee on General Laws. It passed the House but, for reasons unknown to me, never received consideration in the Senate.

It thus appears that the General Assembly adjourned without having enacted any legislation adverse to those operating under the Uniform Small Loan Law and, what is more important, no bill directed against the interests of this business ever reached the floor of either house. Concisely stated as is this summary, it would appear to one not familiar with the situation that these results were accomplished without great effort. Such, it is well known, was not the case. There may come a time when the public is so well informed with reference to the Uniform Small Loan Law that danger of adverse legislation will have passed, but that time has not yet arrived. The business is not generally understood. Indeed, because it is so little understood, it is viewed by many well-meaning people with suspicion and by some with hostility. To overcome this, a campaign of education should be conducted. Those operating under the Uniform Small Loan Law should have nothing to hide. A policy of concealment or aloofness must inevitably result in the creation of an atmosphere of public distrust. The business is legitimatized. It is necessary. It is highly respectable. The policy of apology or excuse for engaging in this business is as useless as it is dangerous.

I feel it proper just here to somewhat overstep the limitations of my employment and call your attention to something which may not be entirely pleasant to all within hearing. As the various hearings on these legislative measures progressed and the views of those opposed to your interests were more and more freely expressed, it became evident that the opposition was not to the law itself. As a matter of fact, it was not apparent that those most active in opposition were at all familiar with the Uniform Small Loan Law and it was plain that some of them had never even read it. One of the most prominent spokesmen for the opposition was surprised to discover at the hearing on February 11, that the small loan licensees were under the supervision of the Banking Department of the State Corporation Commission. Several members of the Committee on General Laws were similarly surprised. I doubt that there is a business in Virginia about which less is generally known and which is more misunderstood than yours. The question which suggests itself then is whence came the determined and persistent opposition to the small loan licensees. The answer is that it grew out of certain specific instances of misconduct or ill-advised action on the part of some of the licensees themselves. Opposition to the rate charged is founded in ignorance and can be easily dispelled by explanation. There is no opposition to the business as such. Uncompromising hostility has been aroused by a too great insistence on collection in cases where collection worked actual and severe hardships on the borrowers. Of course, in practically every case cited the lender was doing no more than insisting upon the enforcement of his legal rights, but it must be remembered that what is gained in many cases at the bar of justice is more than off-set by a corresponding loss at the bar of public opinion. Such extreme care should be exercised in making loans to necessitous borrowers that no loans will be made to those who will be unable to meet their obligations at maturity and against whom legal proceedings, involving the sale of necessary household goods, must be instituted. Though such a course should result in a decrease in the volume of business done, the loss thus occasioned will be more than made up by the absence of the adverse criticism attracted to the business by the working of hardships upon borrowers unable to pay.

I trust that you will take what I am saying in the spirit in which it is said and will consider it as a helpful suggestion rather than an adverse criticism. "Faithful are the words of a friend but deceitful are the kisses of an enemy." If this suggestion is followed, I believe that those opposed to the Uniform Small Loan Law will be deprived of their most dangerous weapon.

In conclusion, permit me to express the feeling of pleasure that I experienced in acting as your counsel, and to thank you for the whole-hearted and efficient support you have given me through many trying experiences. I extend to you my best wishes for continued success in the future. Respectfully submitted,

Oscar H. Shewmake, Counsel.

On motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Mattingly, Mr. Shewmake's report was accepted and ordered spread on the minutes.

On motion of Mr. Bray, seconded by Mr. Moss, a rising vote of thanks was given Mr. Shewmake for the splendid work he had done at Richmond.

Special District Committees

Mr. Bray, for Norfolk & Portsmouth, reported the Clearing House was working fine. Ten out of 13 licensees were members. We had a case in Norfolk where a man had failed to get his discharge in bankruptcy, although he had applied for it within the proper time. When his creditors found this out they went after him and then he filed a new petition in bankruptcy, listing new creditors as well as the old. The U. S. District Judge ruled he could not do this, but gave him his choice of getting his discharge on the first bankruptcy petition or he could take the second but would have to leave creditors out that he had listed in his first petition.

Mr. Burnett, for Richmond, reported they had only five members in the Clearing House in Richmond, but it had saved them a lot in bankrupts, as it used to be common to see a bankrupt get them all before they had the Clearing House, but now they never get more than one member.

Mr. Herbert, in the absence of Mr. Price, reported Roanoke had 100% membership in the Clearing House and everything was working fine.

Mr. Long, in the absence of Mr. Hillsman, reported that Lynchburg had 100% membership and it was working fine.

Mr. Pope and Mr. Moss said the Clearing House in Richmond could be operated through the Retail Merchants Credit Bureau there, and they were trying to work this out.

Uniform Papers

Mr. Moss reported he and Mr. Watts had been working on these, but he could only report progress at this time and hoped to be able to submit a paper at the next meeting.

Recess 11 : 45 a. m.

Luncheon

Luncheon was held at 1 : 30 p. m. and C. D. Fox, City Councilman of Roanoke, acted as toastmaster. Other gentlemen who addressed the members were Rev. Z. V. Roberson, Maurice L. Macenter, Atty., of Roanoke, Representative J. H. Bear, Representative Wright of Roanoke, U. T. Lemon of the Roanoke Retail Merchants Association, J. Vaughan Gary and Oscar L. Shewmake, Attorneys, of Richmond.

Afternoon Session

Mr. Moss spoke of New Business. The work that had been done during the session of the legislature and also explained that attorneys had been engaged to defend the case in Richmond where our law was being attacked on the ground that it was unconstitutional. He said it would be necessary to raise $2,100.00 to take care of expenses during the legislature and pay the attorneys on the test case.

Mr. Moss moved that we assess each office $100.00, as this would take care of these expenses. Mr. Mattingly seconded the motion and it was carried unanimously.

Mr. Pope read a pamphlet on the Uniform Small Loan Law and its operation in Virginia. This was got up by Oscar L. Shewmake, Counsel for the National Small Loan Society, Inc., Mr. Shewmake presented this to the Association.

On motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Mattingly, it was decided to have 5,000 printed and send a supply to each member for distribution.

On motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Mattingly, the Association decided to have this article copyrighted.

Mr. W. S. Biel, of Portsmouth, read a paper on advertising. On motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Mattingly, this was ordered spread on the minutes.

As a similar paper was read by E. N. Plummer at the meeting of the Connecticut Association held in New Haven, March 24, and published in this issue, Mr. Biel's paper is not repeated here.—Editor.

Mr. Price gave a report of the Entertainment Committee, and stated instead of the usual deficit for the Association to make up, there was a surplus of $6.00 which he had turned over to the treasurer.

On motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Bray, a rising vote of thanks was given to the Entertainment Committee.

Messrs. Price, Burnett and Biel (Richmond) at our last meeting promised to prepare papers and read them at this meeting, but they were not ready.

On motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Moss, the secretary was instructed to notify these men that they would be expected to prepare papers for our next meeting, the subject to be left to them.

Election of Members

The secretary presented the application of the American Small Loan Co., Inc., of Alexandria, Va., on motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Moore, they were unanimously elected to membership.

After some discussion, on motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Moore, it was decided to hold the next meeting at Norfolk, Va., Friday, June 25, 1926. Mr. Bray to have charge of the arrangements.

The subject of advertising "Under the Supervision of the Banking Department," was brought up. The chair appointed Mr. Shewmake to see the Chief Banking Examiner and find out if they will allow us to do this. Frank Bray, Sec.

WEST VIRGINIA

The annual convention of the West Virginia Industrial Lenders Association was held in Charleston, Thursday, March 18, at the Hotel Ruffner.

The morning session was called to order by Vice-Chairman Wormser, Chairman H. L. White, of Wheeling, being unable to attend on account of illness. The regular order of business was taken up and disposed of. F. H. Withrow, Chairman of the Membership Committee, reported four new members, making a total of eighteen. As there are only twenty-five licensees in the state, this leaves only a small per cent who are not members of the association.

The afternoon session was opened with an address by J. H. Aufderheide, of Indianapolis, which was enthusiastically recieved and which we will reproduce later for the benefit of all the readers of the Lenders News as well as some other papers that were read.

Honorable E. L. Morrison, Deputy Commissioner of Banking, was an interested listener during the afternoon program. He also spoke of the departments appreciation of the coöperation it had obtained from the members of the Association.

Mayor Wertz delivered the Address of Welcome at the banquet which started off promptly at seven-thirty. "A Business Little Understood" was the subject of the chief address of the evening and was given by C. H. Watts of New York. Those gathering around the speakers table were: Mayor Wertz, J. H. Aufderheide, Chas. H. Watts, Geo. C. Grinsteiner, C. G. Liggett, Ray Reynolds and Hon. W. G. Conley. There were seventy persons present in all. Immediately after the banquet a dance was held which was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Companies represented at this convention were: Bluefield Investment Co., Bluefield; Community Finance Service, Commonwealth Loan Co., Monarch Loan Co., Litizens Loan Co., Personal Finance Co. and W. & O. Loan Co., all of Huntington; Personal Finance Co., Capitol City Loan & Investment Co., United Loan & Realty Co., Peoples Loan Co., Conservative Loan Co. and Commonwealth Loan Co., all of Charleston; Personal Finance, Wheeling; Community Finance Service and Workingmen's Finance Co., of Parkersburg. SALARY PURCHASING

By Romain C. Hassrick

Chief Bureau Legal Aid, Department of Public Welfare, Philadelphia

Schemes for mulcting the public, and particularly those persons of limited financial means are always with us. They are as bad as thistles in the hayfield, and they are not easily eradicated.

No sooner do we rid ourselves of the so-called "Loan Shark" until there develops with us another system known as salary purchasing which promotes trouble for our multitude of wage earners.

The small loan business in this state has been placed on a most honorable basis of business dealing. It is regulated by the uniform small loan law supervised by the State Department of Banking, and policed by its own members.

The Bureau of Legal Aid has had extensive experience with this business in Philadelphia, and we know whereof we speak when we place on it our label of approval. The business has been policed from within, and that is one of the most effective methods. Our complaints in Philadelphia against money-lenders are negligible in number. We have served more than 70,000 poor persons who are worthy since August 1920. When we have a complaint against a small loan company, we do not rush into court for redress; we prefer to take the matter up with the head of the organization in the city, and we have had uniform success in obtaining fair and reasonable adjustments for our clients. The law limits those in the small loan business in Pennsylvania to loan in the amount of $300, and to an interest charge of 3½ per cent per month, which is the legal rate for this class of loan.

Now your business is about to be jeopardized by the advent of a greedy outfit of schemers, known as the salary-purchasers. The public is about to be the victim of this ignoble gentry. They are real money grabbers. There is a record of cases where they have levied a toll of 2600% per year from their unfortunate victims, and their victims are the wage earners of this country, the very salt of the earth. Their victims are that vast army of plain, unobtrusive folks, who attend to their own affairs, rear their families decently, and ask only that they be accorded the privilege of living in reasonable comfort in this free country of ours. Surely these people deserve protection.

As far as the Bureau of Legal Aid, Department of Public Welfare, is concerned, they shall obtain the fullest measure of protection. We shall endeavor, when occasion arises, to obtain redress for persons who are victimized by salary-purchasers. We shall handle these cases with such vigor that we trust the business will not prosper in this jurisdiction.

What is the law as to salary assignments in Pennsylvania?

(Here Mr. Hassrick quoted the law and decisions re salary assignments in Pennsylvania. Ed.)

The Russell Sage Foundation of New York, which conducts a department of remedial loans and which has been largely instrumental in effecting reform in the small loan business throughout the United States, has studied the question of wage assignments. May I quote some interesting excerpts from a study of this question, which I have been privileged to read:

"Obviously, therefore, my treatment of the law relating to small loans would be incomplete, unless it included a treatment of the law relating to wage assignments, so far as it affects small loans. In addition, at the present time, the most pressing problem in this field arises from wage assignments. The 'Loan Shark' accustomed to from one hundred and twenty per cent to five hundred and twenty per cent per annum, or more, dies hard, and he is now putting his transaction in the form, not of a loan secured by an assignment, but in the form of a purchase of the wages, and is claiming thereby to be exempt from all usury and loan laws. His claim is: I am not making a loan, I am buying wages. I am simply purchasing a claim, and therefore no loan law applies to me, and if I purchase fifteen dollars worth of wages, payable in one week, for ten dollars, and thereby extort 2600% per annum from the wage earner, no usury law and no loan law can touch me."

It appears from a survey of the Russell Sage Foundation that the greater percentage of persons assigning their salaries for loans is comprised of railroad employees, public employees, employees of department stores and certain types of industrial concerns.

This report shows further that "In England and in most of the American States the unearned fee and salaries of public officers and employees have been held unassignable on the ground of public policy: 'The law presumes with reference to an officer of trust that he requires the payment which the law has assigned to him for the purpose of upholding the dignity and performing properly the duties of that office and therefore will not allow him to part with any portion of those fees either to the appointer or anyone else. He is not allowed to charge or encumber them. That was the case of Parsons vs. Thompson 1 H. Bl. 322. Any attempt to assign any portion of the fees of his office is illegal on the ground of public policy and held therefore to be void.' "

After carefully summarizing the situation in the various states as to wage assignments, the Foundation makes these recommendations: "In the present statutes, we therefore find without exception a steadfast and constant purpose to protect the assignor. Various methods have been tried in various states, and even in the same state at various times, and the tests of experience and of survival of the fittest seem to recommend that the wage earner and his family should be protected against improvidence:

1. By limiting the amount that may be taken from any one wage payment, preferably to 10% thereof;
2. By requiring the consent of the wife or spouse to any assignment of wages; and
3. By limiting such assignments to debts contracted simultaneously with the delivery thereof;

That he should be protected against fraud,

1. By requiring the assignee to deliver to him at the time of the transactions either copies of all papers connected therewith or a detailed memorandum of the transaction which will bind the assignee, and
2. By requiring that all papers be executed by the assignor in person; and

That the assignor should be protected against extortion by

1. Limiting the rate of interest or return to the assignee and giving the state full supervisory power over the later, in return for which a rate greater than the usual contract rate of interest in the state should be allowed on transactions of $300 or under, but still a rate within reason.

2. By inflicting severe civil and criminal penalties in case of disobedience of the law, particularly as regards the rate of interest or return."

It would appear that the most effective method of attack in this business, which I understand is now about to invade both Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, would be to consider the advance of a sum of money to an employee to be paid out of his earnings is in essence and substance a loan, and therefore subject to the usury and small loan laws in effect in this state. These salary purchases are mere subterfuges to evade the small loan law, particularly inasmuch as these loan laws are remedial measures adopted for the specific purpose of regulating all advances of small sums of money. There can be no question but that the legislature in enacting the small loan law intended to cover just such small loans of money as these salary purchasers make.

To date, the operations of these salary purchasers have been particularly flagrant in such states as Georgia, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan and Missouri. We do not contemplate their invasion of this state with any enthusiasm, but we shall endeavor by every legal means to make it as unpleasant for them in Philadelphia as the nature of their business deserves.

THE VALUE OF THE REJECTED CUSTOMER

By P. C. Hess

It would seem that a customer who could not meet your credit standards would be of no possible benefit to you. This is the point of view of many Managers, but it is not the right one, and by accepting it Managers are giving away valuable business.

The advertising cost per customer made, is obtained by dividing the number of accepted loans into the monthly advertising bill. This gives a definite money cost for obtaining each account offered. This figure can be reduced in only one way, and that is by having those customers who do not come up to your standards for credit carry away with them literature and personal impressions that cause them to recommend your service in their neighborhood, and get a customer for you to offset their own rejection.

Study each applicant. When a prospective customer approaches the cashier's window with the request that he be granted a loan, it is customary for the Manager to measure and weigh him by his "loan sense." This "loan sense" cannot be defined. It is a feeling that is the result of years of credit and collection work, and it enables its fortunate possessor to size up a prospective customer almost offhand and tell whether or not he meets the requirements.

It is the habit of some Managers to turn these customers down almost without comment, simply saying that they cannot make the loan. This costs money. It adds to your overhead expense, and it adds to your cost per loan. Therefore it directly concerns your record as an efficient Manager to salvage whatever business can be had at a profit from this class of customer. It requires a little time, a little thought, and considerable tact, but it can be done, and this is the way it should be done. In spite of the fact that the prospective customer does not measure up to your standards and that you have no intention of getting him on your books for any amount whatsoever, it is still a fact that this undesirable customer may have friends who come well within your requirements and who need immediate money. In order for him to tell these friends about your service, your rates and your business, he must first know something about them from you.

The psychology involved is perfectly simple. The man wants money, or he would not apply for it. However much he may want the money, he wants it as cheaply as he can get it, and the idea you must bear in mind is to make him want it so badly that he is willing to pay your price to get it. This does not mean raising his hopes with any false assurance. On the contrary he should be allowed to select the amount of money that he thinks is necessary to ameliorate his condition. The application should be looked up, and when the customer calls to inquire he can be told that the credit committee has refused to make the loan because they consider that he is not handling his business affairs as well as he might, or for any other reason that is backed up by any statement on the application. In no cases should the Manager simply hide behind an imaginary committee and say that they refused to pass the loan, and that he does not know why. Any person of ordinary intelligence knows that credit is either granted or refused for definite reasons which are known as well to the Manager as to the committee passing judgment, if there be a committee.

Tell your customer where his apparent fault lies, and tell him that you can give him the amount that he wants provided he can so change his condition that the committee will approve his next application. Show a personal interest in helping him as best you can. That forestalls any demonstration of disappointment, and leaves the customer in a friendly frame of mind. Mistakes, of which he was unaware, have been pointed out to him in a helpful way, and he is assured that he is a worthy person and that the Manager will help him get the money he so urgently needs.

The main impression that the rejected customer has when he has been shown where his failing lies is not one of resentment. He feels that he has met a friend who is giving him advice in order to help him, and he cannot help but feel that this advice is prompted by a friendly spirit of helpfulness, inasmuch as it has cost him no money.

It is natural for any man to assume that, once his application is taken, he is accepted as being worthy of credit, and the chances are greatly in favor of his having told his neighbors or close friends that he is going to borrow or even has borrowed a certain amount from you. He now tells them that he did not get the money, and the manner in which he tells them determines how much business you are ever going to get from his close friends or associates. If he reports that you are a fine fellow and tried to get it for him, but that the credit committee (a very indefinite term) turned him down because of such a thing which he had never thought of, and that you took him into the office and showed him how he could change that condition so he could get the money a little later—he and his friends, both, get the instant impression that you are not only all right personally, but that you are helpful and friendly and that your company is a businesslike concern, inasmuch as it discovered something about this man that he did not know himself.

It may be claimed that this waste of time spent in looking up the application, taking the application and rating the customer is not justified. The only time it is not justified is when it causes undue expense or loss of money to the customer, not to the loan office. This can be avoided easily. Tell the customer that inasmuch as his application must be passed on by the credit committee you want to be able to tell them all the good things you can, and because you know what the committee looks for, you want to be able to tell them everything about his affairs. You will be surprised at the reasons that will come out why you should make that loan. The next day, when he comes in to find out whether he gets the money or not, you can tell him that the committee decided that a loan at this time would weaken his position, but that as soon as he had settled some of his debts to come and tell you. Make it clear that his credit standing goes up a notch every time he pays a bill.

Any man constantly engaged in the granting of credit becomes adept at recognizing the various types of customer who come to him for money. However, there are so many things that are known equally to the prospective customer and to the Manager that it is not possible for anyone, after a glance at a person and without a thorough questioning, to be able to determine whether or not that person would make a good loan.

An application that plainly shows that the would-be customer is a dead beat should be given no hope. These dead beats as a rule are quarrelsome and one method of rejecting them is to tell them that since, their old debts should take their surplus until paid, your committee was unable to rate their credit high enough to make them a loan, but that as soon as they meet their obligations and reestablish themselves on a firm credit basis you will be glad to take up their application again and bring their change of status to the attention of the committee.

Persons who misrepresent a statement should be told that it was discovered that such a statement in their application when checked up could not be verified, and that unless they are prepared to prove the accuracy of the statement mentioned the matter cannot again be referred to the committee.

Regardless of the fact that you are not going to make the loan and probably never will make the loan, carry your friendly sales talk all the way to the door of the office and let the last word you say to them be friendly. Thank them for making the application, and express your regret that certain facts of their application make it impossible to grant their request, and that you will be very glad if they can come back when conditions have changed and submit another.

Remember that every rejected applicant is the person who believes he has a reason to find fault with everything, from your advertising to your service. They are the people most likely to tell others to stay away. You cannot afford to throw away the trade of their friends who are eligible for credit. You must have them leave your office in the frame of mind that they are to blame, and that you are helping them overcome the reason for rejection, as quickly and as helpfully as possible.

The successful Manager is a man who not only extends credit and makes collections, but is a man who extends friendship and makes customers.

DOUBLING UP

"Quod medicorum est promittunt medici, tractant fabrilia fabri.

Physicians attend to the business of physicians, and workmen handle the tools of workmen."

—Horace—Satires. I. I.

Just as half of the duty of any reputable physician is the prevention of disease, so the small loan man of today should consider that half his business is the prevention of the ills usually attendant upon poverty due to mismanagement or other unforeseen emergencies.

The basis of small loan service is a truthful, frank, and full relationship between customer and lender. Business built on any other basis may be profitable for a while but it is hurtful to the customer, instills a non-cooperative spirit in the lender, and cannot prosper for very long.

Just as a doctor vaccinates for disease, so should the small-loan man of today investigate his customer's financial condition and diagnose his ills before applying a preventative measure to insure against their recurrence or their development into even more serious stages.

The greatest bar to confidence between the small loan man and his customer is the natural secrecy of the customer concerning his exact financial condition, and yet there is no other way for the small loan man in his capacity as financial advisor to work out the customer's financial problems than by a knowledge of the full facts of the case. Fortunately, the majority of small loan men operating loan offices today engender in their clients a spirit of confidence born of their own spirit of helpfulness. Anything that tends to break down the barrier of secrecy or to remove the natural barrier of reserve between strangers is to be commended. Anything that tears down this structure of good-will should be cut out just as remorselessly as a surgeon removes a troublesome appendix.

The practice of doubling up is prevalent in many communities, and is one great evil of the loan business. Considering that the satisfactory loan office customer of today is known to be the man who gets one loan, gets on his feet and stays there without further recourse to the loan office, it can be readily seen that the only solution the modern money lender has for his problem is to get his customer out of debt as quickly and as painlessly as possible. This he cannot do if he permits the customer to cultivate the borrowing habit or if he will willingly lend him money knowing him already to be in debt beyond his means to pay.

Money lending has seen many changes and has passed through many stages of operation. Its ethical practices have passed through as many different phases as its operating practices. In fact, one is more or less dependent upon the other because, strange as it may seem, the only business that can succeed today is a business founded upon the proper ethical conception of the relationship between the business and its customers.

How shall we present this problem of doubling up so as to show the dangers attendant upon the practices?

Is it enough to say that a debt-ridden customer is a loan office liability and that no loan manager, no matter how clever, can get a customer out of debt and keep him there if another and less scrupulous loan manager is keeping that customer's nose to the grindstone? The service you render him is overweighed by the pernicious influence of your competitor. The service you would render him he is unable to accept because of his added financial responsibilities and liabilities.

It takes money to make money. It takes money to pay debts, to keep up one's credit in the neighborhood, to present a decent appearance, to raise a family, to buy the thousand and one things that enter into the business of the modern household.

The money for these human necessities can be obtained by any person of good character and the extent of his purchases arranged for him so that he can not only repay his indebtedness but gradually clear himself of debt and stand upon his own feet.

The spirit of the Uniform Small Loan Law is so obvious that we wonder sometimes why it is that loan men sometimes miss the obvious teachings of it. What do you suppose lead to the fixing of the $300 limit? It was the figure arrived at after years of intensive research as the highest figure that the average small loan customer could hope to repay. Why was the rate fixed at from 3% to 3½%? That figure also represents years of tedious research to determine the amount of interest necessary to protect invested capital without oppressing the customer. Why does the contract provide for loans twenty months in duration? Because the gentlemen who contributed their time and energy found that a lesser period of time was in many cases oppressive, and that twenty months was none too long.

All of these major provisions of the Uniform Small Loan Law are constructive. They are intended to build up a customer's financial standing in his community and to enable him to meet sudden emergencies safely and without disrupting his entire economic existence.

How can the spirit of these provisions be carried out by those who are morally and legally bound to observe their precautions and the spirit in which they were written if one short-sighted loan manager is permitted to undo the beneficial work of a man far-sighted enough to realize that only by true service to his customers can he build business and keep it in the face of competition?

The Uniform Small Loan Law expressly states that loans in excess of $300 are not permissible. In spite of that, we have in mind case after case where doubling up has permitted the customer to obtain nearly twice the amount specified in the law as being the highest amount that he can hope to repay.

You may say that in most communities where doubling up is permitted, that there is a lender's agreement that the amount of both loans will not exceed $300.

That is a fallacy. The man who goes slow on his account at one loan office will very likely go slow at both and at the same time. His monthly interest charges soon carry him far beyond the $300 limit if his two loans are of the usual doubling up size.

Bear in mind that it is not the customer who wants a small amount of money that practices doubling up. As a rule the amount applied for exceeds $200.

Let us view the practice of doubling up from still another angle, that of friendly, clean competition. Competition is a stimulus to business, providing the competition is clean and carried on with the interest of the customer as the factor of primary importance. Unfortunately, doubling up as a rule, creates an unhelpful spirit, lowers the mutual confidence and esteem of lenders so engaged, and in some cases at least wrecks the entire credit organization to which they belong. It is only natural that this should be so. In fact, the only unnatural thing about it is that its truth is not more widely recognized and acted upon. Even in communities where no credit information bureau or exchange has been formed, it is customary for ethical lenders to telephone each other every morning and ask if they have such and such an application on file or on their books. That is a form of mutual protection that all lenders concerned appreciate and value highly. They purchase each others accounts occasionally with the full knowledge that what might be an easy collection for one may be hard for the other and vice versa. We have seen many rival LMS gathered around a luncheon table discussing their problems as frankly and as freely as if no real competition existed because their interests were identical and all were imbued with the knowledge that only by giving their best to the people could they expect the public to support them. Needless to say, the practice of doubling up was not thought of and collection cooperation has reached the point undreamed of in communities where doubling up was permitted.

Put yourself in the customer's place. Could you get out of debt if you owed more than one loan and had other debts to deduct each month from a meagre income? And yet you must get your customer out of debt if you are to perform the service for him that he is paying you for. Your interest charges cover more than the use of your money. They represent a fee for a financial advisory service to prevent a recurrence of the customer's financial difficulties. You must put yourself in his place and get him out of trouble or you have overcharged him and have done an injustice to the entire business of making small loans. If you get him out of debt you will get every friend he has for a customer to replace him when his loan is paid off. You build an endless chain of good will more effective than any advertising that you can put in newspapers. You build a business that is not dependent upon the employment of heavy weight collectors to get your interest for you. You build a regard among business men in your town for a type of public service that they themselves are not prepared to give, and, since it contributes to their own prosperity, they endorse your methods and contribute to your prosperity by sending you business.

The acceptance of a person as a customer and the granting to that person of a loan makes you morally responsible for his financial welfare, just as the acceptance of a fee by a physician presupposes that he will give the patient the benefit of every particle of professional knowledge that he possesses regardless of the disease encountered.

That is the duty of all loan men. Give every particle of professional knowledge that you possess regardless of what caused the customer's financial difficulties. Get him out of debt and make your loans to his friends and their friends.

You cannot do it if you tolerate doubling up. You are dividing the responsibility of your customer's financial good health with another loan manager whose diagnosis may not be as accurate as yours and whose conception of service may not be as broad. You are endangering your own future business by permitting another man to undo your work. You are jeopardizing your own public good will and lessening your influence in your community by a silent endorsement of a non-constructive practice, hurtful to the customer, damaging to the reputation of the loan man who practices it, destructive to the growth of public good-will, and dangerous in its legislative potentialities.

Let us quote another's viewpoint, Mr. J. D. Burwell of the Dayton Industrial Lenders Association, in the AILA Year Book for 1925, says:

"I can say nothing but good for the Credit Bureau whose sole purpose is SERVICE to every Credit Grantor, and the Bureau that does not recognize that mission has no economic justification and I say the same thing of any business or profession that cannot come out into the open and to cooperate with his brother to overcome the ills of the credit field that are so common today.

I remind you before I finish, the salvation of our credit liberties lays with our mutual interest in each other's welfare and the agency of common endeavor. "In Unity there is security, lasting peace and prosperity."

"We demand that big business give people a square deal; in return we must insist that when any one engaged in big business honestly endeavors to do right, he shall himself be given a square deal."

CLARENCE HODSON, JR.

COOPERATION

When I was requested to write a paper on a subject of my own selection I was just a little puzzled what to write on as mostly everything pertaining to our Business has been thoroughly covered, but as we are always open to new ideas and suggestions which will be helpful to us, and as the success of any business depends largely upon cooperation, I decided to use that as my subject, I hope that my paper will be helpful to you.

1. We will take our Office where we conduct our business, which is lending money to the necessitous borrower, we organize our working force and after being instructed in the fundamental principles of our Business we assign each one to their certain duties each one putting their shoulder to the wheel and starting the Business along the Road to "Success," but to reach that success it is necessary that each one's effort is so coordinated as to make this unit comprising the working force to function properly, this can be attained not only by each one doing their duty but each one taking a personal interest in the success of the business so there will be no friction which would impair perfect functioning, then the many problems that confront us daily will not be neglected in any detail, all of these requirements in the success of any Business are of little avail without the consideration of the value of each worker. The successful Employer and Manager will properly appraise the value and service of each worker. Good-Will is a part of these Human Values, and it counts heavily in the success of any Business and as an economic standpoint. The average Business House or Financial Institution today no matter how large or how small it may be realize the value of using cooperative methods. If the relationship between the Employer and Employee or among the Employees be of a friendly nature so as cooperation is firmly established, then the best interest of the business will be protected, but if the relationship between the employer and employee or among the employees be of an unfriendly character so as dissention prevails then the Business will suffer injury and Financial loss.

2. Cooperation with the borrower should be given sincere consideration. It is not my object to dictate to you how to conduct your business, as many of you men have had many more years experience than I have had, you know and I know that in cases where we collect through legal channels most always part of that account is charged to Profit and Loss, when an account becomes delinquent or so seriously delinquent that you have decided to take legal action, it would be wise to carefully investigate the case before doing so, this should be the last method resorted to as there may be some reason why this customer is not paying other than evading payment, and through cooperation with the borrower you may find some way that this account can be adjusted satisfactorily to you and satisfactorily to the Borrower, and in this way you will not only insure payment of that account but gain their Good-Will, which in many cases proves very profitable, not only in getting the money loaned back with interest, but their credit can be re-established so we can have a continuation of their business. Great deeds can be accomplished through cooperation.

3. Our Association was formed with the idea of upholding the dignity of the Loan Business, and to bring about through these meetings a closer understanding among the membership, we are all engaged in the same line of Business, each working for their individual success, but in striving for that success we sometimes become a little selfish to our fellowmen, we can't close the doors on ourselves thinking we have the very solution for the success of our Business, for we do not want to forget that it is the interchanging of the ideas of others with our own, and it is the co-ordinating of these ideas as we progress that assures success and helps to keep our Business on a High level standard. We should cooperate at all times, by cooperating we are helping one another, and by helping one another we will be helping ourselves, we should not degrade any of our legitimate competitors no matter how large or how small their business may be, or complain of their method of doing business to the borrowing public, as this will prove very harmful to us, we want to cultivate the minds of the people to the High standard of our Business and to eliminate any existing prejudice. Our present and future prosperity depends not only on our ability to analyze and understand the problems that arise each day, but to so co-ordinate and blend into Harmonious cooperation all the factors entering into our Business, so as to bring about a strong and helpful organization, we should make no effort to transgress on each other, or should there be any attempt to usurp the information received from one another which would in any way jeopardize the helpful understanding of that Member. Our dealings should be candid and unbiased with no thought of selfishness but helpfulness in mind, and in this way confidence can be established and respect for each other can be maintained, as we are associated for the welfare of our Business and mutual protection.

THE USURY GAME

What the "Small Man" Pays for Commercial and Mortgage Accommodation—Three Potent Remedies for the Abuse.

(From the Magazine of Wall Street for March 27th, 1926.)

"The rate of money is 5%." So runs the average commentary in the financial press. Such statements must appear the acme of irony to a multitude of small home builders, who know, to their cost, that the rate of interest they pay is frequently above 10%, and often more than 20%.

It makes no difference that 43 out of our 48 states have apparently stringent usury laws. It makes no difference what the rate of money is in Wall Street. Year in and year out, a great multitude of small business men, temporarily in a disadvantageous position, pay an appalling toll to the money lender.

How Many Are Filched?

When a leading expert in the banking system was called upon to give his opinion upon what are commonly called pawnbrokers' rates, he answered airily, "Oh, any responsible business man can get accommodation from banks or mortgage companies, at, say, 7%. These cases of which you speak must be marginal. There must be tremendous risk attached in making such loans and all in all, this can apply to only a tiny part of the commercial community." This is a typical attitude, yet it is not correct. As a matter of fact, the slightest examination of the situation reveals the fact that there is a normal volume of borrowing at 10% or more.

For example, let us take a corporation —fairly well known, but not of prime quality—that comes into Wall Street for its initial financing. Let us assume that it issues a 7% preferred stock, at 90, to be retired at 110. In the case of the smaller companies, such an issue would not be unusual. But its securities are not easy to sell. They lack "knowability." Hence, the company receives only about $80 per share from the bankers for every $100 sold. At that, the bankers may not make much money on the sale at 90. But from the viewpoint of the company it is paying about 9% in interest, or $7 upon the $80 received.

Now let us assume that five years pass, and the company's credit standing rises to equal the best. It may now wish to refund by issuing a 6% preferred stock. As such, it will have to retire its 7% preferred stock at 110. That means a premium of $30 upon $80 received in five years, or $6 per annum. Add this to the $7 paid annually in dividends and it will have paid each year $13 on every $80 received or interest at the rate of 16% per annum.

A still more striking example is the ordinary commercial discount. If billings are made on the basis of 2% for 30-day payments, then the rate of interest prevailing in favor of the cash buyers is 24% per annum at simple interest. In the case of a great firm, it can finance itself by 90-day paper at 6%. In the case of a smaller concern, although reputable and solid, it can, say, obtain only three-fifths of its needed "line" with the banks. At the same time it hates to forego the 30-day discount. It will be glad to pay 18% to usurers for two-fifths of its needs, in order to take advantage of such discounts. In other words, it will pay on a loan of $10,000, $360 per annum on $6,000, $720 on $4,000, or $1,120 equal to 11.2% on all its accommodation.

That such a concern is not exceptional everyone knows. That the usurer takes practically no risk he well knows; since such a loan is not made because the concern is in distress, but merely because it sees greater commercial advantage in making such a loan. In other words, it goes to the usurer for exactly the same reason that it goes to the bank.

The third obvious field where large masses of borrowers pay usurious rates is that of the second mortgage. Let us take the situation in New York City. Here is a city, the very head and front of our lending system where, undoubtedly, the lowest money rates in the United States systematically prevail. Interest rates must, on the average, be higher elsewhere. Yet, the greatest number of second mortgage loans on two-family homes is made as follows: $1,000 is loaned out for only three years and only $750 is actually advanced in cash for this three year mortgage. Interest at the rate of 6% on the full thousand is discounted at once.

How the Usury Laws are Evaded.

It is perfectly obvious that in this case a loan has been made at 14% per annum. Friends of the writer tell him that he is extremely conservative in his position, and that 25% is the more usual rate. It is, however, true that the average second mortgage loan on brownstone houses on the West Side of New York, where the first mortgage amounts to only 50% of the assessed valuation, and where the second mortgage does not more than equal 20% of the assessed valuation, has been found on the average—despite denials by the lenders—to be 18%.

Straight evasion of the usury laws in the sense of ignoring them is common enough. Whenever surveys have been taken of national banks, the majority have cheerfully admitted that they frequently make loans at rates exceeding the statutory limits in their respective states. The bank is the natural competitor of the usurer and is equipped to crush him, once it strives to throw off the shackles of usury restrictions. As we will point out later, the bank is restricted far more, however, by a childish notion of what constitutes safe banking than it is by usury laws.

How It Sometimes Works

The most common form of usury is for a borrower, having an excellent line with a bank, to lend out the sums it has loaned him at 7%, at higher rates of interest to less fortunate men. The medium in New York City may be a lawyer who sometimes spends less of his time at law than at amateur financing. This type of lawyer is ideal for this purpose because he knows fully the distresses of some of his clients and the prosperity of others. Here circumstance marks him out as a natural broker.

Since his most responsible client is conservative, he effects a loan, very often, from his conservative client, to himself at about 15%. This gives his client 8% above what he pays the bank, and he feels secure because he has not as yet paid the lawyer certain fees. The lawyer speedily relends to a man whom he knows to be a rather solid borrower at what amounts to 25%. This borrower, in turn, loans to the "graveyard" man at the equivalent of 40 or 60% or whatever he can get.

Then follows the comedy of collecting. When the first borrower from the bank cannot obtain adequate renewal terms, he gets after the lawyer immediately. The lawyer gets after his client, and so on down the line. The ultimate pressure falls on the last frantic borrower who often must obtain money borrowed at the rate of 75% to repay money borrowed at 60%. He has very little option, as he is caught in a circle and he hopes against hope that he may yet be able to beat bankruptcy. The usurer may be clever enough to become very friendly with his victim, thus making it difficult, socially, for the victim to repudiate even if he wishes.

The methods by which these illegal rates are obtained are simple enough. The usurer uses the bank's methods of obtaining a higher rate than is legal. He requires the borrower to keep a balance of, say, 25% of the loan in the bank, thus converting a 10% loan into a 12.5% loan. But as a matter of fact, what is more often done is that the loan is made in cash against which a note will be given, often two or three times the amount of the money transferred.

The following form is orthodox. Four thousand dollars is advanced in cash. A note is made out for $8,000. This note is payable in one year. It is payable, however, at the rate of $2,000 per quarter. Very often interest at the rate of 6% is immediately returnable out of the $4,000 cash advanced. The average man finds it difficult to appreciate fully what such a rate of interest amounts to. It is certainly beyond 100%.

While borrowers in such cases are usually bad risks, every usurer can tell you that it takes three or four years for victims to reel into bankruptcy. In other words, the usurer can afford to lose the principal and still have made 25% per annum on his man. Obviously, if usury were not a paying business and a heavily paying business, despite its risk, and moral stain, men would not be so actively in the game. As a matter of fact, millions of men in the United States are caught in the usury mesh, from the farmer paying 12% on good collateral security, and the responsible business man paying the same rate of interest for most of his accommodation, whether directly or indirectly, to the necessitous borrower on a large scale paying at the borrowing rate of 100% per annum.

Loans such as those made by collateral loan societies, conservative pawn brokers, Morris Plan Companies, etc., although at a rate of interest far exceeding the normal, are not, in essence, usurious. Since the loans are not made as a rule for productive commercial purposes, they can be considered loans for consumption, or to tide over certain difficult periods. The most philanthropic investigators have been compelled to realize that in view of this non-productive basis for most of such loans, a high rate of interest must prevail, if such accommodation is to exist at all. Nevertheless, organized intelligent effort has reduced the rates on such accommodations, from the 20% a month charged by the loan shark to 3% or so a month charged by the best collateral loan societies. What has here been done on a small scale can commercially be effected on a large scale by three great reforms.

The first step must be the absolute abolition of all usury laws of any type with reference to commercial loans. Once it is legal to loan out money at any rate of interest whatsoever, it follows that the supply of money that can legally and honestly come into the field will be so increased as to reduce the rate of interest. Since the borrower must obtain money, if he obtains it by illegal shifts he will pay far more than it is worth. Laws against usury are ghosts of the past and nothing more. In the Middle Ages, the church held the payment of all interest to be unjust, and its sentiments remain imbedded in the statutes of a later day, even though the church itself accepts interest today.

The second reform will ultimately follow from the first. Instead of banks merely lending out to prime borrowers, they will by experience discover what the British banks have discovered. They will discover that risk in less desirable loans can be definitely measured and a premium charged accordingly. In this way, any sound business man will be enabled to obtain his full line of credit at a rate of interest sufficient to guarantee the bank as an average against loss. The limit of the rate of interest would then be the highest possible economic rate of interest consistent with profitable use by the borrower. This, and not the law, should fix the natural usury limit.

A still further method that can act collaterally to better the situation is the cooperative union of smaller business men. Those who know the success of mutualism, as it is called, in the Province of Quebec, know very well that it dooms the usurer. As usual it is in self-help that the salvation of the smaller business man will be found.

Agricultural loans have been brought within reason in the United States by the Federal Farm Loan Banks and Joint Stock Land Banks. While they have not remedied the entire situation they have taken the edge off most of the injurious loans. In Germany where the farmers were formerly in the clutches of usurers, the cooperative Raffeissen system has changed the face of the situation. The provincial banks were at first hostile but are now advocates of the system. The Schultze-Delitzsch credit unions have enabled the professional and executive classes to duplicate the success attending business men's cooperative credit unions. It is obvious that constructive measures against usury which have worked well in Europe will work well here.

THE LOAN SHARK RETURNS

By Walter T. Dunmore,

President of Cleveland Legal Aid Society

For centuries men have differed upon the subject of the payment of interest for the use of money. Some have believed that society should not permit the recovery of any interest; others have believed that there should be no usury laws and that the price of money should be governed by supply and demand, as is any other commodity.

The result of this difference of opinion is usually some sort of a compromise such as is effective in Ohio. Our statute fixes the legal rate of interest at six percent, but permits the parties legally to contract for eight per cent. However, if a rate in excess of eight per cent is stipulated or deducted by the lender, the law will help him to recover his loan and six per cent interest. Obviously, we do not take all our usury laws seriously, or the usurer would be penalized by a refusal of the courts to help him recover his principal, or, at least, would allow him no interest.

As a matter of fact, not all contracts for usurious interest are equally comprehensive. Our Legislature recognized this when by a statute effective in August, 1921, a corporation borrowing money for a year or more was forbidden to interpose the defense of usury. Our lawmakers felt it wise to legalize a transaction whereby a corporation agreed to pay more than eight per cent in a market where it could not borrow money more cheaply.

Most of us shed no tears over the cases of the corporations or speculators who propose to pay twelve per cent for money with the use of which they expect to make twenty or thirty per cent. They have made a business venture and morally should keep their promises. Far different, however, are the cases of the unfortunate and helpless whose necessities force them to submit to any exaction. The individual who forces the needy workman to pay a hundred and fifty or two hundred per cent amply secured by chattel mortgage may well be denominated a loan shark. It is against this type of loan shark that the Cleveland Legal Aid Society has waged war for many years.

Some years the Legal Aid Society had a fairly constant series of complaints from poor borrowers who had promised to pay extortionate interest charges. It soon became evident that some constructive action should be taken to abolish the loan shark. The decently conducted chattel mortgage agencies, the Legal Aid Society, and a few individuals prepared and secured the enactment of a law requiring those engaged in making chattel and salary loans to secure a state license. Such licensed agencies were permitted to charge a maximum of three per cent a month, except where the loan was twenty-five dollars or less, when five per cent might be charged. Obviously, the chattel loan agency can exist only if permitted to charge what seems a relatively high rate.

The result of placing the chattel loan business uniformly upon a legitimate basis and subject to state supervision had an immediately beneficial effect. The legitimate loan agencies took the field formerly occupied by the lender who had demanded many times the rate now permitted by statute. At times, a period as long as a year elapsed without the Legal Aid receiving a single complaint against a chattel loan agency.

During the last few weeks complaints against chattel loan agencies have commenced to come to the Society in something like their former volume. All sorts of devices are used by lenders, the net result of which is that the borrower pays a rate of interest well over one hundred per cent. The writer was at a loss for time to determine the cause for this revival of illegitimate loan agencies, but probably this revival is to be ascribed to that well-known law of supply and demand.

Probably everyone has noticed the phenomenal increase in the extension of credit during recent years. Anything from a birdcage to an expensive garment or jewel may be purchased on installments. Every individual is literally begged to avail himself of his credit and purchase now with what he hopes to earn in the future. The volume of installment sales in the automobile field is an example of the way in which the public has accepted the offer to sell on credit.

With this increase in credit naturally comes a desire on the part of the seller to increase the pressure on the debtor who does not meet his obligations. This pressure was materially increased by an Act of the Ohio Legislature, which becomes effective July 21st of this year. previously to that a debtor's wages were exempt except where the claim was for necessities, in which event ten per cent might be taken. Now ten per cent of a debtor's wages can be taken on any claim and twenty per cent on a claim for necessities. Thousands of people who could not be forced to pay by legal means now find that they must pay if they work. At a time when there is every encouragement for the man of small means to over-extend his credit, the seller is given a more powerful weapon to compel payment.

Judge Stanley Orr is authority for the statement that there are on an average 200 aids of execution each week in the Cleveland Municipal Court. These proceedings are brought against judgment debtors who have no tangible property which can be found to subject to levy. The debtor finds that his employer may be served with a notice to hold the debtor's wages. He also knows that his employer has given notice that any employee whose wages are seized by legal process will be discharged. He will pay any rate to obtain funds for temporary relief.

The harvest is ripe and the loan shark has returned to reap it. If he does not succeed in doing so, it will only be because of vigorous action on the part of those who are opposed to the heartless exploitation of the poor and helpless.

"SMALL LOANS" FOR SAVINGS BANKS

Two or Three Mutuals of Massachusetts Are Working Along This Line

As long as we have the poor with us, and we are told that this will be always so long will the small loan remain a necessity. The time-honored sign of the pawnbroker, so frequently seen in the less prosperous sections of any city, calls attention to the number of loans, secured by personal property. There is no such sign to indicate the families which, driven by dire need, have mortgaged their future earnings, instead of some chattels, to provide for immediate demands.

The public is inclined to look upon the lender to these people as an extortioner. There is no doubt, however, to those who investigate, that a real service is rendered, even though his methods are often crude, and sometimes are businesslike to the point of brutality. Where would the poor man finance his needs, if the money lender were not ready to take the risk, upon consideration of an ample margin of interest. It is interesting to learn that an exhaustive study of the subject of small loans by the Russel Sage Foundation, resulted in the opinion that a proper charge for money borrowed may well be as much as three and one-half per cent per month, or forty-two per cent per year. Such a burden must rest heavily, of course, upon any man's shoulders. Here, as in many cases, the poor pay higher for what they buy than do the rich. It is, however, difficult to reduce these charges to an appreciable extent, for, beside the element of risk of loss of the money, there must be a charge to cover the expense of investigating the applicant, as well as the charge which may properly be made for interest.

One Successful Case

Recently, it has become apparent to at least one of the savings banks of Massachusetts, that laws already on the statute books make it possible for it to combine philanthropy and profit by furnishing small loans to deserving people. A considerable volume of "small loans" business can be done through use of the three-name note. The three-name note is one of the legal investments of the savings banks of Massachusetts and is nothing more than the name implies. The borrower obtains two other signatures acceptable to the mutual savings bank which is to make the loan. He receives the money for a term of six months or a year as the case may be with an interest charge of around six per cent. In the past and at present, business men and others have been largely served by mutual savings banks, under this law. The cotton mills of New England were beneficiaries of it for years, until a law of more specific terms was passed in their behalf. It remained for the bank previously mentioned to extend such privileges to the ordinary applicant for a small loan.

The small loan, as generally understood, does not exceed $300 and in amount is not large enough to be profitable to the ordinary commercial bank. The savings bank, however, which knows its neighborhood well, can handle such sums with profit, and the bank is already provided with the machinery to take regular payments from the borrower without imposing prohibitive costs.

Purpose of Loan

The man desiring a loan has various reasons for needing the money and these reasons should be subjected to careful scrutiny before the loan is granted. Emergencies caused by sickness or death, the necessity for an essential article of furniture as, say, a cook stove or equally important home fixture, or a pressing call for warm clothing, have caused many men to consider the desirability of a loan which places the whole amount in the hands of the borrower with the possibility of distributing the repayments over a period of months. Undoubtedly these are sound reasons for requesting loans when the value of the article to be purchased is in accord with a budget that really fits the income of the borrower. This preparation of a budget is important, for an extravagance on the part of one family may not be an extravagance in a case where the total income is greater. Sales of automobiles, talking machines and radios are now financed in other ways by regular companies, and probably they ought never to be financed through small loans, anyway.

Kind of Man

It is well, in the case of "small loans," to learn whether the applicant has permanent employment with adequate pay. A man may be in the employ of a firm for some years without earning the right to be considered a permanent employe. Continued shortage of labor may prolong his employment, but there is in the mind of his employer that he will be the first to go when any are to be laid off. Probably this fact would be hard to discover, because the man most concerned does not know the truth. Such a man is not a desirable debtor, if the bank's costs are to be kept at the lowest possible figure, even though he is as honest as the day is long. The amount in his pay envelope may at least tell a part of the story, for the lowest on the list of desirables is usually paid accordingly. Then, too, a savings bank can usually learn from the employe, himself, whether a particular employe is really a permanent man.

The two names which he presents to supplement his own signature on the note should receive careful attention. Of course the bank will insist upon the qualification that they are able to meet the note when due, if the borrower fails to do so, but there is more to it than that. They, his fellow-signers, should be men standing in such relation to the principal that he will be unwilling to have them find him failing to meet his obligations and that he will move heaven and earth to keep their respect. Several of the agencies making small loans recognize either the value of the endorsers as aids to prompt payment, or the powerful incentive resulting from the knowledge that a default will become known among the man's associates. They are able to conduct their business with a very low percentage of losses as a result. The savings bank should be ready to utilize all the experience gained by others in the course of business in addition to the numerous quirks of the trade gained by its own officers. It can hardly go wrong, if it insists upon shopmates or others, for fellow signers, who bear an equally close relation to the borrower.

Investigation Easy

It is not an easy task to find out the real character of a man. When he comes to borrow money, the bank's officers would have a hard task, if it were not for the relationship which the typical mutual bank of New England and New York bears to the community. Many small deposit accounts, such as are handled by a bank of this type, however, cause a large proportion of the inhabitants to be included among its customers. Thus it becomes easy to learn the concensus of opinion regarding a man at the teller's window, even though he has not been previously known. Here is where the savings bank is particularly fitted to assume a part, at least, of the small loan business, for the less investigation there is to be made, the smaller will become the cost of the loan and the less the errors in judgment, the more money will return in safety to the institution which loaned it.

Deposits To Pay Back

Paying back a loan is always a hardship, even for the most strongminded. This is the reason why provision for repayment should be made so moderate that it will be as pleasant as possible for those whose intentions are good but who would fail to carry any really hard task to the end. Here has been the factor which has usually impaired the usefulness of the savings bank, as a bank of small loans. Lacking the urge for regular saving, the borrower permits week after week to slip by, without making provision for the coming maturity of his note. He is more than likely to come to that critical time without the money to pay. If he cannot pay, there is more or less mental anguish on the part of the borrower and a mixture of feelings in the bank and between the hapless two who signed the note.

As has been said, the savings banks have all the machinery necessary for performing a small loan service. Even the repayment of borrowed money can be made from week to week without increasing costs greatly, since for this the readiness to accept small deposits may be utilized. All that is necessary is to see to it that the borrower makes a deposit of the correct amount each week until the due-date of the note means the transfer of his savings and the extinguishment of the debt. The compelling force behind the deposits could be a standing threat to notify the other signers that their principal appeared to be failing to live up to his word and making it clear that if he did not pay his friends would have to. Doubtless when thus remonstrated with, the borrower would make the proper deposit.

MARYLAND

The Maryland Industrial Lenders Association held its regular monthly meeting in the Board Room of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, Tuesday Evening, April 13th, at 7:30 P. M., about fifty Lenders being present.

Treasurer Goldrick reported all dues paid to date.

Publicity Chairman Holden reported progress and took the opportunity to roast the Secretary for not having had due notice of the meeting in his hands several days in advance, regardless of the fact that the By-Laws of the Association say that the meeting shall be held at that time each month.

President Hood speaking for Entertainment Committee Chairman Pumphrey reports a splendid program being arranged for the Annual Meeting in May, which included the Broadcasting of the Program, and the promise of the Baltimore Police Quartet to entertain.

Mr. Rosenfield Membership Committee Chairman reports progress and appointed Mr. Baseman, and accepted as a volunteer President Hood to serve with him on his Committee. Mr. Rosenfield said he had talked to several non-members of the Association and that he had hopes of increasing the membership in the near future.

E. F. Moore, of Philadelphia, spoke forcibly on the value of membership in the National Body.

A letter from National Secretary Kehr dated November 28, 1925, proposing a change in the Constitution of all state associations with respect to dues, was read and upon motion by Mr. Mattingly duly seconded and carried the following proposal from the National Secretary was adopted:

I am proposing as the most fair and scientific solution of the whole difficulty, a change in the constitution of all the state associations with respect to dues, dues of $1.00 per annum on the average loan balance of each office, 50c of which is to be paid to the national association in which membership is obtained automatically when any office joins the state association. All privileges now enjoyed by members of the national association will be included in this membership. I would place no minimum or maximum amount that could be paid.

The members were privileged to listen to a splendid talk by E. F. Moore with reference to the evils of the garnishee laws as practiced in some states, and said he hoped the members of the Maryland Association would never approve such a law for Maryland.

Upon motion by Mr. Gardner duly seconded the Association waived its rights to notice of a meeting to strike out the amendments adopted April 8, 1924.

Upon motion by Mr. Gardner seconded by Mr. Mattingly the amendments adopted April 8, 1924 were ordered stricken from the By-Laws of the Association.

Howard T. Mattingly,
Secretary.

MICHIGAN

The Michigan Association opened it's 10th Anniversary Meeting at the Elks' Club in Saginaw, Michigan, with an address of welcome by the Hon. Albert W. Tausend, Mayor of Saginaw, who delved into history, both ancient and modern, regarding the loan business and his laudatory remarks were received with great applause by all. The address of Welcome was answered by Chairman, Norman Buckner. Forty-two members answered roll-call. Those present from out of the State were Messrs. J. H. Aufderheide, of Indianapolis, Past Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders' Association; John D. Williams, of Philadelphia; B. E. Henderson, J. Rose, L. C. Dunn, Harry Drake, of Chicago; G. C. Grinsteiner, of Indianapolis; C. B. Liggett, of Dayton; C. C. Woodley, of Toledo. The morning session terminated at 12:45 o'clock P. M. in order for us to have lunch and refreshments arranged for, by Tom Tierney and his entertainment committee.

The afternoon meeting was called to order by Chairman Buckner, who, for the benefit of the large number of new members, introduced Mr. J. H. Aufderheide as one, who has put forth great efforts to help put the loan business on a legal basis. Mr. Aufderheide in his remarks, made an appeal to all members to keep the business clean by association and cooperation among licensees and by rendering the greatest service possible to the public. That the progress made by the Association was gratifying to all. He mentioned that ten years ago, when this Association was organized, we were few in number but great in purpose and today we have grown to a membership of forty-nine, which is about 80% of the licensees in the State of Michigan.

The old Constitution and By-laws were rescinded and the new ones drafted by J. J. Bentley and W. G. Stevens were adopted.

The question-box was opened, which, as usual, brought up many important subjects to discuss.

Treasurer Hanes reported balance on hand of $1,025.28.

It was moved, supported and carried that in the future all Annual meetings will be held in Detroit in October of each year. Messrs. Welch, Dudley, Bentley and Stevens were appointed as the entertainment committee for the next meeting to be held in Detroit, October 21, 1926.

Mr. Tom Tierney, of Saginaw, and Mr. R. A. Pearsall, of Bay City, were selected as delegates to the National Convention in Cleveland in September. Mr. Smith, of Jackson, and Mr. Hanes, of Lansing, as alternates. Meeting adjourned at 5:30 o'clock P. M. and turned over to the entertainment committee who put on an entertainment that would even make Indianapolis step some. There was plenty of music, dancing and 17 rounds of good boxing.

Everyone was so well pleased that they gave Mr. Tierney three lusty cheers more than once during the evening. We had several talented musicians among our members who played the violin well, also, a new form of entertainment known as round table play put on by Messrs. Firth and Liggett. When the boxers shook hands at the end of the last five-round-bout it brought to close the greatest and most enjoyed meeting that Michigan has ever had.

W. G. Stevens,
Secretary.

THE MEASURE OF MAN.

Not—how did he die?
  But—How did he live?
Not—What did he gain?
  But—What did he give?
These are the units
  To measure the worth
Of a man, as a man,
  Regardless of birth.

Not—What was his station?
  But—Had he a heart?
And—How did he play
  His God-given part?
Was he ever ready
  With a word of good cheer,
To bring back a smile,
  To banish a tear?

Not—What was his Church?
  Nor—What was his creed?
But—Has he befriended
  Those really in need?
Not—What did the sketch
  In the newspaper say?
But—How many were sorry,
  When he passed away?

SUCCESSOR TO THE LOAN SHARK IS THE "TIME BUYER" WHO COLLECTS 288 PER CENT INTEREST AND DODGES LAW

By L. L. Stevenson

From the April 18, 1926, issue of the Detroit News

New York.—The old-fashioned loan shark is rapidly becoming extinct. Twenty-two states, including Michigan, now have laws that protect from extortion the borrowers of small sums of money. The small loan business, recognized as legitimate and filling a definite need, has been made respectable in those states by being placed under the supervision of the state banking departments.

But though the loan shark has been almost put out of business by these laws, he has left a successor, a crown prince, who, within the last few years, has grown to such proportions that despite the remedial legislation, he is practically taking the place of the shark. The loan shark, in effect, has really only changed his name and his methods.

Now he is known as a "time buyer," a "wage buyer," and in some localities as a "time merchant." He does not conduct a loan office and instead of his business partaking of the nature of banking, it is merely a place of commerce.

Millions in Profits

By making it so, he escapes the law. But he does not neglect to collect profits—the word "interest" was very nearly written—on his transactions which, according to Leon Henderson, associate director of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, run into many million dollars a year.

The theory of the loan shark is that money is a commodity which may be sold and sold like a suit of clothes or a dozen eggs, the interest being the profit on the transaction. The "wage buyer" or the "time merchant" has a similar theory. He holds that wages are property and being such may be bought and sold like an automobile or a corner lot. In the days of the loan shark the note held the victim in virtual slavery and in this day of the "time buyer" it is the bill of sale. The effort is the same—the victim pays and pays and in the end finds he still owes the original sum.

The "wage buyer" is a recent development, a product of Atlanta, Ga., the greater amount of business being in the hands of several companies known as "The Big Four."

Cover Country.

As the business is immensely profitable. there are a host of imitators, of course, but, Mr. Henderson said, "The Big Four" are still the leaders and it is "Big Four" that have so developed the business that, though it is practically nation-wide, it is conducted like a chain store system.

The "time merchants" resent the name of loan shark—not alone because of the opprobrium associated with that title, but because in so many states the loan shark is an outlaw. But despite the change in name, the methods of operation have a striking similarity. For example, there is the matter of security. The loan shark's protection was the job of his victim. If he didn't pay up the loan, he lost his job because of garnishee proceedings. With the "time buyer," the seller of his wages must buy them back at a heavy increase or he is garnisheed and is fined.

"Railroad men are the favorite clients of 'time buyers' " said Mr. Henderson. "Suppose a man has two weeks' pay coming and needs money immediately. He goes to the office of the 'time buyer' —there is at least one such office in Detroit—and sells one weeks time.

"Not a Loan"

"If he has $50 coming, he will be given $25, for which he signs a bill of sale, similar in form to any other bill of sale, except that it usually contains at the bottom, a note saying 'this is not a loan.' The $25 he receives must be paid back in two weeks, the lender's security being the bill of sale. At the end of the two weeks, the borrower returns $27.50 or whatever has been agreed upon. After executing the bill of sale, he is merely acting as agent of the 'time buyer' in collecting his own wages. If he fails to bring in the money, he is garnisheed and generally when a man is garnisheed, he loses his job.

"When he sells his wages, he signs an application which is in two parts. One part of this is detached and sent to Atlanta where it is filed. This gives the home office a check on its agents. When he buys back the bill of sale, it is either returned to him or destroyed. Often his signature is torn off and handed to him.

"In one case in Chicago, a man had paid $1,008 on an original advance of $120, the transaction extending from pay day to pay day over a period of four years. And at the end of that time, he still owed the $120."

Uniform Law

The Russell Sage Foundation began the study of the loan shark situation in 1910. Following an exhaustive investigation, the Foundation worked out a "uniform small loan law" which has been adopted, with only small variations by Maine, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and Arizona, while New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Michigan, Colorado, Utah, Florida and Oregon operate under laws which are the same in principle. In 1923, the Foundation drew an amendment to this law with the object of stiffening it so that the "wage buyers" would be barred out. The amendment classifies the buying of wages no matter how the transaction is described as a loan.

"This 'time buying' evasion—which is really all it is—is a comparatively recent development in the situation," said Mr. Henderson, "and is one to which we are giving a great deal of attention.

"We are interested, not only because of the tremendous loss it causes to working men, but also because of its anti-social nature. One of the requirements for making most legitimate loans is that the wife sign the note also. The time buyer does not require the signature of the wife and thus the husband gets in debt without his wife knowing it. Our entire study convinces us that 'time buying is one of the most vicious forms of lending. Relatively, it is only a small part of the small loan business, but it is so vicious that it causes more trouble than all the rest.

Growth is Large

"The growth of this business has been very large lately and this is due largely to inertia and to the secrecy of the business. The companies keep as few books as possible and records are destroyed at the completion of each transaction. Thus when a 'time buyer' is brought into court, he is able to say that no such transaction occurred or that he does not remember such a transaction.

"The fountain head of this business seems to be Atlanta. In Georgia, there are 21 licenses under the uniform small loan law while in Atlanta there are 125 'time buyers' or companies. The Legal Aid Society in that city is doing excellent work there, however, as it has obtained 125 injunctions and 14 grand jury indictments. In Georgia, these companies have obtained some favorable court decisions owing to the fact that they brought the test cases themselves. Elsewhere, the courts have almost uniformly held that if you can prove that the transaction has the aspects and characteristics of a loan, it is a loan.

"Atlanta is a convenient depository for the records that must be kept and it is from Atlanta that traveling auditors swing out in a great circle that takes in about 20 of the principal cities of the country. The 'Big Four' alone does a business of between eight and ten million dollars a year, and every bit of this is in small loans. The volume of business is possible because of the organization, all of the offices being parts of a great chain."

Charges Vary

Charges vary in different localities, Mr. Henderson said, but the average, as nearly as he can determine, amounts to about 288 per cent a year. For a $10 loan, $12 is charged, the borrower having the use of the money only two weeks. For $15, the charge is $17.50; for $25, the borrower must repay $28 or more.

"To get lists of customers these companies usually have on their pay roll a pay roll clerk or a foreman," Mr. Henderson continued. "These also act as spies on the men."

"It is our opinion, backed up by our studies, that the 'time buyer' is as big a social menace as the loan shark."

Ten thousand records from loan offices in 17 states show that the two original causes that bring people to ask for small loans are sickness or death in the family and the loss of a job. The largest sums borrowed are for doctors' bills.

GRAND JURORS WILL FISH SOON FOR LOAN SHARKS

Loan sharks whose demands have driven many victims into the hands of the United Charities are under investigation by the state's attorney. The loan concerns are alleged to be operating in a vicious circle, with chains of offices in twenty or more cities. Their method is to purchase the wages of workers before the workers earn them and then to exact a toll of 20 per cent and more a month interest.

Several victims during the day told their experiences with the sharks to Assistant State's Attorneys Robert E. McMillan and Joseph Nicalai. Stenographers took down their statements and when the reports were read to the prosecutor he asserted there would be grand jury action.

Concerns Facing Inquiry

Here are some of the concerns which will come under the state's attorney's scrutiny:

Union Purchasing Co., 312 South Clark street; Illinois Finance Co., 10 North Clark street; Illinois Finance Adjusting Co., 22 East Van Buren street. Account Brokerage Co., 111 West Jackson boulevard; Salary Purchasing Co., 312 South Clark street, 325 West Jackson boulevard and 440 South Dearborn street; Central Finance Co., 160 North Wells street; Englewood Finance Co., 63d and Halsted streets; Burnside Finance Co., 9246 Cottage Grove avenue; Cook Purchasing Co., 9320 Cottage Grove avenue, and others.

Several of these admittedly are owned by the same group of men. But so involved are the affairs and organization that no one could say whether the several so-called "salary purchasing" companies are one or several concerns.

Acts to Aid Charities

State's Attorney Crowe started the investigation some days ago, it is learned, at the instance of the United Charities, into whose legal aid department the victims have been flocking.

Miss Irene V. McCormick, attorney in the legal aid of the charities, brought in the victims and a bundle of evidence which convinced the prosecutor, he said, that grand jury action is the only thing which will stop the sharks' practices.

The prosecutors said all of the concerns are operating apparently just outside the state usury laws. The legal percentage which licensed companies may charge is 3½ per cent per month. The group of new sharks operating mostly on small salaried men are known to have charged in one case at least as high as 70 per cent.

Miss McCormick, who has been investigating for months, says there is undoubted evidence that the same group of men who are operating in Chicago have been operating extensively in many other cities.

Some Owned in Atlanta

Thus the Union Purchasing company, the Illinois Finance company, and the Account Brokerage company are admittedly being operated by R. D. King and G. H. Rosenbusch, of Atlanta, Ga. And Miss McCormick has received requests for advice on how to deal with complaints similar to the Chicago ones from that southern city.

Also one shark is said to have made the statement that all the concerns were conducting chains of loan offices and that these extended in a vast system through 22 American cities.

The system employed is simple. The victim is loaned $25 at a time—no more. When he gets the $25 he gives a note for $27.50. He is required to pay the note in two weeks. When he pays the shark at once loans him another $25 and he gives another note for $27.50.

The allegations are it was a system of all pull together. One victim borrowed $25 from the Union Purchasing company, 312 South Clark street. That was two years and four months ago. He was sent in turn to three other concerns. And for 28 months he paid each of the four $2 50 on the 12th and 27th of each month. In the end he paid $140 extra for each original $25 he borrowed.

Getting the most out of life, is simply a matter of putting more in to it.

Here's a good one and when you come to the convention, ask me to tell you the story about the eight cats, it's a whiz bang, and if you are able to give the correct answer to the following problem, you will be awarded a fur lined bath tub.

If it takes a four-months' old woodpecker with a rubber bill and a high geared neck nine months and thirteen days to peck a hole through a cypress log that is big enough to make seven shingles and it takes 165 shingles to make a bundle worth $1.89, how long will it take a cross eyed grass hopper with a cork leg to kick the seeds out of a dill pickle?

CONVENTION NEWS

The place of the twelfth annual A. I. L. A. Convention has been changed to the Statler Hotel instead of the Cleveland Hotel, as formerly announced. The dates remain the same, September 15, 16 and 17.

The committees are all busy now arranging details for your edification and entertainment.

Frank J. Schneider, 2063 E. Fourth St., Cleveland, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, would like to know how many members are interested in having some athletic contests during the convention and of what nature desired.

The National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations has abandoned its intention of holding a convention this year, so all the time will be taken up with our own business.

Dr. C. G. Mueller, 220 S. Sixteenth St., Philadelphia, is making headway on the business program but needs more material; that is, good, live subjects and competent persons to volunteer to handle them.

Is there any one in our group who knows about the practices of the second and third mortgage operators and their unscrupulous practices so that he could prepare an intelligent paper on the subject?

Have you any amendments to the Constitution and By-laws to propose? If so, advise the National Secretary at once.

MASSACHUSETTS

The regular quarterly meeting of the Massachusetts Industrial Lenders Association was held on April 15th at Young's Hotel.

There were 33 members present, this being a banner attendance for all time. The guest of the occasion was Mr. Earl E. Davidson, Supervisor of Loan Agencies in Massachusetts, who informed us that he was to broadcast a talk on the small loan situation through WNAC on the 23d day of the month.

Mr. H. J. Desormeaux, our genial chairman, was elected a delegate to the Cleveland Convention; he was also instructed to attend a meeting of State Chairmen at that time. It was decided that Boston would be an unfavorable spot in which to hold the next meeting scheduled for July, and a committee headed by Mr. Newman, of the Ideal Financing Association, as chairman, was appointed, to determine a more favorable place during the hot weather. After considerable discussion a committee was appointed, headed by Mr. Blandford, of the Superior Finance Service, to arrange for a Lenders' Exchange in the City of Boston.

The Brockton, Worcester and Springfield offices of the Ideal Financing Association and the Taunton and Lawrence offices of the N. E. Equity Corporation were elected members of the Association.

The resignation of Vice-chairman J. R. Watson was accepted, and Mr. Alexander Youngerman was elected to fill this office. C. C. Rock, Secretary.

THE MASSACHUSETTS SMALL LOANS LAW

(A radio talk by Earl E. Davidson, Supervisor of Loan Agencies of Massachusetts, given under the auspices of the Boston Better Business Commission.)

There are perhaps but few people residing in this commonwealth who realize what has been done to protect the borrower of small sums of money—the person who has no regular banking facilities—from exorbitant charges and rates of interest on loans of $300 or less. There was a time when the loan shark flourished in this state as elsewhere; but in 1911 the Massachusetts Small Loans Law was passed by the legislature. This law was amended several times in the interest of the small-loan borrower until 1916 when there was a considerable revision of the law. At that time Mr. Arthur H. Ham, Director of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, an endowed philanthropy of New York City, was undertaking a thorough study and investigation of the small loans business and the rates of interest charged throughout the United States. Because of the testimony of Mr. Ham and other sponsors of the bill before the Massachusetts Legislature, it was then decided to fix the rate of interest at 3% a month on loans of $300 or less. Six months after the amendment of the Massachusetts Law in 1916, the Russell Sage Foundation decided that 3½% a month was a more scientific charge and so placed this rate in the Uniform Small Loans Law which has been adopted and is now in operation in many of the states.

The Massachusetts Law requires that no one shall engage in the business of making loans of $300 or less if the amount to be paid for interest and expenses exceeds 12% per annum, without first obtaining a license from the Bureau of Loan Agencies. There is a severe penalty for violation of this law. The license fee is $100 a year. The licensed lender is required to file a bond of $5,000 with the State Treasurer for the faithful performance of his duties and obligations pertaining to the business. The lender is also required to file with the State Supervisor weekly reports of all loans made of $300 or less, of all similar loans discharged, also a monthly and an annual report of his business. The supervisor's office is always ready to give information and listen to complaints of borrowers without expense to them and has been very helpful to those who have been in financial difficulties or have not clearly understood the contract which they have made when negotiating small loans. For instance, there was the case of the employee of a certain railroad who complained that one of the brakemen was making loans of $10 a week as a friendly act to fellow employees at a charge of $1 a week for each loan. Little did the unsuspecting borrower realize that although he only had the loan for a few weeks it was at the rate of 10% a week or 520% a year. Of course, this practice was stopped by the supervisor at once. Similar cases of exorbitant charges reach the ear of the supervisor occasionally but most borrowers now realize that if they deal with a licensed money lender he will resort to no such practice and that the borrower will be well protected by the State Supervisor.

There is, of course, much need in the legitimate field for the licensed lender. Sudden sickness, death, the necessity of meeting store bills for furniture, clothing, repairs of property, house painting, coal bills, or buying the now quite essential small automobile, either for the use of the family or for business, are some of the reasons why people negotiate small loans which may be paid back in installment repayments to suit the borrower's convenience as to time and amount. The loan business operated in accordance with the law and the rules and regulations of the supervisor, is a legitimate business and as such is conducted on a much higher plane than formerly. It is the endeavor of the majority of the licensed lenders, because they are operating under state supervision, to constantly try to better the personnel of the loan agencies engaged in the business. There are today nearly 100 lenders licensed in this state and operating under supervision.

There is a State Association of the licensed lenders affiliated with a National Association which meets annually, discusses the various phases of the business and has, on various occasions, invited the supervisors from the several states, and officials of the Russell Sage Foundation, Division of Remedial Loans, to their meetings in order to obtain constructive criticism of their business and methods. This article from their By-laws indicates their purposes:

> "The objects of this Association shall be to improve the small loan business; to advocate legislation, having the approval of this Association, uniform in character and providing for State License and Bond, and supervision and examination by state officials; to assist in education of the public to the service rendered by our members; to obey the uniform loan laws ourselves and police the business; to regulate public advertisements and circulars so that they shall be truthful and straightforward; to establish uniformity in forms, books and accounts, satisfactory to the licensing officials; to maintain good relations with all state officials and their examiners; to assist and coöperate with all members of this Association and affiliated state associations in respect to accurate credit information, and assist in the collection of accounts, dealing with them always in a spirit of fraternity and helpfulness; to provide occasions for pleasant intercourse between members."

Perhaps you may be interested to hear just how loans are made by the licensed lenders. Let us take a loan of $100 for instance, as an arbitrary amount. There is one method of conducting the business by which, after the application of the borrower has been passed upon favorably, a contract is made by which the borrower receives $100, signs a note for that amount, and agrees to repay the loan in 10 monthly installments of $10 each. He is charged 3% on $100 for the first month, or $3; 3% on $90 for the second month, or $2.70, etc., until the loan has been discharged. In other words, he pays interest only upon his unpaid monthly balance of principal. He may repay weekly if he wishes, but interest is still charged on monthly balances. This is the method of loaning for which the Small Loans Law was framed. Later another method of loaning, employed by certain licensees, was brought under state supervision. By this plan, after the application is accepted, an investigation fee, usually 2%, is charged. The loan is discounted at 6%, so while the borrower signs a note for $100, he actually receives but $92 and contracts to repay $2 weekly for 50 weeks. Now this latter method means that the borrower actually has the use of but $92 for one week; $90 for two weeks; $88 for three weeks, etc., and therefore the actual expense to the borrower under this method is 19.3% per annum. If borrowers are delinquent in their weekly payments there is a system of fining, by which loans have been known to reach or even exceed the legal maximum. Such cases have to be adjusted in accordance with the supervisor's directions.

During the past license year over 147,000 loans of $300 or less were made by licensed lenders, in this state, amounting to $14,288,000. These are all reported to, and filed in, the Bureau of Loan Agencies, which has a working force of three besides the supervisor and is self-supporting in that the sum taken in for license fees exceeds the total expense of the Bureau, including salaries.

The Massachusetts Law has been in existence for 15 years, and in this time the "loan shark" has almost disappeared and moral usury has been practically eliminated. It could be entirely eliminated if all borrowers of small loans in the commonwealth would avail themselves of the protection afforded them by the Statutes and the Bureau of Loan Agencies, Room 74D, State House, where all complaints are courteously heard in private and considered confidential. Assistance is given promptly in all cases where there are improper practices or unlawful charges. It is only by complete coöperation between borrower and supervisor that the evils of the business can be entirely eliminated. The licensed lenders have, for the most part, shown a splendid spirit of coöperation under state supervision.

CLEVELAND HOST CITY TO A. I. L. A.

A Center of Recreation

By Convention Board,
Cleveland Chamber of Commerce

May one have a good time there? This question invariably suggests itself to those anticipating a visit to another city. They are, of course, interested in the business that takes them there—if it is not merely a pleasure jaunt—and they may want to see some of the city's industries or learn something of its civic history or its form of government, but above all else they must know what that city affords in the way of amusement.

In this respect those who plan to visit Cleveland during the twelfth annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association need have no misgivings, for Cleveland fairly sparkles with recreational facilities.

Summer or winter, rain or shine, there is always some place to go, something to do, something to see in Cleveland. In fact, few cities equal Cleveland in the diversity of its amusements, and none excel in the character of recreation afforded.

Theatres and Dancing

Cleveland's theatres, for example, present the highest class performances to be found anywhere in the world. Whether it be legitimate plays, vaudeville, musical comedies or moving pictures, Cleveland show houses present the "cream" of the theatrical talent of the nation.

The theatres themselves represent an attraction of note to the visitor. Nowhere are there more spacious, luxurious foyers, than are to be found in the magnificent show houses in "Playhouse Square," a recent development in theatre building in the heart of Cleveland's shopping district.

Here are theatres having an aggregate seating capacity of more than 12,000. One of these, a theatre occupying the lower floors of a new twenty-one-story building, is declared to be the "finest in the world." In its lobby are art treasures valued at thousands of dollars, which in themselves represent an unusual attraction.

Within a stone's throw of "Playhouse Square," and scattered throughout the downtown district, are many high-class cafés which offer entertainment and dancing. In all of the larger hotels are splendid dance floors. Cleveland also boasts of having two of the largest and most elaborate public ball rooms in the world. Dancing is a form of recreation that has no ending here.

There are always interesting places to go to be entertained in this middlewestern metropolis. In summer it may be a baseball game, as Cleveland is represented in the American League; or it may be a jaunt through Euclid Beach Park or Luna Park, Cleveland's largest amusement resorts; it may be a boat excursion, or again it may be a day's outing at one of the many pleasure resorts that dot the shore of Lake Erie for miles east or west of Cleveland.

In the fall and winter Cleveland's recreation program is replete with football, basketball, both indoor and outdoor ice events, amateur boxing bouts and other amusements. In football it provides a great variety with three college teams, many high school elevens and a world's champion professional team. It also boasts of professional world's championship basketball and ice hockey games.

Beautiful Parks

A motor trip through the parks always proves a delight to visitors. Extending like a girdle around the greater part of the city, the park and boulevard system is unrivalled by any city in the United States in its picturesque natural scenery. Deep ravines, waterfalls, fine old forests, sandy stretches of beach and huge rock formations of Lake Erie's shoreline, all combine to give these pleasure grounds rare charm.

Twenty parks, with more than 40 miles of well paved driveways and boulevards, comprising 2,420 acres, make up this great system. It contains 14 children's playgrounds, 50 baseball diamonds, 63 tennis courts, 14 skating ponds, 15 football fields and a sporty 27-hole municipal golf course.

In addition to this splendid park area, Cleveland and its surrounding territory embraces what is known as the Metropolitan Park District. This system, now under development, combines into one continuous outer encircling parkway the more important valleys and glens in Cuyahoga County and parts of the neighboring counties. The original project was a parkway approximately 70 miles in length, with an estimated area of 7,500 to 10,000 acres. The project now proposed embraces between 15,000 and 20,000 acres of parks and parkways.

Were one to soar over this vast parkway in an airplane during the summer season he would see thousands frolicking in the cool waters of Lake Erie at Cleveland's public bathing beaches; he would see laid out in many directions some of the finest private golf courses and country clubs in America; he would see tennis, croquet and horseshoe courts and baseball diamonds teeming with activity; on every hand he would find evidence of a sport loving community.

Strong in Organized Sports

Perhaps nothing reflects the scope of Cleveland's recreation facilities more than its record in the promotion of amateur sports, which is second to none in America. It was the birthplace of the amateur baseball idea, as well as the National Baseball Federation, an organization having a membership of thirty cities, conducting annual inter-city championship series. A total of 677 teams are represented in the association.

More than 30,000 registered athletes participated in organized sports in Cleveland in one year, of which 10,000 were baseball players, taking part in 2,809 games. Industrial plants alone contributed sixty teams, while the church league supplied thirty more.

Cleveland is a great basketball center. Leagues operating under the Cleveland Basketball Commission have a total membership of 853 teams. From this number about 120 teams are selected to play in the city-wide tournament held each year.

Other features of the city's organized sports include outdoor and indoor skating events, ice hockey championship events, ice baseball, outdoor swimming meets at bathing beaches and indoor events in nine city pools, a year-around soccer program and weekly gridiron battles in six amateur football leagues.

Yes, one may have a good time in Cleveland.

OHIO

The annual meeting of the Ohio Association will be held at Cleveland, Ohio, September 14th. This was decided upon at the last meeting of the Executive Board of the Ohio Association with the thought in mind that an annual meeting of the Ohio Association this year to be held as usual separately and distinctly from the National meeting would serve to detract from the attendance of the Ohio members at the National Convention.

Many of the Ohio licensees have never had the privilege of attending a National Convention, and thus by holding our convention this year the day previous to the opening of the National Convention will permit the Ohio members on one outlay of railroad fare to attend both meetings, and moreover we will be able to line up the Ohio boys for the various and sundry duties in connection with the proper reception of the delegates to the National Convention, and we think the plan is a very happy one.

INDIANA

The Eleventh Annual Convention of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association was called to order at two-thirty in the Club Room, Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, Indiana, May 19, President W. G. Chandler presiding.

After a few preliminary remarks, President Chandler called upon Secretary Hartz for the Reading of Minutes of the previous meeting. Upon motion, duly seconded, this reading was dispensed with; but Secretary Hartz read the minutes of the Executive Committee meeting held in January.

It was voted, upon motion by Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Stratton, that the report of the Executive Committee as read and supplemented by Mr. Hartz be accepted and spread upon the minutes.

The following committees were then appointed by President Chandler; Auditing Committee: Mr. Swank, Mr. Stokes and Mr. Cliff. Nominating Committee: J. H. Aufderheide, H. E. Arnett and C. E. Dunell.

It was voted, on motion by Mr. Broughman, seconded by Mr. Stratton, that the election of officers be advanced from the last order of business to Thursday morning, with the understanding that the retiring president preside until the close of the session.

At this time Vice-President Thompson took the chair, and President Chandler presented his report for the past year. It was voted, upon motion by Mr. Broughman, duly seconded, that the report of the president be accepted and placed on record.

Treasurer Hancock read his report, which, upon motion by Doctor Mueller, duly seconded, was referred to the Auditing Committee.

Secretary Hartz presented his report. Dr. Mueller moved that it be accepted and an expression of thanks be accorded the Secretary for his able conduct of the office. The motion was seconded by Mr. Stratton and carried.

The report of the Law Committee was called for, but Mr. Kaufman stated that he had no report to offer.

The report of the Membership Committee, presented by Mr. Burrell, supplemented by Secretary Hartz, showed that the present membership is 114, a net gain over last year of 21 members. It was voted, on motion by Mr. Hancock, seconded by Mr. Broughman, that the report be approved, and the bill allowed.

Mr. Thompson reported for the Survey Committee, and Mr. Henry of Henry & McClane, who compiled the Survey, gave a very extensive report, citing some examples and recommending that the members use the Survey, that the benefits to be derived from it would be in proportion to the amount of use and study given to it.

Mr. Hartz read various letters received from outside of the state in regard to the survey.

Mr. Howe S. Landers addressed the meeting on the subject of Fidelity Bonds, and spoke in part as follows:

"I have come to the conclusion that fidelity bonds are a good thing. Insurance, as the President of the Company I represent expresses it, is the application of prudence and forethought to the uncertainties of life .... You men are dealing with a peculiarly tempting commodity—namely, money. I think that you should apply prudence and forethought of a fidelity bond covering all of your employes .... The majority of losses under fidelity bonds come from a source that you least expect. The majority of losses under fidelity bonds come from a source, from individual employes, who have stood up best under a preliminary examination made at the time you bond them or at the time that you employ them. In other words, your losses oftentimes come from employes who are most trusted.

"You are dealing with the most uncertain quantity that is known to any of us, namely, human nature. There is no telling when temptation will present itself in a form so attractive, or so urgent because of the lash of necessity that hitherto honest and upright people yield to temptation, and having once made a false step, there is scarcely in any case any retracting of it ....

"Bonding companies are like any other well-run private institution. They attempt to operate their business at a profit ..... The most that surety companies have ever made on underwriting over a period of ten years has been ten per cent ..... Insurance companies strive to be fair. It is impossible to forecast with accuracy fidelity losses in the same way in which life companies can work out mortality tables. People die with a certain regularity. People steal or take money that does not belong to them with spasmodic irregularity and uncertainty. So the bonding and surety companies have striven to reach a fair average as to rates that would net them a hope, not a certainty, of a small underwriting profit."

Mr. Landers cited specific cases of losses.

Mr. Wilcoxen brought up the question of the wife signing a disclaimer when a contract was being signed. Mr. Thompson said that was usually used when there were two families living in the same house

Dr. Mueller thought there should be an expression of appreciation to the Survey Committee, to Mr. Henry and his associates for their very efficient work, and that the Committee should be kept standing so as to pursue this subject from time to time. He said he would like to see the history that is brought up to December 15 continued, and in order to insure a finer degree of accuracy, that the manuscript be submitted to Mr. Henry for his revision before it goes out to the membership.

Dr. Mueller moved that the Survey Committee be continued, that they continue to function and submit their bills here for approval. Mr. Stratton spoke in agreement of Dr. Mueller's remarks and seconded the motion, which was carried.

Mr. Blumberg presented the report of the Publicity Committee. Motion was made by Dr. Mueller to accept Mr. Blumberg's report with grateful appreciation and that he be continued in office. The motion was seconded by Mr Stratton and carried.

It was voted, on motion by Mr. Broughman, seconded by Dr. Mueller, that the proposed amendment in the matter of dues be read and held over for discussion and action tomorrow. The amendment was read.

The meeting adjourned at five o'clock.

At six-thirty a banquet was held in the Chateau Room. The invocation was given by Rev. J. Ambrose Dunkle. An interesting and entertaining program was furnished by the Paramount Parisians and the Paramount Popular Four. Following the entertainment, Mr. Francis L. Thompson, the Toastmaster, introduced Mr. Harry McClain, who gave a humorous talk which was very much enjoyed.

Mr. Thompson then introduced Mr. Evans Woollen, President of the Fletcher Savings and Trust Company, who spoke as follows on the Federal Reserve Banking System:

MR. EVANS WOOLLEN: Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen: I wish before coming to the subject, to say one or two things which have come to me since I have come to the table. The first is this: I wish to take advantage of the first occasion to express my pride in the fact that it was in my state and pursuant to the activity of some of my friends that your business was started on the way toward legalization and standardization, started on the way to the excellent position of dignity which it now holds.

The second thing which I have in mind to say has come to me as I have observed the number of younger men here, and this is said out of a perhaps not inconsiderable experience in the lending of money. The thing that we are all after in this world, (at least should be after) is enduring satisfaction. We make for ourselves different definitions of what enduring satisfactions are.

Now, I am quite sure that there isn't any business more devoid of enduring satisfaction than the lending of money with an eye single to security and profit. On the other hand, I don't know of any business richer in enduring satisfaction than the lending of money securely and profitably but with an eye open to the usefulness of that money after it has been lent.

It is well for us who are in the business of lending money to remind ourselves now and again that the economic justification for our business is found in the taking of money that is not being usefully occupied and putting it to usefulness and accordingly I suggest to the younger men that along with the questions which occur as to security and profit, they put to themselves questions as to the usefulness which is to be found for the money they lend, that they give to themselves the satisfaction of seeking to follow the money which they lent into the usefulness to which it will be put by those who borrow it.

Now, it does seem too bad indeed to impose upon the unwilling ears of a group of ladies the unentertaining subject that I have in mind. I think had I apprehended that the audience was to be of this character, I should have suggested to Mr. Thompson the assignment of some subject less forbidding.

The Federal Reserve System is particularly on the minds of those who are interested in it, who have apprehension of its importance to our economic and financial life, especially at this time, because of certain pending legislation. There is now in conference in the Congress a bill known as the MacFadden Bill, a bill drafted by Mr. MacFadden, the Chairman of the House Committee on Currency and Banking, drafted for the purpose of bringing, if possible, settlement of certain controversies that have prevailed for several years. The bill passed the House perhaps six weeks ago, passed the Senate a few days ago, and has now gone as I have said, into conference. We shall await the coming out of that bill with interest in two particulars. In the first place, the bill when enacted will settle the distressingly mooted question of branch banking.

In the second place, and more importantly, it will settle or leave in condition of disturbing uncertainty the continuance of the Federal Reserve System.

A word or two may be of some interest as to the branch banking controversy. Bankers have been quite sharply divided in their judgment as to the expediency of the introduction into this country of branch banking. There are perhaps three groups of opinion: Those who hold—and they are much in the majority—that branch banking of any kind had better not be introduced into American banking. Secondly, there are those who hold that branch banking within the corporate limits of the city or town in which the main institution is established is expedient. And thirdly, those who hold the view that branch banking without geographical limitation is desirable.

Now, the MacFadden Bill, as it went to conference from the Senate, provided that national banks which heretofore have not had the right to operate branches may operate them within the corporate limits of the parent institution in those states where branch banking is permitted by state laws. The bill as it came from the House to the Senate provided that branch banking might be had within corporate limits, but only in those states where the laws now permit branch banking, forbidding the right of branch banking to national banks and state member banks of the Reserve System, even though the state laws may subsequently permit it.

Now, as to the second matter, the more important one, it is perhaps not generally in the minds of those who are interested in business and banking that the charters of the Federal Reserve Banks will expire presently in January of 1934. A year ago last spring Secretary Mellon called attention to the fact that as we approach the expiration of the present charters, there will be increasing uncertainty and disturbance of business if the charters have not been renewed. The discussion which followed the publication of that article has revealed that there are perhaps three groups of opinion on this subject.

First, those who hold that the Federal Reserve charter should not be renewed at all; secondly, those who hold that they should be renewed, but only after the amendment of the Reserve Act in certain important particulars; and third, those who hold that the charter should be renewed without awaiting amendment of the Act.

Now, a word or two as to the opinions of those who hold that the charters should not be renewed at all: There is more substantial opposition to the Federal Reserve System in this country than perhaps most of you apprehend. I heard the opinion expressed some months ago in a group of men who were discussing the subject, that it was doubtful whether the system could be continued by renewal of charters. I can't think that the opposing sentiment is as strong as that, but it is quite substantial. It arises from two sources: In the first place, there is a body of people holding the opinion that the administration of the Federal Reserve Act has been unfair to agricultural interests. The view is that agricultural paper has not been rediscounted in fair proportion. There is not, I think, justice in that criticism. The fact is that at the time of the crisis in 1920 and 1921, there was more agricultural and livestock paper under rediscount than there was of commercial paper proportionately.

The second source of hostility to the system arises from the view that the administration of the system brought on the deflation which meant disaster for so many people in 1920 and 1921. Neither is this claim warranted by the facts, as I view it. Without going into the reasons for thinking that that claim is not warranted, I wish to bring before you briefly a sketch of the Federal Reserve System with a view to inducing higher appreciation of the System, fuller understanding perhaps than that which you have in mind, of its usefulness in this country.

Now, as a background for such birdseye view, I ask you to go back in your memories, those of you who can go back that far, to the panic of 1907. I go back to that point because it was out of the sentiment which developed during and after that panic that the opinion became dominant that expressed itself in the Federal Reserve Act. Prior to 1907, there was an era of expanding business, and an era of expanding business is apt to mean, as in this instance it did mean, expanding loans and decreasing reserves. In such an era there comes a time when the expansion of loans must stop either by reason of the limitation of law or by reason of the limitation of prudence. When that time comes, when that came in 1907, banks became concerned primarily out of considerations of self-preservation, in the building up of their reserves.

In 1907 they sought to do this in two ways: first, banks declined to pay out currency. You all recall vividly, I am sure, how they declined to pay out currency. They sought to gather in currency from their customers, and their correspondents. Secondly, banks undertook to build up indirectly their reserve by the collection of maturing loans and the refusal to make new loans. There, then, in 1907, the banks of this country failed in the discharge of their two primary functions. They failed in the discharge of the function of furnishing money to the people at a time, the autumn, when they most needed money for the harvesting of their crops. Second, the banks failed in their function of furnishing credit to the people at a time when credit was most needed by the avoidance of disasters of precipitate liquidation.

Now, the Federal Reserve System was instituted for the purpose of preventing failure in this country in those two regards thenceforward. Any system that might have been devised for the accomplishment of those two purposes must needs first have consolidated bank reserves. The condition in this connection prior to the institution of the Reserve system has been likened, and I think quite aptly, to a community dependent for its fire protection upon water held by a bucketful by each householder. Our condition since the System went into effect is that of a community whose water for fire protection has been consolidated in a reservoir from which it is available for distribution to the endangered point.

This consolidation, as most of the men know, perhaps all of them, has been attained by the requirement that bank reserves of the member banks shall all be held by the member banks, of which there are twelve, instead of being held in the vaults of the city banks as before the System was instituted.

Now, the liquidity which has been attained by this consolidation is beyond comprehension by those who are not fully advised. Something like half a billion dollars daily is shifted in bank reserves by wire in this country now. The consequence of this liquidity is that there has been possible a very substantial reduction in the amount of money that has to be held in reserve, something like twenty-two per cent now being held as against thirty-six per cent of deposit liabilities before the System went into effect.

Well, then, the bank reserves having been consolidated, the System addressed itself to provision against failure in the discharge of these two functions: first, the matter of supply of money; and secondly, the supply of credit. Now, we never had in this country prior to the institution of the Federal Reserve System a sound currency system. We had currency that was safe enough. National bank notes were utterly safe, but they did not constitute a sound currency because they were irresponsive to the requirements of business.

In 1907, for instance, we found that there was no way of increasing adequately the currency then needed for a panic-stricken country. The currency now, federal reserve notes, are responsive. In the first place, they are just as safe; are protected by forty per cent of gold and a hundred per cent of available approved collateral, just as safe as the national bank notes and additionally are responsive in this way: a bank here wanting currency to meet the requirements of its business sends to the reserve bank in Chicago. In sending it draws against its accounts in the Federal Reserve bank or sends its bills up there to be rediscounted.

In response to the requirement of the Indianapolis bank, Federal Reserve notes are shipped here, are passed out by the bank into circulation, they find their way after a few days of circulation back into one of the local banks; some of the paper goes about the country. After a time that currency finds itself in the hands of one of the Federal Reserve banks, and thereupon it must be retired. Accordingly we have this endless process of issue, circulation, retirement. There cannot be, so long as there are sound assets in the bank, too little currency for the use of the country, neither can there be at any time too much currency.

Now, as to the other function, that of furnishing credit: that is achieved in this way: any member bank having sound assets, sound paper, promissory notes, may send them to its Federal Reserve Bank and the Federal Reserve Bank in return will either credit that bank on its books or send to it the currency as I said a moment ago. That process of rediscounting, as it is called, may go on, will go on just as long as there are sound assets in the member banks. Before the institution of the System, banks in the country, banks here, were dependent for their rediscounting facilities upon willingness and the ability of correspondent banks to rediscount. They are no longer so dependent, but may rely, as business may rely, upon this endless process of rediscounting.

Now, this all has resulted in a stabilization of business in this country which I think perhaps we do not fully apprehend. This stabilization is supplemented by two processes of which we do not hear much, but which go on all the while. First, this is the process of control by the Federal Reserve System of the rediscount rate. It simply means that the Federal Reserve banks with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, may, finding that business is sluggish, lower the rediscount rates with a stimulating effect. Contrarywise, finding that business shows a runaway tendency, the discount rate may be put up and as it were, a brake applied.

The other stabilizing process is that known as open market operations. Open market operations are the dealing by the reserve banks in two kinds of securities, bankers' acceptances and government obligations. The law provides that the reserve banks may hold these two kinds of obligations, may buy and sell and hold them. Primarily they buy these two kinds of obligations or securities for the purpose of supplementing their earnings, but secondarily and more importantly, for our purpose at present, these open market operations are carried on for the purpose of stabilizing business, stabilizing the money market and it is done in this way:

If it is believed by the Federal Reserve authorities that business is in need of more money than is at the time available for it, they buy in the open market, quantities of government securities and bankers' acceptances, and by the amount of the payment by the reserve banks for these securities, they enlarge the amount of money available for the transaction of business. As the expression is, they ease the market. Contrarywise, if they sell in the market securities, they tighten the market, reducing by the amount of the payment to the reserve banks the amount of money available for business.

Now, it is with regard to these open market operations that much controversy has arisen during the last year and those who hold that the Reserve System should not be rechartered until after the Act has been amended, having in mind these operations, it is claimed that the power which is thus placed in the Reserve System is too great a power to be placed in any group of officials, and the complaint is made more particularly that during the last eighteen months we have in consequence of the exercise of this power, had altogether too much money in this country, resulting in speculation which has gone on for some eighteen months in the stock exchange, culminating in the collapse of six weeks ago.

Now, I will not take your time, and weary the ladies further by a discussion of the merits of this controversy. My only opinion, I give myself the satisfaction of saying there has not been abuse of the power and that the power ought not to be lessened.

Recurring to the amount of stabilization that has been accomplished as a result of the institution and operation of the Federal Reserve System. Doubtless all of you have it in mind that business in this country as in fact in every other country doesn't go on a level; it goes by ups and downs. February is the poorest month of the year; business is always down in February. Then comes the activity in the spring induced by building operation and planting of the crops, increasing activities, along a plateau during the summer, and then up during the autumn, with the seasonable improvement in wholesale and retail trade. A line showing a typical business year will go down from January into February, up along a level in the spring, down toward the first of June and up in the autumn, and so on the rest of the year. Those lines may maintain a singular regularity of direction.

Before the System was instituted the line showing interest rates in this country followed almost exactly the lines showing the seasonal movement of business. Rates went down in February, up in the spring and farther up in the autumn. I do not need to expand the thought as to the unfavorableness of such a condition upon business. A typical line now showing the movement of interest rates runs almost on a horizontal. All of the ups and all of the downs have been taken out of a line which represents the movement of interest rates in this country.

Likewise a very interesting result has come about geographically as well as chronologically, with reference to the interest rate. It used to be that there was a very substantial difference between the so-called counter rate in Chicago and the so-called counter rate in New York, a difference all the way from one to three per cent. A line showing the Chicago rate would reveal very considerable space between the two. Those lines have been brought together so that they cross each other. They run along practically together. Money is substantially as cheap in Chicago, commercial money, I mean, as it is in New York.

Now, this achievement of stabilization in money supply as evidenced by money rates, I don't need to emphasize, is of tremendous importance. I think in view of what I have tried very sketchily to indicate as to the paramount importance to the stability and well-being of our business of the Federal Reserve System, we may look forward during the ensuing weeks with interest, if not with anxiety, to the outcome of the provision which is in the Senate Bill for the rechartering of the System. If we approach the expiration of the charters with question of increasing frequency as to whether those charters are going to be renewed at all, as to whether the System is to continue, the effect upon business and upon the well-being of the country, must vary tremendously. So I think it is worth while perhaps to have arrested your attention for these few minutes to these subjects, to the end if we do not get rechartering legislation at this session of Congress, you may be helpful as each of us in his own way can be helpful towards the development of a public sentiment which will insist to Congress that the rechartering of those banks shall not be delayed beyond the next session of Congress.

With renewed apology to the ladies for this stupidly dull talk, I thank you indeed for your attention. (Applause).

THURSDAY MORNING

May 20, 1926

The meeting was called to order at nine-forty, President Chandler presiding.

The first order of business was an address on "Respect and How Obtained" by Mr. L. L. Bishop, of Indianapolis.

Secretary Hartz read a telegram from Claud M. Ryder, of Dallas.

Mr. C H. Wilcoxen gave an address on "What is the Effect of Installment Buying on Our Business?" Mr. Farrington spoke of this matter for a few moments, pointing out the various things that are purchased on installments, and that often the expenditures exceed the man's income; pointing out further the inability to pay any loan.

It was voted, on motion by Mr. Hartz, duly seconded, that a vote of thanks be extended to Mr. Wilcoxen for the time he devoted to the subject.

Mr. Paul Hancock read his paper on "Personal Inventory."

Mr. John D. Williams, of Philadelphia, read a paper on "What Cycle Does the Business Barometer Show."

Mr. Swank read the report of the Auditing Committee. Mr. Swank asked for an explanation of a $25 item for attorney's fees. Secretary Hartz and Mr. Broughman explained the matter to the satisfaction of the members present, and upon motion by Mr. Swank, seconded by Mr. Young, it was voted to approve the report of the Auditing Committee and the report of the Treasurer.

The next order of business was the Election of Officers. The Nominating Committee brought forth a slate containing the names of the present officers to succeed themselves, as follows: President, W. G. Chandler; First Vice President, John McGregor; Second Vice President, F. L. Thompson; Treasurer, W. R. Hancock; Secretary, R. F. Hartz. Delegates to the National Convention, Mr. Swank and Mrs. Chenoweth. Alternate for Mr. Swank, Mr. Zirkle, of Newcastle; Alternate for Mr. Chenoweth, Mr. Lytle, of Marion.

It was voted on motion by Mr. Parker, of Logansport, seconded by Mr. Reynolds, that the report of the Nominating Committee be accepted and the names mentioned be elected to the various offices for the ensuing year. Unanimously carried.

Mr. Chandler resigned the office of President, which meant that Mr. Thompson automatically became President. He then resigned the office of Second Vice President, and upon motion by Mr. Arnett, duly seconded, Mr. Chandler was elected to the office of Second Vice President.

Chairman McGregor: I believe it would be in order that further nominations be heard. If that is in order, we are ready to hear other nominations.

Mr. Chandler declined the nomination and placed in nomination Mr. F. L. Thompson, of Shelbyville. Seconded by Mr. Aufderheide, Jr.

Mr. Parker pointed out that his motion had been seconded and would have to be acted upon before anything else could be taken up. Motion unanimously carried.

Then Mr. Chandler again nominated Mr. Thompson, but was called out of order.

Mr. Parker said if Mr. Chandler wished to resign he would make a motion that his resignation be accepted. Seconded by Dr. Mueller. Carried.

A. C. Mitchell, of Indianapolis, nominated Francis Thompson, of Indianapolis and Shelbyville, for President. Seconded by Dr. Mueller.

Mr. Parker asked to withdraw the motion to accept the resignation of Mr. Chandler. Dr. Mueller consented to withdraw.

The Chairman declared that the election of officers was in order, that the officers had been elected and one had tendered his resignation.

Mr. Mitchell renewed his motion to nominate Mr. Thompson.

The Chairman asked for further nominations.

Dr. Mueller moved that the nominations be closed. Seconded by Paul Hancock and carried.

Chairman McGregor: All in favor of Francis L. Thompson being elected President of the Association for the ensuing year, say "aye." (Unanimously carried).

Mr. Arnett pointed out that the election of Mr. Thompson to the Presidency left the office of Second Vice President vacant, and nominated Mr. Chandler as Second Vice President. Seconded.

Mr. Thompson said to clarify the situation he would resign the office of Second Vice President. Dr. Mueller moved to accept the resignation of Mr. Thompson. The motion was seconded and carried.

Mr. Arnett nominated Mr. Chandler as Second Vice President. The motion was seconded and carried.

President Chandler then called upon Mr. Elmer Johnson of the Industrial Loan Department for a few remarks. Mr. Johnson spoke in part as follows:

Mr. Elmer Johnson, Supervisor Industrial Loan Department: One of the big orders of the day now in which we are living is cooperation, and I want you to know in the beginning that I feel that all through the five years that I have been with you we have had that cooperation from you members of the Association. We see cooperation carried on in every avenue of life, and we find out that the old ideas of competition and plugging against each other have passed away and that the successful men nowadays in legal and medical professions and in the industrial world are men who try to get together instead of the men who try to stay apart .....

I think we are one of the foremost states in the Union organized along the industrial loan business. I do not believe from my conversation with men in different states that there is a state organization that outdoes the organization that we have here in Indiana, and yet we have one of the lamest states as far as supervision is concerned.

There are two reasons for supervision. One is that the business shall be patrolled, that the man who violates the law and the man who does not violate the law shall be put upon the same parity as they are now without regularly ordered and licensed supervision .....

My idea would be that your Legislative Committee, Mr. Bower and myself, go before the Governor, get a specific appropriation, ten or twelve thousand dollars, and let's put on, say, two examiners in the State of Indiana, and I think your business then will be more in keeping with other states .....

Our trouble is not so much with the loan business as it is with the few nefarious pawnbrokers. I have most of my difficulties with men who loan two or three dollars and charge more interest than they should .....

I think you are going to be confronted more and more in Indiana with the credit union situation. That was a measure that we fought in the Department, and believed that it was unnecessary; it didn't afford the proper protection to the borrower, and the man who loaned was favored on interest rates in one way, but on the other hand, he might be doing that at the expense of the borrower. I have made some investigation of credit unions, and I find that they are going to grow; there are applications at every charter board meeting; they are getting in all the cities, and I believe you are going to have competition there as long as these credit unions are able to carry on a deposit and loan business, until they begin to fail as they have failed in New York State, in Massachusetts, and in North Carolina. I don't think we have reached the place in Indiana yet where they have begun to fail .....

It seems to me like there ought to be some uniformity among the different states as to their regulation and control of the business. There ought to be some uniformity in their methods of examination ..... (Applause).

Dr. Mueller discussed the matter and said, ".... Unless you get together and make a reformation by contacting the man in the business, your neighbor, and showing him the way, that you believe to be the standard of ethics set up by this institution, you are going to find the hand of the law is going to reach out and curb the practices ..... Gentlemen, I am happy when I see this group assembled together in sober and serious deliberation for the purpose of bettering their business, taking out what was formerly a semi-philanthropic and excessive greed, and finding happy compromise in a new financial structural agency called industrial banking." (Applause).

The resolution to change the dues was then brought up for action. Secretary Hartz gave the reasons for bringing this matter up, and read opinions submitted by various members, including Mr. Blumberg, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Hancock, Mr. Wilcoxen; and also various letters from Mr. Kehr.

After considerable discussion by Mr. Bowman, Mr. Teel, Doctor Mueller and Mr. Aufderheide, Sr., it was voted on motion by Mr. Arnett, duly seconded, that the resolution be amended to strike out "with a minimum of $25."

Mr. Aufderheide, Sr., moved to amend the resolution by making it read a proportion of sixty-forty instead of fifty-fifty. After further discussion by Dr. Mueller, Mr. Young, Mr. Hancock, Mr. Stratton and Mr. Hartz, Mr. Aufderheide withdrew his motion to amend, and the resolution as amended by Mr. Arnett, to strike out the $25 minimum, was unanimously carried.

The meeting adjourned at twelve-thirty.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON

May 20, 1926

The meeting convened at two o'clock, President Chandler presiding.

The first order of business was the discussion of the question, "Shall We Go After the American Association Convention for 1927?"

Mr. Henry Davis, the Manager of the Convention Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce, said that the Bureau would give the State Association full cooperation and bear a large part of the burden of getting the Convention here in 1927.

It was unanimously voted, on motion by Mr. Arnett, seconded by Mr. Aufderheide, that an effort be made to bring the 1927 Convention of the American Association to Indianapolis.

It was unanimously voted, on motion by Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Stratton, that a committee or five be appointed to cooperate with the Chamber of Commerce in bringing the 1927 convention to Indianapolis, this Committee to be appointed by the incoming President, Mr. Thompson.

A vote of thanks was given Mr. Davis.

Next was a general discussion of the topics set forth on the program. The first, "The Man You Do Business With," was very well handled by Mr. Thompson.

The subject of "Selfishness Between Competitors" proved to be quite an interesting one and was fully discussed by the following men: Mr. Young, of Philadelphia; Mr. Cliff, Mr. Chenoweth, Mr. Baum, of Ft. Wayne; Mr. Davies, Kokomo, and Mr. Wilcoxen.

"Experience With Automobile Loans" was discussed by Mr. Bishop, who said that automobiles are a primary necessity in the everyday affairs of life and should be used as security.

Secretary Hartz said he had been making automobile loans for the last five years and had had no loss from an automobile loan.

Mr. Burrell said he would rather make automobile loans than a loan on furniture.

Mr. Arnett thinks if you make automobile loans the way they should be made, it is a good business.

Mr. Reynolds has just started in that phase of the work but thinks it should be good.

The next subject, "Accepting Interest Only and Effect," was also an interesting one, and was discussed at length by the following: Mr. Davies, Kokomo; Mr. Arnett; Mr. W. R. Hancock; Mr. Hartz; Mr. Young; Mr. Cliff; Mr. Aufderheide, Jr.; Mr. Stratton; Mr. Chandler and Mr. Blumberg. The general opinion was that it was not a good practice and that it should not be done except in extreme or emergency cases, where the customer has a very good excuse.

"How Has the Past Year's Industrial Conditions Affected Our Business?" Mr. Blumberg said there is no doubt but what the loan business is affected by industrial conditions just as any other business.

"What Kind of Advertisement is Detrimental to Our Business?"

This subject was also very fully discussed, the following men participating: Mr. Cliff, Mr. Dudkison, of Philadelphia; Mr. Keeney, Mr. Blumberg, Mr. Dunn, Mr. Arnett, Dr. Mueller, Mr. Aufderheide, Mr. Farrington. Mr. Dunn thought the wording of ads is a personal matter. Mr. Durkison that advertising that doesn't deal squarely with facts is detrimental.

Secretary Hartz read from previous minutes a motion made by Mr. Stratton which was to the effect that "all members refrain from advertising that will cast a reflection upon other companies."

The next subject, "Speakers Bureau," was placed on the program at the request of Mr. Thompson, who said that during the past few months he had had occasion to speak before various luncheon clubs; that by letting it be known that the Association had speakers that would be available, the Association's message could be gotten across and contacts made that would be valuable. This matter was further discussed by Mr. Hartz, Mr. Aufderheide, Jr. and Sr., Mr. Young, Mr. Baum, of Ft. Wayne, and Mr. Chenoweth.

Mr. Hartz read a letter from Fred Anderson about convention boosting literature; also a letter from Mr. Kehr; and one from Mr. Leon Henderson. Mr. Aufderheide suggested that those matters be included in a bulletin to the members.

Salary buying was discussed by Dr. Mueller, Mr. Hartz and Mr. Johnson. Dr. Mueller moved that a rising vote of thanks be extended to Mr. Johnson, which motion was duly seconded and unanimously carried.

It was voted on motion by Mr. Aufderheide, duly seconded, that the semi-annual convention of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association be held in Terre Haute the third Wednesday in November.

Mr. Thompson, the incoming President, was called upon for a few remarks. Mr. Broughman made a motion that a vote of thanks be extended to Mr. Chandler for his capable services as President. This motion was seconded by Dr. Mueller, and unanimously carried.

The meeting adjourned at five o'clock.

Paper Read at Indiana I. L. Ass'n. 11th Annual Convention by L. L. Bishop, Indianapolis, May 20, 1926

RESPECT AND HOW OBTAINED

The ramifications of the word respect, and the equally important equation and how to attain it, Gentlemen, are varied and obtainable in its own sphere.

In this particular phase of this all important subject, I shall dwell on the matter of ourselves and our business, in so far as the public and other business sees us.

An individual or a business attains and holds respect according to his or its action, deeds and the good done for fellow-men, and the community at large. This may be broadened and enlarged, or it may be limited according to one's activities. One holding respect of a small clientel or business associates is cutting the same niche as his neighbor who can boast of a much larger organization.

There is no set rule to follow to obtain respect—There is one thing that must always prevail—Viz.; One must be Right in his convictions. Big enough to say Yes or No at the proper time, even though it may hurt, but acting according to the dictates of right prin- ciples. No vacillating wish-washy policy will endear you in the estimation of your fellow citizens. You should have the quiet dignity of a true gentleman, for while some seek and feed on publicity, others equally as respecful are disposed to shun it.

Respect and good will are synonymous. One of the heaviest expenditures made by the American People each year is for good will. An official of the New York Times recently said that Approximately 95% of each advertising appropriation should be expended to keep business already on the books, and the remainder to create new business. Good will is about as elusive as the weather. It is here today and there tomorrow. Our little Bobble in human conduct may mean the loss of good will that has been years in the building. One of the biggest liabilities that any concern may have is an official or employee who creates ill-will. The effects of ill-will are like lightning. They may never strike, but if they do, look out. It may take a generation to undo an adverse feeling created momentarily by some word or action of an unthoughtful employee, and while it may be localized to an individual, untold injury can come from its results.

Individual disrespect soon crystalizes and spreads in many ways. An attentive ear is usually more receptive to a knocker than a Booster, and it usually is our knockers who work on three eight hour shifts. Our boosters are not quite so solicitous of our welfare or well being.

Experience is the best teacher in promoting the principles of good will. Meet a fool and recognize him and you have no desire to mimic him. Meet a gentleman and recognize him, and you will try and absorb his good qualities. Life is about as uncertain as a game of craps where fair dice are used. Injure no man, and you probably will not have insulted your future landlord, no matter what his position may be today. Good Will is life's greatest asset, but you have to work and strive for it as well as pay for it.

In short, one must be a fine type of American Citizen, devoted to country and its welfare, and always striving to set forward the cause of righteousness. And after your earthy remains are laid to rest, your obituary should read. That you were a man of integrity, with a high sense of honor, a patriotic and useful citizen.

PERSONAL INVENTORY

Address Given by Paul A. Hancock, Model Loan Co. Indianapolis, at the 11th Annual Convention of the Indiana I. L. Ass'n., Claypool Hotel Thursday, May 20th, 1926

Our secretary asked me to give a talk on personal inventory to be divided into three divisions. The first of which is.

“Where in Life Do We Want to Go?”

If we were going to New York City, we would choose which route we would take and then make definite arrangements for our trip. We would make our reservations for Pullman and buy our tickets from the agent. So that all we would have to do is to get on the train. In other words we would definitely plan our trip ahead.

It is the same thing in planning what we expect to be in life. Success can be planned as definitely and with as much certainty as a trip can be planned. If we do not do this, then we have not accepted the first principle of success. It was King Solomon who said, “Without Vision, We perish.”

There is not a man in this audience today that has attained some degree of success that started where he is now. He started lower down the ladder, but he had vision and ambition together with integrity to go ahead. Therefore, the first question we must ask ourselves, have we definitely hitched our wagon to a star and are we willing to do whatever we should in the right way to get there.

It is very difficult to convince the great majority of people that the men who are in active pursuit of life have any other object in view than making money. This is a great mistake, for men of real success in life are not always the men who have made a great fortune. There are too many people content with mediocre attainments in life and are trying to “dead head” their way on the road and hope to arrive without paying the fare. We can make up our minds to do one of two things, either we can have an easy time in life, or we can have a success in life. But we must make up our minds at the start just which one of the two we are going to have. There is no royal road to success as there is no royal road to learning. It has to be hard knocks, morning, noon, and night with a fixity of purpose to obtain success.

Never in the history of the Industrial Loan Business has so much opportunity for success been offered as there is today. Years ago the office of five hundred accounts was considered a good office. Now the average is at least a thousand outstanding. Therefore, each office is doing a service twice as great as the one some time past. Our business today is still young and the man who has the vision now and works to that aim, will be the leader in a few years hence. Therefore one of my ideas of a successful life is one who has accomplished the objects for which he set out. To do something that is worthy of a Real American Citizen. Men of today must realize the vision of accomplishment and a sense of unselfish service are prime factors in the attainment of a successful life.

The second division is termed:

“What Will it Cost?”

In our trip to New York we are quite sure of our destination, for we have paid for it before we start, but in the trip of life we must pay as we go along. The employer who has in mind the fact that he was once in the same position as the people under him, will always have an organization that is willing to help him put things over in the right way.

As an employee, Loyalty above all is the fundamental principle of success. Be loyal at the start to the people with whom you are associated. Make our employer feel truthfully that we are sincere with him. That we are going to promote his interest, that we are going to stand for the things that he represents, that we are proud of being a member of his organization. There is nothing that will reap us a richer reward. Hard work and plenty of it makes us grow and enrich ourselves with things we would never get otherwise.

There are other things in life besides work, I believe an appreciation of finer and higher things in life, as the learning to know the beauties of literature, art and music will help any of us in our career. If we are to carry on a successful business, we must have imagination, we must see the things as in a vision, a dream of the whole thing. We can cultivate this faculty only by an appreciation of the finer things in life. Their finer beauties will contribute to our success.

Personality is the great asset to men. I believe Charles Schwab was right when he said, “Business is people, not things.” That 80% of all business is personal and 20% is impersonal and deals with things beyond personalities. In the Industrial loan business you are selling service. The factor of personality has 80% to do with the success in our business.

It is tremendously important that we realize the value of personality, we have to put our hearts and souls in our business to make it a real success.

Social activities play a very important part in life. Without the Rotary, Kiwanis and Lions luncheon Clubs and other organizations of this kind it would be extremely hard for us to meet men in other walks of life and learn of their business and tell them about ours. In most instances people that are friendly to us are friendly to our business. If, in our cities they are putting on campaigns for membership in the Chamber of Commerce, community funds which assist the unfortunate or other organizations of this kind, it would be very fitting for us to take part of our time and help in the work. by doing things for other people is where we enjoy life most. Civic activities are put over by people of our cities and we are part of them and must share our time and expense to help keep things going forward in the right way.

Along with our intellectual attainments we must keep our bodies in good condition. By getting exercise in a Gym. or by playing golf, hiking or any outdoor sport, we will keep our bodies such that we will be alert at all times.

Our personal conduct plays a real part in business. Our business is going to be just like the people that are in it. If we are living right and treating the other fellow just as we would want him to treat us, if conditions were reversed, then and only then will our business be on the high plane we want it to be.

The third and last division, but not the least.

“Are We Willing to Pay the Price?”

Our trip to New York is made pleasant because we are willing to pay the fare, more pleasant if we ride in a pullman, and if we could afford the price, most pleasant in a drawing room. But are we willing to pay the price to attain success in life?

As an employer, or owner of an office, are we willing to go out of our way to give our best thoughts to our managers, so they may benefit by our mistakes in life, thereby increasing their ability?

As managers are we willing to give pointers to our outside representatives so that they will get the benefit of our training and experience?

Are we as outside representatives willing to serve our organization to our utmost, no matter how much personal time it takes? Are we willing to take some of our time to locate skips, or collect a bad account without being asked to do so by the manager?

Are we as assistant managers or clerical help willing to share our part of the load in helping the business stay upon a high plane even if it takes some of our own personal time?

We must have a positive attitude toward our work to obtain success, we can never expect to reach our goal, if we are not willing to sacrifice our personal self for the good and service of others. I have at hand a code for employees which was taken from the "Book of Business Standards," written by Justice George Fredericks, of New York City. It is as follows: My only capital is myself. My only business is making myself produce. My only dividends are my salary or wages. My Goodwill is my standing with my employer. I can be successful if I apply good business principles to my work. I must first be sure that I have a useful service to sell my employer. If I am not sure, I must improve the service by study and pain. I must render a service that my employer has a right to expect of me. I must market myself to my customers with full confidence in my ability and no misrepresentation.

I must hold my employer by rendering uniform, dependable service. I must try no shortchanging methods, on my employers, by tardiness, idling, soldiering or disloyalty.

I must regard his property in my hands a trust and confidence which cannot be violated even in a small way without grave dishonor.

I must not permit my employer to do dishonorable things through me, nor stay with an employer whose methods are open to question.

I must let no employer offend my dignity as a human being, or trample on my agreed rights.

I must ask a rate of return for my labor which is equitable in line with market values and with the status of my credit.

I must bear in mind my relations to my fellow workers.

I must thoroughly appreciate that my employers and my own best interest are inseparable and parallel as long as I am in his employ.

I will close with a verse by Frank L. Stanton:

This world that we're a'livin' in, is mighty hard to beat.
You get a thorn with every rose,
But ain't the roses sweet?

I thank you.

Address by Mr. J. D. Williams at the 11th Annual Convention of I. I. L. A., May 20th, 1926 Indianapolis, Ind.

Your Secretary has asked me to talk to you on the subject, "What Cycle Does the Business Barometer Show."

I do not believe anyone can tell you what your individual business will do during 1926. If they do, it will be an accident. This reminds me of a loan man in Kokomo who was trying to collect on an accident policy. The insurance company protested the case on the ground that the particular incident in question was not an accident. The Insurance Company claimed it was an "Act of God" and the policy did not cover an "Act of God." It covered accidents only. The judge ruled that if it was an "Act of God" and it really happened in Kokomo, it surely was an accident.

I say again, if any one tells you what your particular business will do during the coming year, it will likewise be an accident.

I recently had the opportunity of seeing a chart or Business Barometer which had been compiled by business experts from all parts of the country. This chart has been kept up to date for over 25 years. By studying these records we find that every wave of prosperity has been followed by a like wave of depression. One always balances the other with a reasonable regularity of cycles.

The Barometer shows we have enjoyed very favorable business conditions during the latter part of 1924 and a wave of prosperity during the entire years of 1925. The chart shows a decline in business conditions in general during the past three months and many credit experts have issued orders to their buyers to buy only for their immediate needs and not to stock up or place future orders regardless of lowering prices, especially at this time as a further decline in prices and conditions in general was predicted.

Industrial conditions do effect the business of Industrial lending and should be watched and studied by Industrial Lenders. However, the need for borrowing money on the part of the public and the opportunity to serve on the part of the lenders is ever present under all conditions. "Dull business periods merely call for increased effort. Increased numbers of applications for loans in periods of depression require closer credit scrutiny.

I do not believe there is living, a man who can tell in advance what your individual business will do or what progress will be made during the year 1926 or any other year. This is practically up to you. Personally, our Company broke its former records during 1925. In fact it loaned over $1,600,000.00 more during 1925 than it did during 1924.

This year our Company is putting forth still greater effort. The advertising and publicity program alone calls for the expenditure of over a quarter of a million dollars. There is every reason to believe we will again break all established records during the present year.

The amount of business your Company will do during 1926 cannot be definitely decided by a Business Barometer. You are the Barometer. Your results will represent your investment of time, labor, money, skill and degree of intelligence. Seldom More.

Know your business. Learn all you can about it. How well you know your business and the amount of effort you put behind this knowledge is going to be the factor which will determine the volume of business you will do during 1926, or any other year.

Some men succeed better than others, because they attempt, then work to attain more.

We should not wait for the Business Barometer to indicate favorable conditions. The wise man who proves the successful type of business man will act and make the most of every circumstance. Let's act.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Mr. Kehr:

If you have some extra space in the Lenders News at any time, I would appreciate your publishing the following anecdote which actually took place in the immediate vicinity of our Atlantic City Office while sojourning down there last week.

An Italian gentleman possessed with the traditional business proclivities opened a stand to sell hot weinerwursts in the entrance to the Community Finance Service Office in Atlantic City, N. J.

This gentleman obtained the remarkable concession for selling the familiar and popular "hot dog" almost at the very portals of the Community Office.

A friend inquired, "You are doing well here?"

He said, "Well, I am. Yesterday I sold frankfurters $280 worth. Today we sell $300. Saturday I pulled down over $500. That is something enormous, this business."

His friend said, "You do well, eh. Maybe you loan it to me $100 to buy merchandise?"

He said, "No."

"You are making big profits here and you won't lend me $100—lend me for two weeks only 100 measly dollars?"

The frankfurter man replied: "Listen, we got arrangement here. I don't lend no money and the Community Finance Service don't sell no wienerwursts."

Wishing you the best of health, I remain

Cordially yours,

Richard McHugh, Mgr.
Community Finance Service, West Philadelphia Office.

Dear Sir:

Attached is one dollar for which please enter my subscription to the Industrial Lenders News for one year, to be sent to the above address.

I formerly had this periodical coming to me in Montgomery, Ala., but since coming to St. Louis, I had misplaced your address and just recently obtained a copy. I knew that there was something missing and now I know it was the News.

Very truly yours,
E. I. Elder.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

I am in receipt of your kind letter in regard to distribution of the Loan Shark booklet and I want to thank you many times for the good suggestions which I will follow out.

Inclosed herewith find news clippings regarding to the Johnstown Industrial Lenders Association. Mr. C. G. Liggett of the Beneficial Operating Bureau of Dayton, Ohio, put this proposition across for us boys here and I know we will reap a wonderful good from it. The Tribune did not publish all that I made up and I will appreciate it very much if you will publish this news in the Lenders News and add to it. Luncheon at the Green Kettle Mr. C. G. Liggett gave a very lengthy talk on the proposition and we immediately organized and elected the officers. Personally I feel proud to have this kind of an association in our city and it will be helpful both to the lender and the borrower and I will say further the lender who does not approve of an association of this kind don't know how much good he is missing. I trust this letter will find you well and happy and I wish to thank you Mr. Kehr for the kind attention I know you will give this letter.

Sincerely yours,
W. W. Gantz.

SALARY BUYERS SCORED BY BELL

Atlanta loan sharks and salary buyers are "just so many human scavengers and financial buzzards."

This was the opinion of Milton Bell, cashier of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, who addressed the Junior Chamber of Commerce luncheon meeting Thursday and pledged himself to assist in "wiping the last one of them from the face of the earth, with a final consignment to regions of eternal fire."

"These money lenders are literally rolling in ill-gotten wealth," he said, "mercilessly taken from defenseless hands of the small-salaried man, who, facing some need or necessity of the immediate present, fails to realize the dreadful unfairness of the trap into which he walks."

Mr. Bell explained that there are a number of small loan agencies in Atlanta operating legally and lawfully. These, he said, are not included in his indictment.

Drive on "Blackmailer"

"It is the blackmailer—the man who is getting from 20 to 30 per cent interest a week on the dollar—that we are after," he declared.

Mr. Bell pointed out that through the efforts of J. L. R. Boyd, general counsel for the Atlanta Legal Aid society, and members of that organization, 10 indictments had been obtained against alleged Atlanta "sharks," along with 120 injunctions designed to halt attempts at blackmail.

"They are whimpering now—trying to beg off," he said. "They are afraid their wives and children and friends are going to find out where all their money comes from—how they paid for the big house and the limousine."

Threat to Efficiency

"In Atlanta, on each pay day, agents of 160 loan companies stand at the gate of practically every industry in the city," Mr. Boyd declared, "and with cards in hand, solicit liens on wage and salary. In evasion of the law they take blank assignments with alluring promises of indefinite renewals. They extend credit regardless of the borrowers' ability to pay. And then operating in confederation, they 'gang up' and, through threats, time orders and garnishments—a form of blackmail, if the employer is unsympathetic—they take what amounts to the small balance left from the family budget. This is known over the United States as the 'Atlanta plan of loan sharkery.' This notoriety comes by virtue of the fact that a chain of salary assignment banks operated throughout the United States are financed by four citizens of Atlanta, who are known as the 'Big Four,' and whose auditors check over a total business investment amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars a year.

"There is but one solution—cooperation between employer and employee, between capital and labor, to secure remedial legislation. Salary and wage buying must be outlawed by the 1927 session of the Georgia general assembly. In the meantime, employers who have an interest in efficiency of their employees should study their legal rights.

"Employers who discharge employees arbitrarily under such conditions become silent partners to the loan shark, making it possible for him to practice his art of blackmail."—Atlanta Constitution, May 14, 1926.

ATLANTA LEADERS MAP FIGHT ON 'LOAN SHARKS'

Jr. Chamber Planning to Attack Problem by Publicity

Definite plans for a campaign to end the activities of salary-buying "loan sharks" in Atlanta were laid Wednesday afternoon by a special committee of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

After a conference in which W. D. Hoffman, president of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, and Milton Bell, cashier of the Federal Reserve Bank and chairman of the thrift committee of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, participated, it was decided by the campaign committee to attack the problem from every angle of publicity, with experiences of alleged victims as the subject; general instruction for employes and employers in the laws governing the subjects of small loans, usury and "salary buying" and the rights and obligations of everybody concerned; legal action through prosecutions for usury and injunctions, and general activities looking to the ultimate goal of a state law to curb the practice of salary buyers.

Others attending the conference were E. Smythe Gambrell and Major J. L. R. Boyd, president and secretary of the Atlanta Legal Aid Society, which has been active in organizing the campaign against "money sharks," and which, through its office at Room 922 of the Fulton court house, has instituted a widespread investigation into the experiences of alleged victims, with the result of a series of indictments, and Fitzhugh Knox and J. F. Gordy, president and secretary of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Major Boyd related some of the results of his investigations, saying that 160 money lenders operate in Atlanta as "salary buyers," obtaining interest of 10 to 40 per cent a month on small sums, for which the borrower pledges or assigns his salary, this loan being continually renewed upon payment of the interest instead of being paid.

"We have a record of one negro, who, in three years, paid $144 interest on an original loan of $10, still owing the original sum at the end of that time, and who lost his position when the loan shark went to his employer," said Major Boyd. "Such instances are not uncommon.

"The salary-buying loan shark is essentially a blackmailer, forcing the payment of usurious interest through the workman's fear that the transaction may become known to his employer. There is no greater security than a man's salary or his job."

Through activities of the Legal Aid Society, indictments charging usury have been returned against 11 money lenders and more than 150 injunctions against garnishment proceedings or other forcible action for collection of loans made on salaries at high interest.

The campaign against the "salary-buyers" was said to have the indorsement of Atlanta banks and members of the Georgia Industrial Loan Association, the latter an organization of brokers operating under the state law governing loans of less than $300, under supervision of the State Banking Department.—The Atlanta Georgian, May 20, 1926.

RAILWAYS SAVE VICTIMS OF LOAN SHARK SCHEME

Refuse to Pay Lenders on Salary Sales

Here is good news to the thousands of victims of the salary purchasing companies: the railroads of the middle west have decided not to honor wage assignments to this class of loan sharks in the future.

Railroad employes who have been in the clutches of these sharks are hereby relieved of two fears, stoppage of pay and loss of jobs. As several lawyers viewed it yesterday, the decision of the railroads also gives aid and comfort to employes of other firms who have been paying, paying, paying, and still owe the original debt.

Borrower Freed of Debt

It is the advice of the state's attorney that the borrower is no longer obligated when he has paid in interest the amount of the loan. Assistant State's Attorneys Robert McMillan and Joseph Nicolai, after studying the subject, hold that the salary purchasing companies are operating illegally as money lenders, are charging usurious rates, and that all firms would be justified in following the example of the railroads.

It was explained that under the Illinois law small loan brokers may charge 3½ per cent a month. The companies formed to evade this provision of the law operated in this way:

A man wished to borrow $25. They wouldn't lend it to him but he would get it on the theory they were buying from him an assignment of $27.50 of his pay, due in two weeks. If unpaid notice would be served on the employer to withhold that amount from the employe's wages. If paid, and the borrower desired, he could have back $25 of the $27.50 on the same basis—$27.50 payable in two weeks.

Loaned $30; Repaid $1,080

Supt. Joel D. Hunter of the United Charities, after receiving complaints, assigned Miss Irene V. McCormick, an attorney, to aid the distressed borrowers. One case was found where a man borrowed $30, he had paid back $1,080 in interest, and still owed the $30.

Miss McCormick consulted with Attorney Charles R. Napier, counsel for the Illinois Association of Licensed Lenders, a reputable organization, which was found to be sympathetic with the move to drive the disreputable element from the business.

Prosecutors McMillan and Nicolai were in favor of prosecutions for the usurers, but it was decided to have all the employers ignore the so-called wage assignments. (Note: This does not apply to the licensed money lenders who charge the legal rate of 3½ per cent a month.)

Attorney Harold F. White of the United Charities conferred with Attorney Bruce Johnstone of the Bar association, who recommended this course of action to the railroad lawyers. Attorney N. Y. Fowler of the C. & N. W. railroad advised the Western Conference of Railway Counsel, of which W. F. Dickerson of the Rock Island lines is chairman, that the roads would be acting legally and properly in refusing to pay the assignments.—Chicago Tribune, May 20, 1926.

6 CHINESE DEFAULT NOTES TO SOCIETY

Judgments Totaling $2200 Sought on Loans by Benefit Group—Cases Called Unusual

The proverbial honesty of the Chinese in financial matters lends interest and some mystery to the filing yesterday in the Prothonotary's office of eight judgment notes against a group of Chinese. presumably laundrymen and restaurant proprietors.

Within a short time the Sheriff will be at the doors of the Chinese judgment debtors. What complications will follow remains to be seen.

The judgment notes, each originally in the sum of $490, are written in Chinese on one side and in English on the other. They were given to the Chinese Benefit Society, of 937 Race street, lender of the funds.

After making a number of payments at the rate of $10 a week, as the notes called for, the debtors are alleged to have defaulted. So read the affidavits, filed in the Common Pleas Court by one Henry Chu, who calls himself agent of the Chinese Benefit Society.

Writs immediately were issued at the request of Richard Hay Woolsey, attorney for the society, directing the Sheriff to levy on the goods of the defendants.

On the judgment index books of the Prothonotary's office appears the following names of the Chinese debtors. Lee Yet Ting, 611 South 18th street; Mok Chin, 1407 South 52d street; Lee Sing, 611 South 18th street; Lum Hal and Hoy John, 5933 Haverford avenue, and Louie Nong, 2854 D street. They are alleged to owe balances amounting to approximately $2200.

Those familiar with Chinese dealings say that at each New Year the Chinese square their accounts with each other They seldom figure in litigation, preferring to adjust their disputes among themselves.

The system of judgment-note financing is uncommon among the Chinese. Clerks in the Prothonotary's office could not recall when such character of obligation was recorded against a Chinese heretofore.—Phila. Public Ledger, May 16, 1926.

PHILADELPHIANS AT MEETING

William Young, Vice President of the Community Finance Service Corporation, and C. J. Dirksen, supervisor of the same organization, both of Philadelphia, addressed a meeting of the local industrial lenders' association held here yesterday.—Johnstown Tribune, May 29, 1926.

INSTALLMENT SELLING

(Resume of address before convention of California Bankers Association, at Del Monte, California, Friday, May 28, 1926.)

By John E. Barber

Vice-President, The First National Bank of Los Angeles

That the present volume of installment paper actually outstanding is not alarming under the prosperous conditions recently prevailing and does not appear to constitute a menace to the national business or credit structure is the conclusion reached by John E. Barber, Vice-President, The First National Bank of Los Angeles, in a report upon installment selling submitted by the Economic Council of the California Bankers Association at its Convention today at Del Monte.

"Estimates of the total amount of installment credit outstanding," said Mr. Barber, "range from 3 to 8 billion dollars. However, some of these estimates have represented the full retail sales value of goods sold on the installment plan and have thus failed to take into account a considerable down payment. Other estimates represent the amount of installment paper created throughout a year but fail to credit the steady monthly liquidation. All contracts are not in effect at once nor continuously for the original amount. Giving effect to the down payments and to the monthly liquidation, it is probable that the amount currently owed on installment contracts does not average over 60% of the average estimate, of which approximately one-half represents automobiles.

"Although large in the aggregate, this sum is spread over all sections of the country and a great number of individual buyers, and when related to our national income of seventy billion dollars, our steadily increasing savings accounts and outstanding insurance, the high purchasing power of present wage scales and other pertinent factors, this total does not appear unduly burdensome or likely to strain the country's ability to pay.

"According to a survey made by Eberle & Riggelman, consulting economists of Los Angeles, based on an analysis of hundreds of installment contracts, the total income of families residing in Southern California is mortgaged for from 7 to 10% on installment contracts, an amount much less than frequently assumed. This includes installment purchases of automobiles, pianos, furniture, washing machines, radios, sewing machines, phonographs and vacuum cleaners. The average Los Angeles purchaser of an automobile on the installment plan was found to be 35 years old and to enjoy a monthly income of $318. The average amount of the installment contract was $1400; the average percentage of down payment 27%; the average period of payment 16 months; and the average monthly installment $56."

In the opinion of Mr. Barber it is unlikely that installment selling will continue to grow at the recent rate and may already have reached the saturation point. Inventories, instead of remaining with the manufacturer and distributor, have been passed on to the consumer, which limits the effectiveness of this particular stimulus to future production and sales. Installment selling may continue stimulating but it can hardly be sustaining, at least at recent levels.

Mr. Barber decried the abuses inherent in installment selling but declared that the widespread discussion of them in recent months had been enlightening and had had a salutary effect in putting bankers on their guard and making finance companies more conservative. As a result many undesirable practices which had crept into installment selling are in process of being corrected.

"Properly conducted and safeguarded," concluded Mr. Barber, "there is a legitimate place in our national business and national finance for installment selling. However, for this country to enjoy its benefits, installment selling must be kept sound and its extension kept within the bounds of good credit judgment. The responsibility for maintaining a wholesome situation rests with the commercial and investment bankers who supply 75 to 80% of the funds on which the installment plan is conducted. The price of a satisfactory ultimate experience is alert and constant vigilance and discrimination on the part of bankers, finance companies, manufacturers and retailers, as well as the cooperation of buyers themselves."

A. I. L. A. REPRESENTED AT THE NATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE MEETING

To be appointed and to have served The American Industrial Lenders Association as National Councillor to the Fourteenth Annual Meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce, was a real privilege and an honor.

The Trades Section of National Councillors was called to order promptly at ten A. M. Monday, May 10th, and the business of business men from every corner of America, moved along with precision under that able and wise Councillor Mr. Gude, of Chicago. The first business to come before the meeting was the nominating of Committee Chairmen and right here we learned that Industrial Lenders, members of our own Association have not taken and do not take the interest in better business movements, that better business movements yearn for. It is true that the business of Industrial Lending has made rapid strides during the past few years, or at least we think it has, but it will probably surprise you to know that in talking with many Councillors from every section of our Country, every one representing big interests of his community not a single one had heard of the American Industrial Lenders Association, or knew that a rate of three and one-half per cent per month on borrowed money was legal in so many states of our Union.

It was here that your Councillor and Delegates learned that our Association had not taken advantage of an open door to council with and mingle with other business, because apparently with any concerted effort on our part we could today have a member of our group as a Committee Chairman of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

What is the answer? We toil week in and week out for the interest of our own business and fail to give of our time and experience to the other fellow's problems. The other fellow is eager to learn, the way is open; shall we enter?

After a delightful luncheon held at the Williard Hotel as guests of President O'Leary, the afternoon session opened with Governor Clifford Walker of Georgia addressing the Chamber on fire prevention and it was his honor to present C. W. Brosnan of Albany, Georgia a Plaque in recognition of his city winning first place in the fire reduction contest sponsored by the Chamber.

The meeting was privileged to listen to Maryland's own Governor Ritchie, Wednesday morning, May 12th, and some of the high spots of his address are as follows:

"Neither society nor business should look too much to legislation to solve economic or social problems," he said. "Business should regulate itself as to relieve the Government of the need of doing so, organized business is often more effective to prevent abuses and punish wrongdoing in its own ranks than is the Government armed with the letter of the Law. The question is altogether one of the ideals business sets for itself the goal at which it aims. It is not one of power the power is there."

After the Governor's address the meeting adjourned, and if you will watch the Pathe News Features in Movie Theatres you will be able to distinguish National Councillor Mattingly, Delegates Pope of Richmond, and Hood of Baltimore.

HOWARD T. MATTINGLY,
National Councillor.

Publicity Committee, Chairman Holden reported as follows:

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PUBLICITY COMMITTEE FOR 1926

To the Officers and Members:

Publicity has been obtained in nearly every city and town in Maryland during the past four months. This was brought about by organizing a Committee composed of lenders from every city and community throughout the state, where there is membership in the Association. Our policy was to prepare and advance news articles covering each meeting of the Association, giving the date, place of meeting, program and the object of the Association and its policies, and forward to each member of the Committee, who would immediately get the copy in the hands of the editor of the newspapers of their locality.

The personal contact of these members with their local newspaper, has brought about a more friendly association with the press and produced splendid results.

The first meeting since I was elected Chairman of Publicity was held in Baltimore on January 13, 1926. We obtained about 700 lines of publicity. Here, I want to commend Messrs. Tyler, McCullum and Turner of my Committee for their efficiency in handling the publicity covering this meeting, in their respective cities. Every newspaper in Cumberland, Hagerstown and Baltimore published items pertaining to this meeting.

The second meeting of the Association was held in Baltimore February 9th. A news article was forwarded to all members and about 400 lines of publicity was obtained.

The third meeting of the Association was held in Baltimore on March 13. A news article was forwarded to all members and about 200 lines of publicity was obtained.

A fourth meeting was held in Baltimore on April 11, 1926, and due to the fact that I was not acquainted with the correct date on which the meeting was to be held there was no publicity obtained.

An invitation has been extended to Mr. Joseph B. Blondell, Treasurer of the Baltimore Sun, and to Mr. Henry Moehlman, Advertising Manager of the Baltimore Sun to attend our Banquet as guests. It is my recommendation that a special table be provided for these distinguished guests, because we are hopeful of getting some good press reports. Both of these gentlemen have accepted the invitation and I believe that they will be with us on the evening of Tuesday, May 11.

A summary of the publicity obtained to date of which we have received clippings shows about 1300 agate lines covering 3 cities. Clippings have been compiled and are here submitted for your inspection and in substantiation of this summary.

In January we obtained 700 lines in 6 newspapers; In February we obtained 400 lines in 4 newspapers; In March we obtained 200 lines in 4 newspapers; in April none.

In May we expect about 1000 lines in 7 newspapers and in addition we will have the speeches of the prominent speakers broadcasted by radio.

In dealing with the press, your Committee has endeavored to submit facts and give truthful information about the growth and development of the small loan business, covering the progress of uplift that is being made through the organized cooperative efforts of the Association.

Your Committee congratulates the Association on its effort to gather statistics showing the volume of the small loan business done in Maryland annually. These figures have been helpful in obtaining publicity. Your committee recommends that some effort be made by the Association to obtain the total number of borrowers in the state, who are householders and what percentage have no banking connection. Information of this character is of real news value and will do much to make the public recognize the value of the industrial lender and the service he renders.

Your Chairman realizes it has not always been easy for the members to get the support of the press in their locality and recognizes it was only through personal contact on the part of the members, that results have been obtained. I desire to extend my sincere thanks and appreciation to each member of the committee for their loyal support and cooperation throughout my term.

Respectfully submitted by (Signed) G. W. HOLDEN,
Chairman of the Publicity Committee.

Law Committee Chairman Gardner reported progress and explained in detail several items of importance to Lenders which had been handled through his Committee.

The Secretary reported seven meetings of the Association having been held during the year, with ten new members having been admitted making a total Membership at present of Thirty Licensed Lenders.

Treasurer—J. D. Goldrick reported cash on hand at the beginning of the fiscal year $153.00, received as dues during year $839.97, disbursements for the year $762.29, leaving cash in bank $230.68.

Chairman Hood sketched briefly the activities of the Association during his term of Office and no one having cause for complaint, the meeting adjourned.

Respectfully submitted,
H. T. MATTINGLY, Secretary.

The eleventh annual Banquet of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Banquet Hall of the Emerson Hotel on Tuesday, May 11th, 1926.

The Honorable Howard Bryant, President of the Baltimore City Council acted as toastmaster.

The first speaker of the evening was Mr. Herbert O'Conor our young States' Attorney. In introducing Mr. O'Conor, Mr. Bryant paid tribute to the effectiveness of the State Attorney's Office under Mr. O'Conor's regime. He also informed us that we had a friend in the State Attorney's Office. Mr. O'Conor's remarks were brief, but to the point. He laid great stress on the fact that during his tenure of office, that no infringement of the law by the various loan offices had come to his notice. He closed his remarks with a wish that our good work should continue successfully.

Mr. Bryant read a letter from His Excellency, Albert C. Ritchie, Governor of Maryland, who was on the program as the first speaker of the evening. Our governor voiced his regrets in not being able to be present and wished us every success for the future.

The next speaker was the Honorable Howard W. Jackson, Mayor of the City of Baltimore. Mr. Jackson among other things informed us that he had a broken left leg and also a broken right arm and was, therefore, to be excused from the dancing that was to follow.

Mr. Bryant introduced as the next speaker, Mr. Leon Henderson, Director of the Remedial Loan Department of the Russell Sage Foundation. Mr. Henderson gave us a synopsis of an exhaustive study made by him of the credit situation as applied to the loan business throughout the country. Among other things, he stated that in some instances it was cheaper for the public to borrow money from the lender and purchase their various commodities on a cash basis, thereby saving from 30 to 50% which his investigation showed was the overcharge on some merchandise purchased on the installment plan. He predicted a tremendous future business for the money lenders. It cannot be refuted that Mr. Henderson speaks authoritatively on this subject.

William H. Lawrence, Esq., a prominent Attorney of this city was the next speaker. It did our hearts good to hear Mr. Lawrence extol the virtues of the money lenders, pointing out the advantages the public received by borrowing from the offices which are under the supervision of the State Bank Commissioner's office and abiding by the tenets of the 3½ act.

Mr. Bryant then introduced the Honorable Eugene O'Dunne, Judge of the Criminal court of this City of Baltimore. The Judge in his remarks gave us an insight in the work of his Court and complimented us on the character of our business.

Our old friend, V. W. B. Hedgepeth, Esq., the last speaker of the evening, spoke very interestingly on the loan business and concluded his remarks by saying that an epitaph to be placed on his tombstone at his demise, should read to the effect, "that he had been in the loan business and was proud of it."

It is appropriate at this time to highly commend the efforts of Mr. Pumphrey, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, who so successfully took charge of the arrangements for the Banquet.

The evening was concluded by dancing and a good time was had by all.

LOCAL ORGANIZATION OF LOAN MEN FORMED

Organization of the Johnstown Industrial Lenders' Association was perfected at a meeting held yesterday, with the election of the following officers: President, M. C. Wallace, of the Community Finance Service; Vice President, John McClain, of the Beneficial Loan Society, and Secretary, W. W. Gantz, of the American Loan Company.

The organization meeting was called by C. G. Liggett, of the Beneficial Operating Bureau, of Dayton, O., who explained the advantages of organizing an exchange bureau locally. After Mr. Liggett's talk, it was unanimously agreed to form a local organization.—Johnstown Tribune, May 15, 1926.

ILLINOIS

The Illinois Industrial Lenders Association's quarterly meeting was held at the Palmer House, in Chicago, on April 30th from 4 to 6 P. M. in the foyer of the Grand Ball Room.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Albert P. Snite and reports were made by our Officers, which were of interest to all members, and the Secretary reported a Membership of seventy-three.

Applications for new memberships were considered from Metro Loan Company, 120 South State St., Chicago; Household Finance Corporation, 9 South Kedzie Ave., Chicago; Illinois Cash Credit Corporation, Chicago and State Loan Company, 1636 Halsted Street, Chicago Heights, Illinois, and all were accepted and welcomed into our Association, which now has a membership of seventy-seven Companies, who are actively engaged in the small loan business and serving the public with loans at the legal rate.

Chicago members recently donated $510.00 to the Chicago Crime Commission and an interesting talk was given by Mr. Charles R. Napier on the activities of the commission and its value in reducing crime. Chairman Snite requested all members to keep State Licenses issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce each year and mentioned a case in point, where an ambitious Attorney recently called upon his Company to produce proof that it was licensed during the year in which a loan was made and securing the correct forms.

Nine offices of Salary Buyers now operate in Chicago, which are reported to be owned by two groups of men and references were made to Articles which appeared recently in the Chicago Tribune regarding their activities.

Dinner was served at 6:30 P. M. in the Grand Ball Room. Two hundred were present and the dinner was followed by a humorous talk by Opie Read, who is known everywhere for his wonderful novels and short stories.

'Ford's Collegians' furnished music for dancing from 9 to 12 and we are sure everyone present had a friendly and enjoyable time at our Dinner-Dance, which will go down in history as one of our very successful Social events.

CONVENTION NEWS

Bert D. Strang, publicity man, 405 Hartman Bldg., Columbus, Ohio, who is in charge of publicity for the National Convention, is making elaborate plans to spread the news of this Convention throughout the country. In connection with his plans, it is proposed to run a full page story illustrated by the great and near great in the industrial loan business, and has called for the photographs of the National officers and chairmen of standing committees, as well as the photographs of members of the Ohio Association and Chairmen of the special committees handling the local details of the National Convention. If you are included in this group, please be sure to send Mr. Strang your photograph at once.

The Program Committee is making excellent progress on the program for the National Convention which will include not only good solid stuff, but plenty of time for recreation and social intercourse. One of the chief speakers will be Honorable L. F. McClelland, Judge of the Municipal Court, Atlanta, Ga., who will speak upon "Remedial Suggestions."

Don't forget to send to Frank J. Schneider, 2063 E. 4th St., Cleveland, any suggestions you have for entertainment, especially along athletic lines.

Among the subjects for general discussion will be newspaper advertisements. The chairman of the National Publicity Committee now has under advisement, the suggestion of a prominent member from the Indiana Association in which he recommends that a display be gathered together of loan ads from all over the country and that prizes be offered for the (a) most unique, (b) most effective, (c) most novel. The merits of the ads would be decided by some advertising men who are not in the loan game. There might be several groups of ads: 1. The two inch; 2. the four inch; 3. the double column; 4. the display ad; 5. the classified ad; 6. the ad with cuts; 7. the ad without cuts.

If anybody else has anything to suggest for the good of the cause, shoot it into the National Secretary's office.

PUBLICITY

Under the heading "Making Credit Available for All" the Indianapolis members of the Indiana Association had a full page educational advertisement in the Indianapolis Star, May 20. It made quite an impression on the Lenders attending the Annual Meeting. The Georgia Association is continuing its educational publicity campaign in the Atlanta City Builder, the Chamber of Commerce monthly publication with good effect.

MANAGERS MEETINGS

As announced in our meeting schedule on the first page, the Aufderheide and Mackey organizations will hold a meeting for all their branch office managers in Cleveland on the two days preceding the National Convention.

Each organization is arranging an interesting program of subjects which have for their object more efficiency and better results.

One of the purposes of holding these meetings at the same place the National Convention is being held is to give the managers an opportunity to remain for the big event.

We commend the action taken by these two organizations to other chain organizations and hope that they will find it practicable to adopt similar plans if not this year, in the years to come.

INSURANCE PAYS

The Beneficial Loan Society, of Akron, suffered a loss by robbery of its safe on March 7, 1926. This loss was covered by a burglary and office robbery insurance policy issued by the Industrial Lenders Mutual Insurance Company, Wilmington, Delaware, which paid the loss in full.

Loan Managers and Investigators Wanted

There are a number of openings in a large chain organization for loan managers and outside men or investigators to do vacation relief work.

Permanent positions for all who qualify by proving themselves honest, industrious and capable.

ORGANIZATION AND PROGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL LENDERS

By J. H. Aufderheide

It will be my aim to sketch only in the briefest manner possible the organization and progress of the Industrial Lenders in the United States in the last decade. The industrial loan business is an old one and the evils surrounding this business go back to our earliest records. The first serious attempt at reform and remedy was begun in 1907 by the Russell Sage Foundation. At that time, loan sharks were flourishing throughout the country and the poor and needy were required to pay exorbitant rates of interest for small sums of money. The Sage Foundation at first was under the impression that they could drive the loan shark out of business by drastic laws prescribing a rate of interest which would make it prohibitive for lenders to operate. However, instead of remedying the situation it was found that these drastic measures did not solve the problem because they had overlooked an important factor and that was the necessity of the borrower. In other words, the poor man who needed $50.00 or $100.00 and who did not have banking credit was as willing to violate the law in order to secure a loan as was the shark. It is well known that when a man needs money, if he cannot get it at a fair and lawful rate of interest, he will pay whatever charges are asked to secure it. Necessity cannot bargain with greed.

The Russell Sage Foundation soon found that this was not the way to eradicate the loan shark. It was necessary to furnish a substitute for the unscrupulous lender. They realized that this business was a necessary business and that the only way to combat the loan shark evil was to attract decent men and legitimate capital into this business. The best way in which this could be done was to draft a law which would be fair to the borrower, as well as to the lender and permit the lender to make a legitimate profit on his capital.

In 1916 a committee, comprised of members of the American Industrial Lenders Association, met with representatives of the Russell Sage Foundation in New York, and at that time the Uniform Small Loan Law was born. This law permitted a flat rate of interest of 3½% per month without fees or other charges. The law could not be evaded and it provided penalties that insured its enforcement. With minor amendments, it is the law which was enacted at the last session of the legislature in West Virginia. Gentlemen, you may not realize the importance of that meeting in New York in 1916, but I want to tell you that it has changed the entire complexion on the business of lending money in small sums throughout this entire country. I do not know of anything of which I am more proud than the fact that of the committee of seven which drafted the Uniform Small Loan Law, that I was one of that group.

THE LIBRARY OF THE
APR 20 1926
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

The Uniform Small Loan Law has worked in every state where it has been enacted. It has reduced unnecessary borrowing and lightened the burden of the unfortunate; it has substituted respect for disrepute and has legitimatized and elevated this business, which in the words of Ex-Governor and former Democratic candidate for President of the United States, the Honorable James M. Cox, "Is more of a necessity in an industrial community than perhaps a bank, for this reason: it is the poor man, who when he needs money, needs it most."

The progress of the American Industrial Lenders Association and the affiliated state organizations goes hand in hand with the progress of the Uniform Small Loan Law. The National Association was organized in Philadelphia in 1916 and from a small organization of some twenty-five or thirty men now numbers hundreds in its membership. It has for its aims and purposes the uplift and dignity of the industrial loan business, and we are proud to say that at no time has this Association ever been discredited in any manner whatsoever.

You have been operating under the provisions of the Uniform Small Loan Law in West Virginia since the first of July, 1925. You gentlemen know that this law is right and just and I am sure that there is not a man here who would want to see it stricken from the statutes of your state. There has never been a criticism of the Uniform Small Loan Law in any respect except that the rate of 3½% per month may be too high. It may be that a company with large capital in a large city may operate at a less rate. However, we know that the small licensed lender in a medium sized or small town may struggle to make a living under the Uniform Small Loan Law. The time may come when loans of this class may be made at a slightly less rate and I am sure that the Russell Sage Foundation and the American Association of the Industrial Lenders will have no hesitancy in advocating a less rate. This business is still in the experimental stage and until time has shown that changes should be made, we advocate that no change be made in our law.

I want to congratulate the West Virginia Lenders Association upon the splendid progress they have made and to tell you that I am indeed proud and happy to be with you to-day. From small beginings you will grow to be a factor in your state and in the United States. Each one has the responsibility of conducting himself and his business to reflect nothing but credit to his state organization, and to the National Association. Keep your business practices clean—render helpful service to those who are unfortunate—regardless of profit—and you will see the stigma and antagonism which has characterized this business completely eradicated.

RELATIONS WITH BORROWERS

By Lloyd Rice

Your committee has requested me to speak on a subject, which according to my way of thinking covers just about the most important phase of our business. My subject is, "Relations With Borrowers."

It would certainly require the knowledge of one more learned and experienced than I to do the subject justice, but however I will hope my hearers will be lenient, and accept my views at their face value. I will base my talk on Article III of the Code of Ethics adopted by the National Association, Sept. 26, 1924, under the same heading as my subject.

For the benefit of those members who have not familiarized themselves with this code of ethics, I will read the ten rules in their respective order:

Relations With Borrowers

1. We shall consider our business a vital necessity in community life and that it affords a distinct opportunity to extend credit to deserving people who may not possess bankable security.

2. We shall recommend that each State pass adequate laws to regulate and supervise this necessary business and to encourage and safeguard invested capital.

3. All patrons shall be dealt with honorably at all times.

4. Courteous, friendly and helpful attention and service to borrowers and prospective customers shall be extended and provided.

5. Where an assignment of wages is taken as part or full security for loans, notice of such assignment will not be served upon employers, except as a last resort to secure repayment of the loan, or to comply with statutory requirements.

6. The terms and conditions of loans shall be explained carefully, fully and fairly on or before the date the loan is closed.

7. Loans shall not be made knowingly to minors or to those who are senile, decrepid or intoxicated, or for useless or unlawful purposes.

8. Any investigation and appraisal of security shall be conducted in a manner to respect the usual confidential relation between lender and borrower.

9. Loans shall not be made to persons who do not speak, write or understand the English language, except through an interpreter capable of explaining to such applicant the nature and character of his obligation.

10. We shall condemn any effort to evade our loan laws by requiring borrowers to buy stock or insurance or to leave a part of the borrowed funds on deposit, or by any other method of deceiving the borrower as to the actual cost of his loan.

Each of these ten rules is a solemn promise. A promise to ourselves, to each other, and the world at large. Can any one deny the fineness,—the quality of each?

I have something to say and I am not quite sure just how to say it.

There are many so-called Christians who despite long and frequent prayers, regular attendance at church yes even a generous contribution to the different debt funds, are anything but Christianly in their dealings with their fellow-man. And so it is with some of us industrial lenders. We have a beautifully worded code of ethics, we are members of organizations which foster the highest thought in business conduct, still some of us are found wanting in our dealings with our customers.

I sometimes wonder if we realize how important the borrower is to us—to our business. The first rule I read a few minutes ago said we shall consider our business a vital necessity in community life. It is a fact that our business is a necessity to the community, but it is also a certainty that the good-will of the people of the community is a necessary factor to our success. This good-will can be had only through merit.

In the different advertising mediums employed by most lenders, their proposition is worded in flowery phrases indeed, but, sad to relate it is very often the case that the applicant when calling personally at the office is treated in a comparatively shabby manner.

We are all of us confronted daily with requests for extensions of time on payments,—every day a formerly prompt paying customer fails to show up with his payment. I will admit that this part of the business is sometimes pretty aggravating, but on the other hand, it is very important that we do not allow ourselves to become out of sorts. I have learned this lesson. Always get the other fellow's story. Weigh it thoroughly, stay over on his side of the fence until you understand his position. Then get hold of him and drag him over on your side, and convince him as to your position. There has never been a case in my experience where a satisfactory compromise has not been effected. Don't jump on a delinquent and roar at him. Who knows what sorrow with which his poor heart might be filled? What troubles he might be bearing? I do not feel that there ever was a difficulty so great that two men, both willing to arbitrate, could not overcome.

I have been talking way too long now and I am sure you are all tired of hearing me. I do not know whether I have made myself clear or not but the idea I have tried to put over is this in a nutshell: "Since the customer is the goose that lays the golden egg, then for heaven's sake, have a heart and be kind to that goose." Thank you.

THE REASON FOR A DELINQUENT

By C. E. DeLotell

The loan was not properly closed, by that I mean, the borrower was not properly sold on the loan he purchased. The main reason for a dissatisfied consumer is, poor salesmanship. For example, if a man buys an article that has been poorly demonstrated or misrepresented you are very liable to find him to pay the same way, careless and shiftless about his payments, and he will be a very hard person to conquer, because, he has been fooled once and he does not care to have you fool him again. So this makes matters very difficult to adjust. In our positions we are in business to sell money to the public and to my knowledge there is no easier article on the market to sell than real money, on the instalment plan. But, if it is not sold properly it will be just as difficult to get it back at a gain as any other commodity not sold properly. You will ask, "How would you make a man pay who has been sick or out of work?" If a man has been sick or out of work you allow him to slide by without an effort to make him pay, if only part of a payment you will soon find he will be sick about every other month, and in a very short time you will have the worst kind of delinquents, what I call a habitual delinquent, and you would be the cause of ruining his credit record for other merchants. So you do not only harm yourself and a customer but you have harmed others who might extend him credit. In other words if you fail as a salesman to sell a loan properly, your customer will go to another company before he has you paid off and borrow more money on the same security making it doubly hard to collect, this kind of a delinquent causes a hardship on both loan companies by having a double burden to carry.

A delinquent is like a disease germ, they breed rapidly and one germ is just as dangerous as many and are very hard to conquer. If you have a great number of delinquents or a few, he is most sure to come in just at a time when the office is crowded, with a sad story of how he has had hard luck and cannot pay until next month. Your good customers absorb this conversation and next month your delinquents will increase and continue to increase until you have lost all control of your accounts, and you will be swimming in them both at the office and at home. "Think longer and say less."

In this particular city of Charleston there has been lack of coöperation which also helps materially in producing very bad delinquents. There is only one way to eliminate this and that is to get together and be a body of real honest to goodness loan men. The high rate days are over in West Virginia, so let us all get our shoulder to the wheel and push hard, we are in a very bad position at present and have to push up-hill for a time, but should we reach the top and go down the other side, it would be hard then to hold back, everything would run so smoothly and your work would be more pleasant.

"Lets Go."

WIFE IS NOT SOLE OWNER OF HOUSE GOODS, JURY SAYS

Accordingly, Some of Pickerings' Furniture Will be Sold to Satisfy $750 Judgment

Mrs. Leydia Pickering, of Dunmore, is not the sole owner of everything she lays her hands on at her home, a jury of men and women held in a verdict returned in common pleas court today.

Before Judge Culver, of Bradford county, and the jury, yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Pickering, the wife of Frank W. Pickering, insisted that everything former Sheriff Jim Reap levied on in the effort to collect a judgment against her husband last fall was in reality her property and should not go under the hammer at a public sale.

In the local court prior to the issuance of the execution, Pickering, a jury held, should pay John Haggerty $750 for running down and killing Haggerty's young son with his automobile.

The jury got the case after P. E. Kilcullen insisted that the husband is the owner of everything around one's home, and Ralph W. Rymer, for Mrs. Pickering, held that things were just the reverse.

"Kilcullen here is a bachelor, and, of course, does not know that the wife owns everything in the house. I'm a married man and I know what I'm talking about," Mr. Rymer told the jury, four of whom were women.

The jurors after battling with the question for several hours finally reached an agreement last night and brought in a sealed verdict today. In it they held that Mrs. Pickering owned the victrola, a bedroom suite, a steel engraving and the kitchen utensils and that the remaining articles levied upon, a floor clock, the parlor and dining room furnishings and the automobile belonged to the husband.

Accordingly, the goods found to be owned by Pickering will be sold and the proceeds turned over to Mr. Haggerty. J. E. Sickler was associated with Mr. Kilcullen for Mr. Haggerty.—Scranton Times, March 23, 1926.

STEIMLE AND MADISON ATTEND CREDIT MEN CONFERENCE

A. B. Madison and E. M. Steimle, chanrman and secretary respectively of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association attended the Second Annual Southern Conference of the Associated Retail Credit Men held at Whittle Springs Hotel, Knoxville, Tennessee, last month.

They say they again met and heard our friend Woodlock of the Retail Credit Men's National Association give one of his effective talks. Both men say they got a lot out of the conference and were pleased with the publicity that resulted.

Knoxville offered a cup to the State having the greatest attendance according to mileage which the Atlanta crowd won and took home with them. It is described as being "beautiful and eighteen inches high."

RELATIONS WITH PUBLIC OFFICIALS

By W. P. Gore

The program committee having placed me on the list of speakers to address this meeting, I at once set about to study the question assigned me, "Our Relations with Public Officials."

To ascertain this relationship, it has been necessary first to study the statute which gives us our existence. For years past there has been a persistent effort and insistent demand to prescribe some limit to interest charges required by persons making small loans.

The legislature of our State Acts, 1925, chapter No. 96, enacted the law under which we operate and which now governs us in our dealings with the public and this statute has defined our duties as well as our rights, and has created the machinery by which we are to be governed in the conduct of our business.

As is well known, prior to the enactment of this law, the small borrowing public was at the mercy of every Shylock who chose to demand both the flesh and the blood from the helpless public. From the earliest times the legislative branch of the government has prescribed the rate of compensation or interest that might be legally demanded for the use of money and credit used in the conduct of the commerce of the country and this rate has been such as to enable the one using the same to get a reasonable return thereon and to also compensate the person extending the credit.

What we might call a new law affecting what we might also denominate a new business and has not only recognized small loan institutions as legitimate enterprises, but has imposed certain limitations upon us as well as certain well defined duties to be performed.

The first duty imposed is the procurement of a state license by every person, co-partnership or corporation who shall engage in the business of making loans of money, credit, goods or things of value, and the applications shall be in writing and shall contain the full name and address, both of the residence and place of business of the applicant and for this privilege, if granted, every such applicant shall pay the sum of $100.00 as an annual license fee.

Every person, firm or corporation so engaged shall execute a bond in the penalty of $1,000.00 with one or more sureties to be approved by the State Banking Commissioner pavable to the State of West Virginia, for the use and benefit of the State or any person or persons conditioned that said obligor will conform to, and abide every provision of the law under which we are operating, and to indemnify any person against loss by reason of any violations of this law on our part.

The duties and obligations which we owe the State and its duly constituted authorities under this law are as sacred and binding upon each and every one of us as any duty that devolves upon us in the observance of any other law of our land.

In my opinion the fidelity and patriotism with which we observe and obey the statute regulating the conduct of our business will very largely determine future legislation affecting our business.

The common and popular slogan today is "obey the law," and the demand for law enforcement has never been more universal in this country.

As a final admonition, I would urge every member of this association to comply with all the rules and regulations prescribed by the constituted authorities of our beloved State for the conduct of our business, which in my opinion, will yield the largest possible dividends, and will assure the permanency and stability of our investments.

VALUE OF STATE AND NATIONAL ASSOCIATIONS

By F. H. Withrow

In reviewing the work of the National and State organizations of Industrial Lenders, their value to us, our relation and duties towards each organization, we may ask why the State Organization?

Our state organization exists for the reason that the individual persons who composed the 23 companies now licensed and operating in this state, many of them have felt for a long while that the conditions governing the small loan business in this as well as other states, should be remedied, the large numbers of borrowers and the demands for small loans have created a real necessity and business for the lenders, recognizing the conditions throughout the state and the manner their business was handicapped and in order to bring about a uniform law governing the small loan business and to create a more friendly coöperative spirit among the lenders, the various companies of this state have felt the necessity for the State and National Associations.

Each individual company or lender of this state who has complied with the law governing the small loan business is interested more than ever before in seeing that his business becomes more elevated and to show to the curious public and to the various classes of business that his is one of service and of a necessity to his community, he is interested in seeing that the loan business is changed from the olden methods. Our State and National Associations have been able to elevate the standard of the loan business in this and many other states, from haggle and barter—to a uniform fixed charge, from tricks of trade—to open square dealing, from the customers beware—to customers satisfied, from the old time "bawler out"—to courteous treatment in our dealings and collection methods. From the uncertain terms and explanations of a contract to a complete explanation and understanding of all the terms and conditions of a contract. From misleading advertising,—to the plain truth in advertising. From dark confidential office rooms,—to a light airy bank light office, from an office and a business that our patrons have felt humiliated to patronize,—to an office and a business that our customers who say they are pleased and appreciate the privilege of dealing with us. From the position of a public but necessary evil,—to a recognized influence for public good,—these are a few ideals which have been attained by the State and National Organizations.

The interests of the various members of each state are mutual,—they have assisted the National and State Associations in elevating the loan business to that standard I have herein enumerated, —to maintain such standard, the necessity of an organization and complete coöperation is imperative, our present system of loans in this state should be appreciated and should be maintained through the efforts of our individual members and our State and National Organizations,—it is up to us as individual members to educate out customers as to the fairness of the law governing our charge on loans and to show to the public or to any one who may take occasion to criticize or condemn our business that ours is a legalized, legitimate and a necessary business,—the fault fellow members for our business being so little understood rests with you and me, we do not take sufficient interest in explaining to an inquiring public the necessity for our business, we too often allow knocks and kicks to go by unchallenged.

Why the National Association? It was George Washington who said, "Where there is no vision the people perish," this old and true saying can well be applied as coming from the founders and promoters of the National Organization, the men who have promoted the National Organization have been working, not for personal gain, but to bring about legislation and a betterment of loan conditions in the various states of the Union, that you and I might enjoy the privileges of a business which is of interest to us as well as to our fellow man.

The few loyal men at the inception of the National Organization supported by the Russell Sage Foundation, evidently had the vision as to the future of the small loan business,—had it not been for their vision no doubt but what our business would be gradually perishing to-day, they have been faithful and their works have been rewarded by the enactment of uniform laws in 23 states of the Union, with a membership of approximately 500.

The personnel of the officers and executives of the National Association, have been since its organization, composed of the highest type of lenders and business men in the state, and our thanks and appreciation are due these gentlemen for what they have accomplished for us.

The National Association and their work is made possible by the coöperation and assistance received from the various State Organizations, the State Association and their work is made possible by the support and coöperation of the individual members of the association, the value of these organizations at this time cannot be overestimated. They have furnished the lifeblood for the lenders and will continue to function, only by and with our united support.

Knowing the importance of the work of the State and National Association as we do,—what each have accomplished in their respective field of work, it is our duty at this time to strive to make our State Association 100% membership. If each State does her part towards this end, our National Association will automatically function.

A summary of our relations and duties toward the State and National Association can briefly be defined by the one word "Coöperation," it is our privilege and duty to assist each Association, to do so we must begin at home, each fellow willing to lend the other his assistance and strive to be fair with his fellow-men and to play the game FAIR.

The following poem by Kiser entitled the "Great Game of Life" well conveys to us the feeling we should exemplify towards our business associates, to our customers and to our fellow-men.

Life's a game let's play it fairly
Each a sportsman first and last.
Let us face each other squarely
Ever holding friendship fast.
Let us deal with one another
In a frank and honest way,
Giving to the losing brother
Such concessions as we may.

Why be bickering or nagging,
Since the game must be so brief?
Why in sulkiness be lugging
Or importing needless grief?
Why indulge in petty cheating
Though our meaning be unknown?
Why have any pride in beating
Where our merit is not shown?

Why attempt to sneak successes
That to others should belong
Fame is sweetest when she blesses
Those who win by being strong.
Let us face each other squarely
Holding truth and honor fast,
Life's a game: let's play it fairly
Each a sportsman first and last.

BLOCKS FINANCE FIRM'S PLAN TO TAKE MAN'S PAY

Legal Aid Society Obtains Temporary Injunction in Its Fight

Another blow was struck Wednesday in the campaign of the Legal Aid Society against alleged usurious money lenders when Common Pleas Judge A. J. Pearson temporarily restrained the Superior Finance Co., 2043 E. Fourth street, from filing a wage assignment with the New York Central against James McCabe, 930 E. 141st street, a switchman.

The petition for injunction was filed by C. E. Clarke of the Legal Aid society, and alleges that on Feb. 10, 1925, McCabe borrowed $35 from the Superior Finance Co., assigning his wages as security, and has since paid $66.50 interest on the loan and still owes the original $35.

Wife, Three Children

McCabe has a wife and three children, the petition stated, and because of sickness has been unable to repay the $35 loan to the finance company. Should the loan company file his wage assignment to collect the debt, according to the petition, he would be subject to discharge. Judge Pearson temporarily restrained the company from taking this action.

Clarke charges the Superior Finance Co. is one of a ring of wage-buying combines which prey mostly upon railroad workers and others who would lose their jobs if their companies learned they had signed wage assignments.

"These wage-buying companies prey on workers who, because of sickness or other causes, are in bad financial condition," said Clarke. "They make a loan, forcing the victim to assign his wages as security. Knowing he will lose his job if the assignment is ever presented to his company, they hold it over his head to make the victim pay extortionate interest."

Allows Them to Operate

These companies are enabled to operate, said Clarke, because the supreme court of Ohio has ruled it is legal to purchase wages.

"But we expect to show the court they don't buy wages," said Clarke. "All they do is collect interest, and interest can't be classed as wages. If the court upholds our contention these companies will be forced out of business or under supervision of the state securities commission, and that body is not allowed to issue a permit to a company charging more than 36 per cent interest."

A similar injunction to the one granted today was placed upon the Central Finance Co. two weeks ago by Judge Pearson at the instigation of the Legal Aid society. This case involved Daniel Steiger, a fireman on the Big Four. So far the Central Finance Co. hasn't contested the action.

The state securities commission, the Better Business Commission of Cleveland, Brotherhood of Trainmen, Law Director Carl Shuler and railroad attorneys are assisting the Legal Aid society in fighting these cases.—Cleveland Press.

LOAN COMPANIES EFFECT MERGER

Two Illinois Concerns Combine With One Here—Total Capital, $1,500,000

Merger of three industrial loan companies into a large corporation, with headquarters at Indianapolis, representing a capitalization of $1,500,000, was announced yesterday by John H. Aufderheide, president of the Commonwealth Loan Company. The companies involved in the merger are the Indiana Collateral Loan Company of Indianapolis; the Peoria Loan Company, Peoria, Ill., and the Tri-Cities Loan Company, Quincy, Ill. The companies were merged into the Metro Loan Company, Inc., and its headquarters will be in the Guaranty building.

Mr. Aufderheide announced also that the merged company within the next few days will open a branch office at Chicago, and later other branch offices, serving smaller cities in Indiana and Illinois, will be opened.

Mr. Aufderheide is the president of the Metro Loan Company, R. C. Aufderheide and T. M. Kaufman are vice presidents, G. C. Grinsteiner, secretary-treasurer, M. B. Merrit, assistant treasurer, and D. R. Reynolds, auditor. The new loan corporation has an authorized issue of $500,000 common stock, of which $375,000 has been issued and paid for and an issue of $1,000,000 preferred stock.

$375,000 To Be Sold

The company has issued $375,000 preferred stock, which will be offered to investors within a few days. The three companies prior to the merger had been operated separately as collateral loan companies and each has a large business.

Mr. Aufderheide is a pioneer in the collateral and industrial loan business in Indiana, and has been at the head of a chain of loan companies scattered throughout Ohio, Indiana and Illinois for many years. He began business forty years ago—a business that has been operated continuously.

In announcing plans to operate a large loan company in Chicago, through the newly formed Metro company, Mr. Aufderheide declared he expected the Chicago office, in a short time, to prove the most important link in a strong chain of offices to be operated by the company.

The Commonwealth Loan Company is also an Aufderheide concern, and has large offices throughout the state, and in certain cities of Ohio.

Offering of Preferred

The offering of preferred stock in the new company will be made through the offices of the company, both at Indianapolis and throughout the state. The stock is an 8 per cent cumulative preferred issue, with shares of $100 par value.

Estimated earnings of the company for 1926 are $60,000—more than double the amount necessary to pay annual preferred stock dividends. The stock is callable at par and accrued dividends, after five years and matures September, 1941.

About four years ago Mr. Aufderheide, through the Commonwealth Loan Company, floated an issue of $1,000,000 preferred stock, distribution of which was made almost wholly through the offices of that company. Proceeds of the new offering of the Metro Loan Company are to be used in opening new offices and in developing business already founded.—Indianapolis Star, March 23, 1926.

LOAN SHARKS TAKE $1,000,000 ANNUAL USURY, BOYD SAYS

Declaring that approximately $1,000,000 is taken from the pockets of Atlanta's poorer people each year through "moral usury," J. L. Boyd, executive secretary of the Atlanta Legal Aid society, on Friday addressed the Civitan club at its meeting in the Ansley hotel on the subject of small money-lending conditions in Atlanta.

Defining "moral usury" as "the exaction of a greater rate of interest than the law allows for the advance of money by a lender to a person in desperate need of a loan for consumptive purposes," Mr. Boyd said the small loans and investments committee of the society coöperates in every way with persons operating under the Georgia law that allows an interest rate of 3½ per cent per month on loans of less than $300. He said the society had found this rate of interest to be reasonable and sufficient.

Mr. Boyd said that the "unregulated activities" of salary assignment agencies that charge interest rates of 20 per cent per month and over, is "giving Atlanta the reputation of being a center of loan sharkery," adding in this connection that "no business that takes over a million dollars per year out of the pockets of the poor should be tolerated.

—Atlanta Journal, Mar. 19, 1926.

The Legal Aid Society has demanded that all the loan sharks comply with all the laws of Atlanta applying to the business. The complaint of the legal society is that some of the operators fail to obtain license, to post the $500 bond required by city ordinance, to disclose the identity of ownership of such business, to keep books for public inspection or to issue a statement as to the time, amount and period involved in the transaction.

Why is it necessary for the Legal Aid Society to do a work that is plainly the duty of some one in the employ of the city to perform, one is at a loss to understand. Surely some officers are empowered to do this work, and should perform.

INVESTIGATE ACTIVITIES OF SMALL LOAN FIRMS

City Solicitor Horton Is Conducting the Investigation

With the View of Bringing Charges

Companies Are Alleged to Have Charged High Interest

Test Case Is Cited

Davis Case Went to Supreme Court

City Solicitor Phin. Horton yesterday began an investigation of small loan companies with a view of indicting several operators on criminal charges of violating the State usury law, as a result of the sensational disclosures made Friday night before the Board of Aldermen. He expects to interview scores of witnesses who have been forced to pay between 300 and 384 per cent interest and who have been threatened and intimidated, by money lenders who use a bill of sale which, it is alleged, is strictly prohibited by a State statute tested in the Supreme Court of North Carolina in a case that went up from Forsyth County when J. J. Davis was convicted and fined $50 and cost for charging "usurious interest."

Davis was accused of charging only $1.75 per month interest on $10, holding under mortgage kitchen and household furniture, while local loan companies are accused of charging between $2.80 and $3.20 interest per month on $10. The statute specifies "mortgages, bills of sale, or any other paper on kitchen or household furniture where interest greater than six per cent is charged."

Make Efforts to Collect

Indications were yesterday that the small loan companies of the city are making every effort to collect their principals before city and State authorities can take action against them. Several of the colored people who have complained, declared that loan officers have called upon them and demand that they pay immediately. Threats such as these have been sent through the mails, "You better come here and settle your bill before the sheriff settles it for you." These are some of the things postal authorities are investigating, it was stated, with the intention of bringing indictments on charges to use the mails to defraud. Such investigation is viewed with keen apprehension by local lenders accused of charging usurious interest, in view of the long penitentiary sentence imposed on Dr. Frederick A. Cook, who was convicted of using the mails to defraud, and in view of the indictments brought against Charles Ponzi, famous money wizards, who has completed a long term in prison.

Operators in Winston-Salem have grown bolder and bolder, investigators have told the city authorities. While at first they sent out their notices by hand, they finally grew so bold that they would send their demands by registered and special mail; and authorities have these receipts and threatening letters.

Mayor Commended

Mayor Thomas Barber was congratulated yesterday by several citizens on the vigorous action contemplated by the Board of Aldermen. Support from manufacturers on whose employees the loan "sharks" are accused of preying and impoverishing, was unofficially promised from several quarters in an effort to wipe out the condition forever.

Investigators, headed by Mangum Turner, charge that the small lenders operating with bills of sale never have proceeded legally. They state that the lenders have executed judgments of bill of sale and confiscated the property without offering it for sale at public auction, according to law.

Several lawyers interviewed yesterday stated, "This class of operation is a plain violation of the criminal statute."

One who has had no connection in the investigation explained it thus: "Suppose you want to go into the other room, and instead of going direct through the door you go through the other office and enter through another door. What difference does it make? It doesn't make any in law, except that it is worse when you get in court if you have gone around-about instead of direct."

Draughan Explains

H. G. Draughan, whose suit against Charles Williams, colored, was tried Friday and who was given a judgment, declared last night that the receipt Williams has is a forgery. He charged that the receipt was raised from $2.80 to $12.80; and that Williams has never paid the original $10. A $50 reward is offered for the recovery of this receipt, and is in the hands of the police, said Mr. Draughan.

Mr. Draughan testified in court that he had bought Williams' paper and numerous other papers from W. A. Handley.

Sadie Holmes, colored Dunleith Avenue grocer, has shown newspapermen numerous receipts that she has a loan of $100 for which W. A. Handley held a bill of sale on her household and kitchen furniture; and these receipts show that she has paid $20 per month. However, these receipts call this $20 "rent" and not interest.

Byrd Makes Statement

Magistrate W. F. Byrd stated yesterday in defense of his position, that out of the thirteen cases of the character of the Draughan case Friday that he has tried, only two of the defendants have appeared at the trial; and that judgment was rendered in these two cases when the defendants admitted they had borrowed the money.

"If the defendants do not appear for trial," Mr. Byrd declared, "I render judgment according to law. In the other cases there was no reason why I should have gone behind the warrant unless something developed at the trials. There has never been a complaint made by the defendant as to the high rate of interest; and I have no way of knowing what amount of the judgment asked for is principal or interest. I strongly suspect, however, that that sort of thing has been going on, and nobody will be more pleased to see the whole affair cleaned up than I."

Mr. Byrd stated that he has kept careful records, and that these records are open for investigation.

Supreme Court Upholds Law

The statute on which J. J. Davis was convicted, introduced in the legislature by the late J. C. Buxton of this city and upheld in the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and the argument of Governor

Bickett, then attorney general, which Justice Hoke quoted in rendering his decision, follows:

"Section 4509 of consolidated statutes of North Carolina provides as follows:

Usurious Loans on Household and Kitchen Furniture

"Any person, firm or corporation who shall lend money in any manner whatsoever by note, chattel mortgage, conditional sale or otherwise, upon any article of household or kitchen furniture, and shall take, receive, reserve or charge a greater rate of interest than six per cent, either before or after the interest may accrue or who shall refuse to give receipts for payment on interest or principle of such loan, or shall fail and refuse to surrender the note and security when the same is paid off or a new note and mortgage is given in renewal, unless such new mortgage shall state the amount still due by the old note or mortgage and that the new one is given as additional security, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in addition thereto shall forfeit double the interest which has been heretofore paid."

Bickett's Plea

In a decision upholding the validity of this act, Justice Hoke, writing the opinion of the Supreme Court, quotes the remarks of Governor Bickett who was then attorney general, and who appeared on behalf of the State in which he said, "The law making power of this State has always realized that the loss of those articles necessary for comfortable and decent living entails great suffering upon women and children, frequently resulting in the breaking up of a home, and in the creation of conditions which are a menace to the public health and to the public prosperity.

"The statute under consideration is a logical and lawful extension of the protection which it has always been the policy of the law to afford this peculiar class of property. The General Assembly knew that the man who mortgages his household goods does so because he has nothing else to mortgage. He is the poor man, the illiterate man, and his poverty and his ignorance make him the easy prey of the usurers.

Class of Usurers

"The General Assembly also knew that in some of the cities of the State there were springing up a class of men who were selling money, like furniture on the installment plan. It was to save the things necessary to the existence of the home from the grasp of such men that the Act of 1907 was passed.

"We submit that the statute tends to preserve the domestic peace, to promote the family health and prosperity, and is a valid exercise of the police power of the State.

"It is not class legislation; it operates alike on those who take mortgages on household and kitchen furniture. It regulates a business and does not create a class."

This act was introduced by J. C. Buxton, of Winston-Salem, who was in the State Senate. This particular case went up from Winston-Salem and was tried in 1911.

Cases from all over United States and from the Supreme Court of the United States were cited in upholding the validity of this law.—Winston-Salem Journal, March 14, 1926.

FOURTEEN INDICTED ON CHARGE OF USURY

The second step in what is termed a war to force alleged loan sharks and salary assignment purchasers to comply in every detail with city, county and state law, was taken Wednesday when the Fulton county grand jury, in special session, returned 10 indictments charging a misdemeanor against 14 persons.

The movement is being sponsored by the Atlanta Legal Aid Society, under direction of J. L. R. Boyd. A special committee on small loans and investments of the aid society appeared before the grand jury and laid before that body a survey of such operations in Atlanta. The committee is composed of Wharton Wilson, Jerome Jones, Jr., Herman Hyman, John Tye, Jr., and William Matthews. In addition to the committee a number of alleged "victims" testified.

The first gun in the war was fired Wednesday afternoon, March 10th, at a meeting of the tax committee of city council, when a group of the victims appeared before that body and presented a petition seeking redress by having the committee take such action as "is necessary to enforce laws governing such business."

Among complaints filed were claims that "some of the operators failed to obtain licenses, to post $500 bond required by city ordinance, to disclose identity or ownership of such business, to keep books for public inspection or to issue a statement as to the time, amount and period involved in the transaction."

The indictments returned by the body charged that the agencies charged more than the legal rate of interest.

The following were indicted: W. M. Braswell, of the Georgia Investment company, East Hunter street, two bills; P. G. Barnes, of the Bristol Finance company, on West Alabama street, two bills; L. R. Cox, of the Inman Yards Investment company; W. B. and L. F. Lawrence, of the Walton Discount company, on Peachtree street; C. V. Hopkins, of the Hopkins Investment company, on West Hunter street; A. P. Liddell and W. G. Cooper, of the Phoenix Investment company, in the Anstell building; Walter A. Malone, of the Georgia Investment company, on East Hunter street; C. G. Mathis, of the King Investment company, on West Mitchell street, and a joint bill against G. H. Rosenbush and M. R. Markham, of the Atlanta Finance company, in the Palmer building.—Atlanta Constitution, March 18, 1926.

WHO PAYS THE COST OF CREDIT FRAUDS?

By Marshall D. Beuick, B.Lit., M.S.

Department of Public Relations, National Association of Credit Men

The question often arises as to who pays the cost of commercial frauds that result from concealment of assets, fake bankruptcies and bankrupt fires. It is a question that cannot be answered in a few words. However, in general it can be said that the manufacturer and wholesaler pay the cost of frauds out of their profits.

As the losses through commercial frauds are not evenly distributed throughout business, they do not represent a fixed charge like a tax or overhead expense that can be passed on to the consumer. Fraud losses vary greatly between business concerns so that where business is operating on a strictly competitive basis the loser cannot attempt to pass the loss on to the consumer in the price of his goods which would then be higher than the prices quoted by his competitors.

There are some exceptions to this general rule, however. In businesses that operate in such a manner that they can charge a monopoly price, which may be what the traffic will bear or a low price which in the long run creates a larger profit than a high price, the fraud loss, in most instances, can be passed on to the consumer by an increase in price. This would be true in businesses which control patents or produce a highly specialized line of goods that are not made of equal quality by any other concern.

It is also possible to pass fraud costs along to the consumer in those businesses which are limited to a few fields and not highly competitive. There are, for instance, concerns manufacturing a line of goods for which there is limited demand and which vary in quality or style among the few manufacturers in this particular field. It is often the case that in this kind of business the prices vary considerably and these prices do not influence each other to any appreciable degree. This would be another instance where the losses of commercial fraud could be distributed through the sale of merchandise to the consumer.

Another type of business which would be comparable with the foregoing instance would be those concerns which operate on a highly productive or efficient basis, and which, therefore, could increase the price of their products by small amounts to pay for fraud losses without endangering sales. Other concerns in the same line as these highly productive plants, however, could not do this for their prices would already be higher and the addition of a few cents to the wholesale price would endanger their amount of sales.

Even where credit insurance may be resorted to, the cost cannot be entirely escaped, for the losses that would result to policyholders would be paid by all the insured; and the premiums that would pay the losses would as indicated before, come from the merchants' profits.

One can get an idea of another cost that is attached to fraud by learning that in seven years the Credit Protection Department of the National Association of Credit Men spent nearly a half million dollars in investigating credit books and bringing evidence before Federal and district attorneys. Besides this, some of the 140 local associations that are affiliated with the National Association spent considerable sums in similar independent work.

Six cases handled by the Association that were chosen at random indicate that the fraud cost of investigation averages about $600 for each case. We must bear in mind also that creditors' committees under their own initiative conduct similar work from time to time which runs into large sums of money. The Board of Trade of San Francisco has done this sort of work from time to time and has in fact set aside a sum of money for prosecutions in San Francisco and its environs. These costs which I have just recounted roughly all come out of the profits of business and they are spent, of course, in the hope that assets may be recovered to reduce the loss to business.

There are also adjustments in bankruptcies which are costly and sometimes occur in fraudulent failures. In legitimate failures these are a necessary burden on business, it appears from experience, but these adjustments and compromise settlements, it is regrettable to say, are made often with business burglars or dishonest bandrupts.

The retailer is also a loser through unfair competition that is created by bankruptcy sales, and in the unscientific distribution of distress merchandise, not to overlook stolen goods, that often result from fraudulent bankruptcies.

Since it is quite likely that the large majority of business concerns must meet the cost of depredations by the business burglar out of their own profits, it is highly necessary that the business man exert all possible effort in reducing commercial fraud. One of the first steps in this direction is the organization of a properly functioning credit department under the management of a skilled credit executive who shall not be a mere mechanic in his credit operations. He must be a man with broad vision and an economic theorist as well as a practical business man, and a person with investigative ability.

Of further importance is the contact with an organization that can provide current information about debtors, such as is provided by the Credit Interchange Bureaus of the National Association of Credit Men.

Finally, the credit man should know the necessary steps to be taken when his concern is defrauded and be in a position to assist organizations that investigate commercial frauds, to assist the concern's attorney and quite often a district or Federal attorney.

Contrary to the belief of some business men that the cost of commercial fraud bears upon the consumer and is, therefore, often recognized as a cost of doing business, this tribute that is paid to the business burglar usually comes out of the business man's profits.

As long as business men believe that the tribute is passed on to the consumer they will be lax in their credit methods, and will not be as greatly concerned as they should be about the reduction of commercial fraud.

TRAINING THE OUTSIDE MAN

By H. M. Curry

This is a subject upon which much has already been written and said, and probably much more will be written in the future. Some of the remarks I make will probably sound like stolen thunder, but I assure you that is not the case. The difference is that the other fellows said it before I had the opportunity.

It is a deep subject and a long one; one that cannot be governed by any hard and fast rules, but only by the application of some common sense, plus a little pychology, mixed in with the observance of the Golden Rule. The dose is to be taken and repeated daily, as long as you have an outside man.

My theory is that once you hire a man, you do it with the thought and expectation that he will stay with you and develop into a real assistant, and eventually work his way up through the ranks.

Granting that you have such a man engaged, the first thing to do is take him into your office, explain the business fully to him including the law under which you are operating, and let him know just what you expect of him. Let him feel that you are interested in him and will endeavor to help him all you can. Awaken in him a desire to set the world on fire, so to speak.

I remember one instance of a man who was sent to me after only two weeks service. I started out along these lines and he remembered my little speech so well that he could not only repeat it almost verbatim after a few years, but he worked hard and profited by it, until at the present time he is either an assistant supervisor or supervisor for one of the large chain systems, while I by the way am still a manager.

After you have shown him what his opportunities are, do not do with him as the manager who hired me did. He was not quite sure whether I would ever make a loan man or not and he did not want to take up the time of any of his regular outside men to train me. He gave me a bunch of skips and said, "Go out and see what you can do with them." He gave me no further information, but out I went in the pouring rain. How well I remember it even if it was eighteen years ago. To make a long story short, he followed this procedure for three days, but fortunately for me, the rain didn't. By this time I had found eight of the skips. I suppose if I hadn't located any he would have discharged me then and there. However, he apparently decided I was almost worth sending out with an experienced man, which he did for two days.

Go out with your man yourself and show him that it can be done and how. I think every manager should go out with a new man first, rather than even the best outside man you might have. If you do this, you know he is being started according to your own ideas. Of course, if you have no other outside man, you naturally would have to go with him. Even where there are other men, go with him at various intervals and he will see that you are taking an interest in him, and will usually put forth a little extra effort to show you that your confidence has not been misplaced.

Tell him, and keep on telling him, to ask questions, for about the only way he will ever find out anything is by asking.

After you see that he is coming along satisfactorily, show him some of the office routine; let him wait on some of the customers at the window and gradually let him learn the entire system.

Pat him on the back frequently; use him, but do not abuse him. He is human and oftentimes very sensitive.

One big fault to guard against is faking cards. For instance; he has been out on a card frequently without producing any result. This might make him feel, particularly if he has had a hard day, there's no use going to see Mrs. Jones to-day; I'll just mark the card "out." Of course, if I suspected he made a practice of doing it, I would verify it by checking him up personally. After I was sure of my ground, I would confront him with the facts. If he denied it, I would discharge him on the spot. If he admitted it, seemed sincere in his regrets and was otherwise a good man, I would be inclined to give him another chance, after I had reminded him of the confidence and trust I put in him and how he hurt himself, as well as me, by not playing the game square. If I gave him another chance, I would check him up very closely after an interval—he would not do any faking for a while anyhow, thinking he might be watched. Usually one lesson of this kind will cure him. If it does, you have saved for your company one who probably will turn out to be a good manager, whereas, if the first impulse had been acted upon, he would have been lost and all your time, efforts and expense wasted.

Always remember to err is human. I am not upholding anyone in being dishonest to either his employer, himself or anybody, but I always cling to one of Lincoln's remarks—"A man who never makes a mistake never makes anything."

I do not believe in restricting or hampering a man with a string of don'ts, but rather impress on him mostly dos. If he is the type you are seeking, he will go out and do. Your reward will be the satisfaction of knowing you helped another man on to promotion and advancement.

HANDLING ACCOUNTS DURING AN EMERGENCY

By William V. Cawley,

Community Finance Service, Inc.

In every line of business, as you all know, there is experienced certain periods of depression, in which various enterprises usually experience a downward trend in business; the causes for this are varied. Recently, northeastern Pennsylvania has been experiencing a chaos laid directly to a dispute of great magnitude between organized labor and capital. This condition has played havoc with economic and living conditions to those who are either directly or indirectly concerned therein. When these emergencies arise, different methods must be employed in regulating business and the Merchant, Banker, and Small Loan Man must protect his interests, and at the same time, keep the good will of his customers.

Naturally, we take the deepest interest in the business in which we are engaged. Therefore, the "Small Loan Office" is obliged to handle accounts in a different manner to that of normal times. The recent "Coal Mine Suspension" happened to be the cause of this Universal Depression.

Those engaged in the Coal Mining Industry, recently, had no income except those who were engaged in maintenance work around the collieries, such as engineers, pump-runners, and fan-runners. Sixty per cent of our service is extended to "mine workers," who prior to the strike were our best payers and these worthy clients should be carried through this emergency with courtesy and extended the greatest possible leniency.

The recent "Mine Suspension" had reached a point where not only the miners were affected, but everyone in the Anthracite Regions was indirectly effected.

The chronic "slow-pay accounts" then had an alibi, of which a great many took advantage. It is generally this type of customer who will resort to this way of "stalling" on their account that had other members of the family working. The husband may have been on strike, but the son may have been working in a factory, or some other place of employment, which the strike did not affect. The daughter may have been employed in a store, office, or mill. In such a case, there is absolutely no reason why this particular account should fall delinquent.

Persons whose livelihood depends entirely upon the mining industry must be given due consideration. "Interest" payments were insisted upon where the case warranted and the "principal" balance carried until such time as the borrower's circumstances enabled him to adjust his account.

Oftimes, we find it necessary to renew numerous accounts for the balance whose payments have fallen two or three months in arrears. This cancells a "delinqent" account, and in its place, creates a new one, which invariably puts both borrower and lender more or less at ease "mentally"; putting new life into the account and showing the borrower that we have faith in him and that we are willing to go along with him to help him share his burden in consideration of the business he has entrusted us with.

When "industrial strifes" are active, applications for financial aid are numerous. It is here the loan man must use rare judgment in extending credit, which can only be done with the coöperation of his "appraiser." More thorough investigations must be given to applications, and all details as to income, if any, expenses, etc., must be fully covered.

If the "applicant" is not working, and has no other source of income, this may turn out a "poor risk." Where the "applicant" has other staple sources of income and sufficient credit rating, it would most always prove a safe risk.

Since this "emergency" has arisen, persons who have been in dire need have been benefited by our "Helpful Financial Service." This class of borrowers are those of good character, and will, through their appreciation of our service extended them in their darkest moments take care of their obligation in a satisfactory manner when their circumstances improve. This has been proven at the time of the previous mine suspension, which was in 1922.

Although the Small Loan Business in northeastern Pennsylvania has undergone several changes since September 1st 1925, the date of "Suspension of Coal Mining," we are maintaining our business to the best interest of all concerned when handling accounts during an emergency.

ROSTER OF LICENSEES

The Indiana Industrial Lenders Association has compiled and is offering for sale at $1.00 per copy, a roster of licensees, purporting to be a complete list of small loan companies in the United States.

The book says: "This is a complete list of licensees in regulated states so far as it is possible to obtain them and contains the names and addresses of 1687 companies in 411 cities and 33 states."

Distinguishing marks indicate whether the name listed is a member of the American, State, or both organizations.

The Preface states:

"Realizing the value in each office of a list of small loan licensees which has been impracticable for any one individual to compile because of the expense, Mr. D. R. Reynolds, of the Commonwealth Loan Co., Indianapolis, suggested this idea and the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association adopted it and authorized the publication, making it available to all licensees in the United States at a nominal cost of $1.00 per copy, which is about the cost of publication and distribution.

"The value of this book cannot be estimated, because delay in sending accounts to other offices has been necessary heretofore and invariably, it was necessary to write the State Secretary for the name and address of some company located in the desired city. This list will solve this problem for you.

"By referring to the number opposite each name, you can readily ascertain if they are members of the State Association, American Association, or both.

"We do not assume responsibility for the correctness of this list, as the names were furnished by the various State Secretaries and supervising officials. The constant changing of names, and addresses would prevent any list from being absolutely correct. However, we believe this one is as nearly correct as is possible.

"We apologize for any errors you may find and for the omission of the name of any licensee not contained in the list.

"We are sure you would readily accept the apology if you knew the problems we encountered in compiling the present list.

"In order to render the service for which this list has been compiled, we recommend its revision at least every other year."

The book can be put to many useful purposes and is certainly worth all that is asked for it.

Copies of the book may be had for $1.00 by writing the Secretary of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, 347 Bankers Trust Bldg., Indianapolis, Indiana.

SHARK GETS $1,008 IN INTEREST ON $120 LOAN

When the county grand jury in the near future begins its fishing expedition against loan sharks it will have plenty of bait.

Complaints from scores of victims of the new "salary purchasing" plan, which nets the "brokers" as much as 70 per cent a month and sends the borrowers to the United Charities for the necessities of life, yesterday poured into the state's attorney's office and the officers of the charity organization, which started the campaign.

One of the victims, a railroad man, told the prosecutor's office he had paid $1,008 in interest on a $120 loan, which he renewed from pay day to pay day over a period of four years.

The loan he said was distributed among among three companies. Officials say they have information leading them to believe fifteen such concerns in Chicago are owned by the same interests, together with many in other cities in the United States.

One victim turned over to the prosecutors the following form of contract, which all borrowers are required to sign:

"Bill of sale for earned salary or wage account for $——.

"For value received in lawful money of the United States of America to me in hand paid by the Central Finance Company, 160 N. Wells St., receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I do hereby grant, bargain, sell and assign to the Central Finance Company my account, salary or wages earned by me during the period of —— ——."

For instance, a man earning $25 a week might sign such a contract in exchange for $22.50.

The contemplated prosecutions will be under the state usury law, which fixes 3½ per cent a month as the legal limit. —Chicago Examiner, April 9.
